BRITISH UNION LEADER LOSES FAITH IN STRIKES

Advocates Ballot Box as Workers' Most Important Weapon in Battles With Capital

BY DAVIS EDWARDS

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, July 22.—Is the strike losing its power as a weapon of labor? The positive statement is made here by Harry Gosling, one of the most important trades-union leaders in Great Britain, that exactly this has come to pass.

The resultant sensation among trades unionists is considerable.

Mr. Gosling and Mr. J. R. Clynes, M. P., the latter of whom has been one of the great figures in England since his mighty services during the war and unquestionably is the world's most celebrated representative of labor in any legislative body, both look for a complete alteration in the general scheme of labor's attack on capital within immediately approaching years.

BALLOT-BOX ALTERNATIVE

Mr. Gosling, having lost his faith in strikes as the weapon by means of which labor may obtain economic justice, says that there is but one alternative and that is the ballot-box.

"An analysis of the industrial position since the Armistice," he declared to me this morning, "will prove that none of the strikes which have taken place has borne useful or tangible results for the working classes."

Perhaps this is the most astonishing statement which has been made by an acknowledged and faithful British labor leader during a decade.

It is a continuation of the thought which he expressed at the opening of the annual conference of the National Transport Workers Federation which occurred last week at Cardiff.

"We have had to recommend the acceptance of various wage reductions," was his contention then. "These recommendations of your leaders have been made because we have been fully convinced that present-day conditions make it impossible for us to win through strike action.

"There are, I admit candidly, many leaders and rank and file

President Seeks Some Remedy

Rail Board Chief, Senators Called to White House for Long Sessions

Employees' Seniority Rights Held Greatest Stumbling Block at Present

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, July 22.—President Harding spent eight hours today in close study of the railroad strike situation, but when his activities were concluded there was not the slightest intimation concerning conclusions reached or possible course of administration action.

Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the Railroad Labor Board, was the President's chief informant, but a part of the time Senators Cummins, Iowa; Watson of Indiana and Kellogg of Minnesota, all Republican members of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, were closeted with the President and Mr. Hooper. Later, also, Senators Underwood and Pomerene, Democratic members of the same committee, saw the President. For these conferences all the usual White House engagements were set aside.

Mr. Hooper left the sessions after lunching with the President and tonight returned to Chicago. He gave the President a full account of every move that had been made by the Labor Board since the shop craftsmen walked out the 1st inst. and, further, a view of the positions taken by the strike leaders and by the executives of the railroads, with whom the board has dealt. This was supplemented by the three Republican Senators, who themselves went over issues in the controversy with heads of eastern railroads in a meeting in Washington this week.

SENIORITY RIGHTS ISSUE

There was no discussion concerning the enactment of legislation. Senatorial participants insisted, and President Harding was represented as believing that a new law would be unnecessary and unhelpful for the moment. The question of seniority rights was again held to be the chief stumbling block to the return of the men now out, railroad executives largely insisting that strikers had lost their relative service positions in employment by striking, and the leaders that employees taken on in their places should be dismissed.

Suggestions that the President intended to take action in the rail strike without reference to the Labor Board were made after the session, but aparently without official sanction. There also were inferences that Chairman Hooper might be carrying back to Chicago some new suggestions on which tentative negotiations in an endeavor to get the strike called off, might be resumed. Participants, however, were unwilling to discuss any phase of possibilities that the White House discussions revealed.

"I do not view the railway situation with as much pessimism as some," Senator Pomerene said, after his visit to the White House, "but I believe the less said the better right now."

The Transportation Act, under which the Railroad Labor Board is created, the power which it places in the government and limitations, were also discussed at the conferences."

"BIG FOUR" HEARD FROM

Complaints that engines and cars, because of the shopmen's strike, were getting in poor condition and possibly in a condition dangerous for the trainmen to operate, were presented to Senator Cummins today by a committee of legislative agents representing the "big four" brotherhoods. The committee also presented a written petition, reinforced by oral arguments, in a conference with Senator Cummins lasting nearly three hours, urging repeal of all labor provisions in the Transportation

SWEET BOY HAS LOVE

Says Mama, too, Likes Jack

Marilynn Miller is Ready for Old-Fashioned Wedding, She Declares

Will Return to "Sally" in September, Star Tells Chicago Papers

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 22.—Marilynn Miller, whose coming marriage to Jack Pickford has developed the debating and epistolary powers of Flo Ziegfeld, "Ma" Pick, "Ma" Miller, Billie Burke, not to speak of transcontinental telegraph operators, spent ten hours today in Chicago. Nine-tenths of that time was consumed in trying to find synonyms for "such a sweet boy," which is Marilynn's description of the man she is to marry August 1 at the home of Doug and Mary in Los Angeles.

"Ma" Miller was there. So were Marilynn's two sisters, Mrs. J. S. Sweeney, in whose home the reunion was celebrated, and Miss Claire Miller, who had made the trip here from New York with the musical-comedy star.

Miss Miller stepped off the Tentieth Century this morning exclaiming that Jack was just the sweetest boy and that "Mother likes him so much." Miss Miller, ten hours nearer orange blossoms and the "obey" amendment, stepped on to the Santa Fe tonight exclaiming that Jack was still the "swetest boy" and "Mother was there, herself, to give a testimonial of her affection for Jack."

For Mrs. Carol Miller and Miss Claire Miller are to accompany the bride-elect to California and will be among the small group who are to witness the ceremony.

An Episcopalian wedding service, Miss Miller was reminded, clings, in an old-fashioned way, to the "love, honor and obey" triology of wifely vows. But the new-fashioned girl, in the ultra-modish brown silk twill frock, in the latest things in brown traveling hats, and the latest Parisian word in brown suede pumps and champagne-colored hose, pines for an old-fashioned marriage service, she declared. But she admits the possibility of crossing her fingers, or was it her No. 1 slippers, during the "obey" mandate.

Much of Miss Miller's interview this afternoon at her sister's apartment was negative.

"I am not going to do a Mary Landon Baker. Nothing in the world has been able to stop my wedding; nothing will be able to stop it.

"I am not going to discuss Flo Ziegfeld nor his wife, Billie Burke, although ——." The rest of this sentence was not decidedly negative.

"I am not going to get out of the cast of 'Sally,' but will surely be back there September 1."

Furthermore, Miss Miller did not carry a dog; her pet poodle is in California and will join his greetings with those of Jack when the train pulls in.

BILLIE MAY LEAVE FLO

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

YORK HARBOR (Me) July 22. Billie Burke has cabled ninty-nine reproachful words to Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., and those ninety-nine words maw portend separation of the famous couple.

Be that as it may, across the ocean she has flashed an ultimatum as aftermath of the Ziegfeld-Marilynn Miller row. Flo, in Paris, is frantic.

Back he cabled his adoration and a protestation of his innocence. Beseeching her to believe in him, he announces that he's sailing on the next boat. Today his wife received the following cable:

NEARLY INSANE

"Billie, darling, I am nearly insane. For God's sake cable me what it is all about. I am not

RAIL PEACE STILL DISTANT

Unionist Head Declares Workers Will Fight Roads to Last Ditch; Three Issues Prevent Settlement

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, July 22.—Three principal issues now prevent a possible settlement of the railway shopmen's strike, B. M. Jewell, head of the railway employees' department of the American Federation of Labor, said in a statement tonight. These issues, he said, are found in the refusal of the rail executives to (1) discontinue contracting work; (2) to establish a national board of adjustment; (3) to continue seniority rights of employees who suspended work.

"The responsibility for increasing losses to the railroads, to the communities they serve and to the wage earners upon the railroads and elsewhere through continuance of the present suspension of work," the statement said, "rests now plainly upon the Association of Railway Executives, and particuarly upon that small but dominating group representing the New York banking interests."

Pointing out that the Railroad Labor Board has decided against the practice of contracting railroad work in certain cases, Mr. Jewell asserted that the Erie Railroad, the New York Central and its subsidiaries, including the Indiana Harbor Belt Line, the Michigan Central and the Big Four and the Western Maryland Road have all contracted out shop work.

REDUCED WAGES AIM

"Many other roads," the statement said, "have followed the same practice and always with the purpose and result of reducing wages, evading decisions of the Labor Board, degrading working conditions and attacking the employees' organizations."

Asserting that the Erie, New York Central and Western Maryland as well as other roads have announced their determination to fight decision in this matter to the highest court, Mr. Jewell said the board's decision against the practice would be set at naught for years by some roads, and if courts continue to decide that the board's powers are only advisory "eventually all roads will be able to adopt the contracting out method of evading the Transportation Act, wherever it is to their advantage."

The contract issue is the only one of the three issues on which a strike vote was taken, which Mr Jewell's statement today said held up a possible settlement. The other two strike issues were wages and working rules, it having been virtually agreed at conferences that these matters could be submitted

OVATIONS FOLLOW MOORE

Senatorial Candidate Visits City Officials; Plans Made for Continued Southland Campaigning

Visits to the police and fire department headquarters in this city and to various industrial plants, where he met and talked to hundreds of employees, filled the time yesterday for Charles C. Moore, candidate for the Republican nomination for United States Senator.

Friends of the candidate took him in hand early in the morning, and when he was finally able to break away from the throngs that congregated at his hotel to congratulate him on the tremendous ovation he received at the Trinity Auditorium meeting on Friday night, when a greater audience than the auditorium could hold stormed the place to hear him shatter Hiram Johnson's record, he was taken first to the office of Chief Oaks.

The visit there was made particularly pleasant for Mr. Moore by a meeting with Capt. Moffitt, early friend and associate of the late L. M. Breed, father of Mrs. Moore. Half an hour's chat, filled with reminiscences of early Los Angeles days followed, while the number waiting to shake hands with the candidate became a crowd.

RECALLS EARLY DAYS

Capt. Moffitt's recollections of his thirty years' residence in Los Angeles brought out many incidents in the life and activities of Mr. Breed, who was prominent in real estate and banking, and who served as a member of the City Council and was president of that body for a term.

As Mr. Moore passed along the crowded city thoroughfares on his way from his hotel to the offices of the fire and police chiefs, he was stopped many times by men and women unknown to him, who had attended the Trinity Auditorium meeting the night before and, recognizing him as the Senatorial candidate whom they had seen on the platform, wanted to shake his hand and offer their congratulations and tender their assistance in his campaign.

Late yesterday afternoon Mr. Moore visited for the second time the headquarters of the Moore-for-Senator Club of Southern California and was given an ovation there by the large number of voluntary workers, both men and women. He

CAUSE OF DEATH IS DISPUTED

American Physicians Who Treated Caruso Defended by Prince Arthur

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ROME, July 22.—Now, very nearly a year after Enrico Caruso's death the discussion about the responsibility of the American physicians in the famous tenor's last illness is renewed in Rome and in the Neapolitan newspapers. Prince Arthur Lancillotti, who was a personal friend of Caruso, takes up the cudgel for the American doctors. Prince Arthur is also a friend of Dr. Stella, who treated Caruso in New York and who has been attacked, as to his professional skill, by Prof. Chiarolanza of Naples. Prince Arthur Lancillotti says in an interview:

"Caruso's confidential physician, a Russian, failed to understand his patient's true condition and continued to treat him for rheumatism. Dr. Stella and other American physicians have been accused, unjustly, of carelessness in treating Caruso. The fact is that in America, Caruso was treated with every care, and all the resources of modern medical science were employed.

"If the Russian doctor was mistaken in his diagnosis and refused to puncture the pleural cavity even when such an operation appeared absolutely necessary — thus compromising forever the life of his distinguished patient—the American physicians have nothing with which to reproach themselves. The puncture should have been made without the Russian's permission."

Dr. Stella, who had an argument with Prof. Chiarolanza about the true cause of Caruso's death, explains that it was not a case of subphrenic abscess (an abscess immediately under the diaphragm) but of the most acute form of pleurisy.

Harold Motors With Ganna in Bois Boulogne

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PARIS, July 22. — Harold F. McCormick and Mme. Ganna Walska motored in the cool Bois Boulogne this evening after a quiet dinner together in one of the little rustic restaurants among the trees.

It was the end of a perfect day to all appearances.

At 6 o'clock her magnificent motor drew up before her beautiful home in the Rue Lubeck, which she has received in her pending divorce settlement from Alexander Cochran. Before newspaper men could reach them for a few questions they had stepped quickly into their car and whirled away. Both were smiling happily. McCormick didn't arrive in Paris until 3 o'clock this morning owing to the late arrival of the Majestic at Cherbourg. He took lunch at the Walska home.

LOVE TURNS INTO DUST

Declines to Wed Whitney's Son

Evan Fontains Says Her Child's Father "Weak and Wishy-Washy"

Dancer, Back from Catalina, Ready to Fall in Love "With a Man"

No matter what may happen Evan Burrowes Fontaine, the oriental dancer, doesn't believe she will ever marry Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney.

Once love is dead, she said yesterday in her suite at the Alexandria, it can be resurrected only by a miracle—and she believes the love she once gave the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney of New York has withered and decayed, become but dust.

"I may love again," she said. "I hope I do—soon. But it will probably be an older man than Sonny Whitney I shall love. A woman demands much in a man—stamina for instance. A man doesn't demand stamina in a woman, but a woman must have it in a man.

"Sonny, poor Sonny. That's the think he lacks. Well, I guess he was brought up wrong. 'Mama's angel child,' you know. He can't call his soul his own. He's weak, wishy-washy. Ah, if he had been different—"

IGNORANT OF SUITS

Miss Fontaine said she knew nothing about the two suits that have been started in New York, involving young Whitney's asserted promise to marry her, and the paternity of her 19-month-old boy whom she calls Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, Jr., and 'Sonny.'

Miss Fontaine, direct descendant of Patrick Henry, and of Dr. Lansing Burrows of Virginia, one of the celebrated leaders of the Episcopal church in America, is 23 years old. She is tall and lissome. Her eyes are large, dark brown, round. Her hair is black-brown.

She has just returned from Catalina, and her forearms are sunburned.

"I've been having the grandest time," she said. "We caught a sword fish weighing 300 pounds, and lots of albacore. Went out in a motor launch, you know, and trolled. We saw the sword fish's fins, and followed him all over the ocean until he took our bait, and then we did follow him. He pulled us for miles until he got tired. It was wonderful."

TRAINS BABY FOR RING

"I wish I had stayed over there a little longer," she said, wistfully. "Then the reporters wouldn't have found me. I had my mail forwarded to a friend, and I told this friend he was to say I might have gone to Mexico. But it didn't work."

She laughs a little, and talks about her boy.

"He looks a good deal like his grand father, Harry Witney," she says, "but he's got my mouth. He's a darling. I'm going to make a prize fighter out of him. You ought to see the way he doubles up his fists, and how hard he hits.

"And he can swim. We put him in the bathtub and taught him the stroke. He's a regular frog. And mother's teaching him the alphabet. He can pick out a, b and c, even in a telegram. Nineteen months, and he'll pass for 3 years old. He has nice, light hair, and tan eyes, changeable eyes. No, he doesn't take after my side of the family a bit—but, as I say, he has my mouth."

AVOIDS GOTHAM SIEGE

Miss Fontaine had just spoken with friends in New York.

"They tell me," she says, "that the newspaper men have come and pitched tents on mamma's lawn, and brought provisions for a siege. They even swiped the milk bottle from the back porch. And mamma and the baby are staying inside."

Miss Fontaine declines to discuss the law suits. She says she doesn't know anything about them. She's willing to abide by the ad-

MANDATES ARE APPROVED

League Council Confirms Control by Great Britain of Palestine; System is Now World-Wide

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, July 22.—Final confirmation was given the Palestine and Syrian mandates today by the Council of the League of Nations. This means that the mandate system of government becomes effective throughout the world almost immediately.

There remain for settlement only certain minor points between France and Italy, respecting Italian schools, immigration and economic features in Syria.

The Earl of Balfour, Rene Viviani and Marquis Imperiali, respectively the delegates of England, France and Italy, will make declarations on Monday regarding the future policy of their governments in the mandate area.

Urging the confirmation of the mandates the Earl of Balfour said today that their immediate adoption was imperatively needed in order to allay the agitation and unrest among the different racial elements in the mandate areas. He said that while custody of the holy places was of great interest and importance to the outside world they were of little concern to the inhabitants of Palestine and Syria. M. Viviani indorsed this stand. He said that France was anxious that the mandates should be accepted immediately, Marquis Imperiali, who contended for the definition of the Vatican's rights to the holy places, yielded on this point.

The action of the Council marks the culmination of three years of effort and negotiation on the part of the League to institute the mandate system in the Pacific islands, Central Africa and Asia Minor. It is construed as a victory for the Earl of Balfour and as giving further effect to the establishment of a Jewish national home.

The mandate for Mesopotamia automatically disappears with the creation by Great Britain of an independent state in that country. There was no real divergence of opinion regarding the Syrian mandate, but on Article XIV of the Palestine document, defining the functions and powers of the commission for the custody of the holy places, there was some disagreement between France, Italy and Great Britain.

This article is now revised to meet the wishes of all the parties and the text will be announced Monday. The composition and competency of the commission will be determined by Great Britain for the next session of the Assembly in September.

Valley Leaders Arrange for Talk by Candidate

Mass Meeting Called for Platform Indorsement

Rallying spontaneously to the support of Charles C. Moore for the Republican nomination for United States Senator, hundreds of the most prominent men and women of the city of Pomona and the surrounding country have pledged their support to the candidate and issued a statement, based on the platform on which Mr. Moore rests his campaign, in which they say that they "believe that it is for the best interests of the State of California that we have a change in the representation in Washington, so that the State may be harmoniously represented."

On Monday night these warm supporters of Mr. Moore will gather, with hundreds of others, at a mass meeting called by them in Pomona, at which Mr. Moore is to be present and speak personally to the people of the Pomona Valley on the matter which has induced them to tender their support to Mr. Moore—Senator Johnson's neglected opportunities in Washington.

Following are the names of some of those who issued the statement and signed the call for the mass meeting, and who are now actively working for the success of the meeting and in the support of Moore's candidacy for the Republican nomination for United States Senator at the primary election on August 29:

IOWA OPERATORS TO DELAY OPERATIONS

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, July 22. — E. C. Smith, president of the Iowa Coal Operators, upon his return from Washington today, indicated that no effort will be made by the operators to resume coal production in this State in the near future.

"Even if we had an agreement entirely satisfactory to all parties concerned, I doubt that any mines in the State could start to produce to any advantage, as long as the rail strike is unsettled," he said.

Beginning another week of intensive campaigning in Southern California on Monday, Mr. Moore will address members of the Men's City Club and their guests at noon, and at 1:15 p.m., will appear before the members of the Woman's City Club as their guest.

Pomona Valley has arranged for a monster mass meeting in Pomona on Monday night, under the auspices of the Moore-for-Senator Club of Pomona Valley, with a membership of more than 300 prominent men and women of that region, where Mr. Moore's agricultural interests have made him well known to the people.

A large delegation of Los Angeles friends of Mr. Moore will accompany him to Pomona for this occasion.

Mr. Moore will leave Los Angeles early that morning, and after stopping to address open-air meetings at Santa Paula, Oxnard and Ventura, will arrive in Santa Barbara in time for a luncheon in his honor given by the business men of Santa Barbara, where he is well known for his work in designing and building the municipal power and water distributing plants.

Meikeljohn to Support Moore in Senate Race

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, July 22.—George D. Meikeljohn, Los Angeles attorney, who was Assistant Secretary of War under President McKinley, announced today, while on a visit to this city, that he would enthusiastically support Charles C. Moore of San Francisco for the Republican nomination for United States Senator.

"Mr. Moore," he said, "is a man of the highest standing and integrity, possesses business experience, is 100 per cent American and is held in high esteem by all who know him, irrespective of party affiliations. Standing as he does on a platform of stability, pledged to support President Harding and the administration in its Herculean task of construction, it behooves the great State of California to have its representatives in Congress of such caliber that their acts and motives cannot be impeached."

"Whatever happens will be for the best," she said. "I feel that I've left it all to Senator Brackett, anyway. I came out here to get away from it all. I wish I had brought my boy with me, though."

"I saw Sonny Whitney in San Francisco, at the St. Francis Hotel, and he called me up after I went to my room. I understand he is staying with his sister in Pasadena.

SAYS HE'S WEAKLING

"I loved him very dearly. But I thought he was a man. Why cannot men be men all the time? Why should there be weaklings in the world? Ah, well—we met at a ball in the Ritz a few years ago. We saw each other frequently. We became engaged. Then his father found out about it, and he—he didn't like it. He objected strenuously. We met in secret. But the time came when it was too late to keep secrets. I'm sorry for him, and for me, and for my baby too, that we couldn't keep the secret forever. But it was impossible, I guess. Still, you'd think Sonny would be man enough to take the consequences, wouldn't you?"

The descendant of Patrick Henry could not excuse the frailty of a descendant of millionaires.

"Are you going back to New York?" she was asked.

THINKING OF FILMS

"I don't know," she answered. "I suppose I ought to. But I love California. I'm one of the greatest California boosters you ever saw. The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce ought to hire me. I've been all over the State. I can't get enough of it."

"Are you going into the motion pictures?"

"I don't know—not yet. I've made three pictures, you know. Two in New York, and one in Cleveland. I may go into pictures if I stay out here. I don't know what I shall do. I'd like to go into seclusion, do nothing but play, catch albacore and swordfish, swim, see nobody at all. And I'd like to go back to my mother and my baby. I don't know what to do. I don't really know what I want to do. I hope I fall in love again—with a man."

NOT SURPRISED

Miss Fontaine admitted, with a smile, that she has been aware that the friendship between "Sonny" Whitney and Marie Norton would result in the recently announced engagement of the couple.

"I met Miss Norton once," she said, "and she impressed me as a very charming person.

"I am in no sense undeceived by the confirmation of the fact that 'Sonny' and Miss Norton are to marry. I decided long ago—sensibly, I think—to dismiss Whitney from my mind. It was a struggle—but I did it. So anger and desire for revenge will have nothing to do with the legal actions which my lawyers are now preparing."

A dramatic meeting took place a month ago on the day of the American Henley intercollegiate boat races in Philadelphia. Even told of this encounter, which she called "the farewell."

"Sonny" Whitney took part in the races as "bow" of the second Yale crew, and Evan knowing this in advance, planned in advance every detail of the mute interview.

She motored down to Philadelphia from her home in Kew Gardens, L. I., on the day of the races, sitting at the wheel of her car. She calculated to the second her arrival at the boathouse from which the Yale rowers took the water and applied her brakes just as the crews lowered their shell into the water.

THOUGHT OF HER SON

"My heart was pounding," she told, "till I thought it would stop. This astonished me, because I thought I had subjugated my emotions. I saw Sonny and thought of the child I had left at home at play in the garden—such a small image of his father.

"When the men took up their oars they had to lift their heads and face me. I had chosen my position for this. I got out of the car somehow, but I nearly fell to the ground. For once my dancing legs wouldn't hold me up.

"Then Sonny saw me. I won't forget that second, ever. He just got gray in the face and wilted. I've seen prizefights—and he acted just like a fighter who goes down slowly from a blow in the stomach.

"I had confused thoughts and sensations. I can't tell what made me do any of the things I did that day. Certainly, my actions had no motive. I climbed back into the car and drove off inland and came up to the starting line just before the Yale crew swung into position. Few people were about. The big interest of the day had been in the varsity race.

WOULD NOT LOOK UP

"Sonny was looking for me. When he saw me this second time his face went down over his oars and he stayed in that position until the starting pistol was fired. Somehow he responded to the signal and rowed.

"But the Yale crew was badly beaten.

"I think it was the emotions of that day which finally cured me. I have been able to dismiss Sonny from my mind since."

A great deal more of the family drama, which played obbligato to the Whitney-Fontaine romance was learned yesterday.

When Evan's mother, Mrs. Florence Burrows Fontaine, became certain two years ago that her daughter's affair with Sonny had become serious, she summoned to New York her father, Judge Burrows, and Mrs. Burrows.

GOT OUT PISTOLS

The elderly southerner, once he was in possession of Evan's story, resolved on a characteristically Virginian course of action. He brought out an old Civil War pistol and demanded to know where he could meet "the young man."

In his mind hatred of the youth who had captured his granddaughter's affections was entangled with a general hatred of all Yankees.

It took the women the whole of one sleepless night to turn the judge's mind from ideas of putting into force the "unwritten law."

The young oriental dancer's relations with Sterling Adair, young sailor, to whom she was married before she met Whitney, were made clearer by facts learned yesterday.

According to Evan, the romance was of the sudden war variety. Young Adair had met Mrs. Burrows-Fontaine on a train between Texas and Chicago.

WHIRLWIND AFFAIR

When the mother invited the sailor to dine with her in a Chicago hotel, Evan met him for the first time. Twenty-four hours later they were married with mother helping in the frenzied preparations for the sudden wedding.

Evan entertains no grudge against her former husband because he unconcernedly admitted two days later that he had another wife "somewhere in the South."

She took her first disillusionment philosophically.

The litigation which dissolved this union was still in progress when she met Whitney and fell in love with him.

Many months later when Sonny went to his father with the story of his relations with the beautiful dancer, he told the story of her unlucky marriage. And this was the first fact which was seized on by the Whitney lawyers when the Whitney heir's troubles became a problem for legal ingenuity to solve.

"NOTHING TO SAY"

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—Evan Burrows Fontaine will now fight to the last of her strength and her money for the future of her 19-month-old son, Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, named after young "Sonny" Whitney, who is said to be the child's father, it was learned here today.

At the Whitney residence a spokesman, who refused his name, consented over the telephone to transmit to Harry Payne Whitney the message in which the Tribune offered to reproduce any denials of stated fact he wished to make.

"Mr. Whitney appreciates the offer," came the answer, "but will not have anything to say today."

ATTORNEY WITHDRAWS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SARATOGA (N. Y.) July 22.—Edgar T. Brackett, former State Senator, has withdrawn as attorney for the case of Miss Evan Burrows-Fontaine against Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, it was stated today at his office. The information also was given that no complaint had been filed in the case, but that summonses were served here last summer.

A PLAIN QUESTION

Members of the labor unions of America—

Do you stand for murder?

Is it your purpose to accomplish your ends by dynamite and the torch? Do you propose to advance the cause of the American workingman by the bomb of the midnight assassin? Do you hope to use as stepping stones to power the mangled bodies of innocent men, victims of premeditated slaughter?

If not—

Then it is your business to stand up and say so; to protest with the last ounce of your strength and influence against the recent appointment of John J. McNamara, confessed dynamiter and chief of assassins, as business agent of the Bridge and Structural Ironworkers' Union at Indianapolis.

In naming this confessed arch-plotter of bomb outrages to one of its important offices the ironworkers' union blazons to the world its indorsement of the murderous methods that wrought the destruction of more than 200 open-shop structures and sent to their death twenty inoffensive and unsuspecting workers in the shattered ruins of The Times Building. His cheeks still pallid from penal servitude, this directing genius of the reign of dynamite steps again into a position of command in the very union whose name he made to stand for horror and destruction. In no other way could his appointers have more plainly declared their own attitude.

When McNamara was first accused there was a great hue and cry of "frame-up" and "persecution." When, to gain the crumb of mercy accorded the confessor, he stood up in the dock and admitted his crimes, there was a recoil, a repudiation of McNamara and all his works. How sincere was that repudiation is now manifest when McNamara, barely out of the penitentiary, is restored to power by those union chiefs who then turned from him with simulated loathing. They might as well shout from the housetops: "We believe in murder! We approve of midnight bombings and assassinations! We want a dynamiter in our van, slaughter and ruin in our wake! Let other unions use clubs and stones in daylight if they will—for us a clockwork bomb in a dark alley, the more dead the better so long as we have time for a getaway!"

Is this the attitude of the rank and file of union labor? The Times does not believe it. The Times believes that the vast majority of union members, many of them forced to be such by circumstances over which they have no control, are honest, hard-working, square-shooting Americans, as little likely to resort to dynamite as any other decent citizen.

But the restoration of McNamara puts every union man under suspicion if he lifts not his voice in protest. Silence consents and tacitly indorses. If, knowing the truth, organized labor submits to leadership that stands for murder and dynamite, for the horrors of Herrin and the killers of Chicago, then it accepts for itself the brand of Cain.

It is a plain question, a clear issue.

What is the answer?

Has Marilynn Miller come between the Follies producer and his lovely wife?

SHE'S PALE AND TIRED

Tonight Billie Burke is pale and tired and her eyes are red with weeping.

"No," she faltered when a reporter asked her if she cared to deny the rumor that she will leave her husband.

"No, I won't deny it. I won't affirm or deny anything. I simply can't talk about it. It's all very, very personal.

"It's quite true that I sent my husband a cable, but the contents were for no one but him. I can't shout forth the secrets of my soul. You must let me be noncommittal."

"I only had a wild dream," she is said to have cabled her husband in Paris, "that you and I and the baby could be happy together, but the dream is over."

Miss Burke threw up her hands at the mention of Marilynn.

"Please don't ask me to talk of Miss Miller," she implored. "In the first place, I have never said the things credited to me and I refuse to exchange insults with Miss Miller."

LABOR MEN FOR LANDIS WAGE RULE

International Presidents of Crafts Affected Act to Use Scale as Guide

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 22.—A sweeping victory for the Landis award was heralded today when a special committee composed of the international presidents of the various crafts affected submitted a report to the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor recommending a complete reorganization of the Chicago Building Trades Council on a basis of entire recognition of the Landis scale.

The finding of the committee, which has been conducting hearings in Chicago for the last few days sounds the knell for Fred (Frenchy) Mader as president of the Chicago Building Trades Council and presages the wane of power of the anti-Landis award unions whose figurehead he has been. It cuts short the growing power and influence of "Big Tim" Murphy in the building trades. It means an end to the chaotic condition with which Chicago's building world has had to deal ever since Judge Landis handed down his now famous decision last fall. And it spells finis for an anomalous situation under which union and nonunion craftsmen have labored side by side.

FRUIT GROWERS DEMAND ACTION

San Joaquin Valley Citizens Fear Large Losses

Request Governor to Submit Strike Ultimatum

If This Fails Committee Asks Use of Troops

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

FRESNO, July 22.—A delegation of five, representing San Joaquin Valley interests facing what is termed a "grave transportation crisis resulting from the railroad strike," was appointed here today to call on Gov. Stephens and "correct" his impressions of the transportation situation as regards the movement of California's $250,000,000 fruit crop.

The delegation was named at a meeting of representatives of twenty-five valley cities from Modesto to Bakersfield, the Valley Industrial Association, claiming 400 members, and the California Farm Bureau meeting in Fresno this morning.

ASK PROTECTION

Members of the delegation will include a banking representative, one to represent the growers, one from the shippers and one from the SunMaid Raisin Growers' Association of California. Appointment of the delegation was decided on in answer to Gov. Stephens's reply to valley appeals that he use his executive power to keep railroads open to traffic.

In his answers the Governor has assured appellants that he is "fully aware of the situation and that the responsibility rests on local peace officers."

J. J. Duel of Bakersfield, member of the State Executive Board of the Farm Bureau, appealed to the meeting to send a delegation to the Governor and place before him the facts.

"Gov. Stephens," declared Duel, "assured us that the railroads can take care of the shipments of fruit, that rail equipment is in first-class shape. That is not true, but we must show him that it is not true and demand of him that he use his executive power to keep the State's railroads open to commerce."

FAVOR ULTIMATUM

Speakers at the meeting were in favor of demanding that the Governor issue a proclamation to rail strikers to either return to work in a stated period or call our troops to man the trains. A resolution, indorsed at the meeting, placed all valley interests under one head, the Valley Industrial Association, which will direct the move of the valley growers, shippers and nonstriking public to obtain relief from what is feared by valley cities to be an approaching paralysis of railroads during the moving of valley corps and crops elsewhere in the State.

Al Sunderland of the Peach and Fig Growers' Association was elected chairman of the meeting and J. W. Hunt, manager of the Industrial Association was named secretary.

HARDING KEPT BUSY BY STRIKE

Act and restoration of the voluntary arbitration plan of the former Erdman and Newlands laws.

Senator Cummins was told by his visitors that they were receiving increasing reports of "bad order" engines and rolling stock because of the alleged lack of experienced shopmen. The brotherhood statements were regarded in some quarters as the development of a further and serious complication in the shop strike which might cause additional suspensions of transportation through engineers, the statement said, refusing to take out engines regarded as dangerous.

Senator Cummins said that other than the statements of the local brotherhood agents, he was not informed as to the real conditions of railroad rolling stock. He did not view favorably the request for repeal of the labor provisions of the Transportation Act on which, he said, there was a division of opinion among railway employees, the trainmen's brotherhoods favoring the old mediation and conciliation commission and other rail unions favoring the present law's plan.

As to the general strike situation, Senator Cummins said tonight he was "hopeful, but not over sanguine."

AUSTRALIANS WATCH AMERICAN STRIKES

SYDNEY PAPER SAYS LABOR HERE IS UNORGANIZED POLITICALLY

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

SYDNEY, July 22.—The news of the various strikes in the United States is arousing the keenest interest here in view of the past industrial conflicts in different parts of the commonwealth. The history of Australian strikes of large proportions shows that they were invariably crushed when the government acted firmly and had the support of the general public.

In 1917, strikes on the New South Wales railways and street-car lines, which the government owns, and which were extended to shipping and other industries failed for this reason. A large body of volunteers assisted in maintaining the public services. Farmers came from the country and encamped in Sydney, where the complete organization of volunteer labor proved highly successful.

The Sydney Herald points out that American labor is not organized politically as in most British communities and there are few representatives in the legislatures to plead labor's cause and to enforce its rights. The paper expresses satisfaction that Australia's homogeneous population does not present the difficulties encountered through unassimilated immigrants, who have not yet learned self-discipline and civic spirit and who prove to be inflammable material ready for use by unscrupulous agitators.

RAIL PEACE YET DISTANT

to the Labor Board for a rehearing. The seniority and adjustment board issues have been brought up since the strike started.

URGES NEW BOARD

Appealing for national adjustment boards to decide disputes, Mr. Jewell said that the association of railway executives opposed such boards for the purpose of "deliberately" overloading the labor board.

Employees desire one national board, the statement said, "because shop work conditions are practically the same everywhere, uniform national rules have been promulgated by the labor board. Uniform interpretation of such rules is desirable and intermediate boards will create inharmonious rulings and regional boards would impose duplication and unfair expense.

"The proposition to deprive men of seniority rights because of suspension of work, the statement said, "is utterly indefensible if the facts are understood." The right of the senior employee to be the last laid off and to have first preference in selection for preferable jobs, he said, was of great importance and asserted that the roads wished to do away with the order "to weed out those workers most active in protection of rights of their fellow employees."

SENIORITY RIGHTS

"The purpose of destroying seniority rights" the statement said, "is a vicious attack on the right of men to refuse to work under non-acceptable conditions. Depriving the men of seniority, he said, would be a sweeping injustice, unparalleled in modern history."

"If the railway executives insist upon using this suspension of work which they forced upon the employees as an excuse for depriving them of the fruits of lifelong, continuous faithful service," the statement said, "they will only give further evidence of the absolute necessity for the organized employees to fight to the last ditch the conspiracy against their fundamental rights and against the general welfare of all men who live by labor.'

ERIE PRESIDENT SEES RAIL STRIKE FAILURE

EXECUTIVE DECLARES ROAD SHOWS TREND TOWARD NORMAL

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—The failure of the shopcrafts strike in the East was predicted today by F. D. Underwood, president of the Erie, one of the roads in the Metropolitan district, which was admittedly hardest hit in the first few weeks of the strike. The shop forces have been increased from 25 per cent of normal July 5, to 50 per cent on the pay rolls today, it was claimed.

The Erie is the first eastern road to make known its condition as a result of the strike. In a report to directors, Mr. Underwood asserted that today, on the four divisions of the system, 21,248 cars were handled, 14,092 of them loaded, as compared with 12,137 loaded cars handled Saturday, two weeks ago.

Chicago continues to be the hardest hit section of the road, with shops employing only 34 per cent normal crews.

The coal situation was reported so grave with the Erie that further annulments of service may become necessary, both passenger and freight, in addition to twenty-three trains discontinued two weeks ago, said Mr. Underwood.

The general strike situation in this district remained static, with union leaders claiming the loyalty of all strikers, while each road reported the return of a few former employees. Road executives without exception, expressed a willingness to "see the strike through," asserting they looked for no more peace developments through the United States Labor Board, at Chicago.

COMPANY UNION IDEA GAINING POPULARITY

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, July 22. — New "company unions" of employees, comparable with that maintained by the Pennsylvania Railroad, will be formed on leading eastern railroads, it was announced today. These unions would supplant the shopcraft organizations now on strike, and would be made up exclusively of old employees who have remained at their posts since the July 1 walkout and of new employees taken on, according to executives.

Whether the new unions would eventually expand to nullify American Federation of Labor affiliations and make relations between executives and workers wholly a "family affair" with each company as on the Pennsylvania could not be verified. "Too early to say," was the consensus in managerial circles.

The Delaware and Hudson, the Lehigh Valley and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western admitted that the movement has started within their ranks. Official emphasis is laid, however, upon the fact that the movement "started with the men, not with the company."

The United States Railway Labor Board was credited with the origin of the idea by officials of the Delaware and Hudson Company in the absence of L. F. Loree, president. Lehigh Valley officials said the movement was under way at all shop points on the part of new employees. Neither the Lehigh nor the Lackawanna railroads could say whether the new movement would confine itself to the shopcrafts or eventually widen and embrace all classes of employees.

E. M. Rice, vice-president and general manager of Lackawanna, said that the matter of "company union" had not gone farther than the men in the shop trades.

RESTRAINING ORDER OUT IN NEW MEXICO

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SANTA FE (N. M.) July 22.—Strike shopcrafts employees of the El Paso and Southwestern Railroad were prohibited from interfering with the operation of trains in a temporary restraining order issued tonight by U. S. District Judge Colin Neblett, at the request of the railroad company. The order was made returnable August 1.

UNIONS NAMED IN INJUNCTION

Sweeping Restraining Order Issued in Bay City

Court Heeds Complaint of Pullman Company

Picketing and Violence by Strikers Prohibited

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 22.—One of the most sweeping temporary restraning orders to be issued by the local Federal Court during the present railroad strike was promulgated today by Federal Judge Dooling, on application of the Pullman Company, and was directed against striking employees and their unions. The enjoining order prohibiting violence by former employees during the present controversy, became effective immediately.

The injunction is considerably more specific than the temporary injunctions heretofore issued to the railroad companies of this State, in that it covers three separate issues. These are:

First—It names as defendants six of the biggest international railroad federations in the country and is directed against the officers of these organizations.

WOMEN INCLUDED

Second—it is the first temporary injunction in the present strike to be directed against women members of a striking railroad shopcraft.

Third—Notice of the issuance of the temporary injunction is to be made by publication in one San Francisco newspaper and notices of the temporary injunction shall be posted on and about the premises of the complaining Pullman Company.

An order to show cause why the taemporary injunction should not be made permanent also was signed by Judge Dooling and is returnable at 11:30 a.m. on Monday, the 31st inst.

The bill of complaint asserts that members of the locals of the unions now on strike, went out on strike "in sympathy" with the various federations not new employed.

PICKETING PROHIBITED

Because of the sympathetic strike, the complaint charges, "striking employees" have interfered with the employment of present employees, have beaten employees going and returning from work and have intimidated and coerced those persons who had been employed to take the places of men and women now on strike.

The enjoining order restrains strikers from interfering in any way with the business of the Pullman Company; prohibits them from preventing by threats or intimidation any employee from performing his duties; prohibits unlawful picketing and makes as contempt of court any violation of the injunction directed against the operation of the company's business, whose main shops, says the complainant, are at Richmond.

The complaint charges many acts of violence during the present difficulty between employer and employees and states that since the 1st and up to and including the 20th inst., "many acts of violence have been perpetrated on the company's property." The acts of violence referred to include the asserted beating up of employees going to and returning from employment.

Proposed Rail Clerk Walkout is Called Off

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, July 22.—The threatened strike of 7300 clerks on the Chicago and Northwestern Railway was settled today through the efforts of W. L. McMenimen, labor member of the United States Railroad Labor Board, according to a formal announcement tonight by J. H. Sylvester, vice-president, and G. A. Worrell, general chairman of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees.

The settlement provides for the re-establishment of past practices of the road for vacations, sick leave and Saturday afternoon holiday with no deduction in pay, provided, however, there is no extra expense to the company involved.

FERTILIZER NOT MATERIAL HERE

Michigan Railroad Objects to Lower Rates

Asserts State Doesn't Need Soil Stimulants

Commerce Commission Not to Listen to Pleas

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 22.—That California's soil is so fertile that it needs little if any fertilizer, has been pleaded by the Michigan Central and other railroads as a reason for not granting lower proportionate rates on fertilizer material from Niagara Falls, Ontario, to Los Angeles, and to other Pacific Coast terminals than are granted to southern points and other parts of the country. But the Interstate Commerce Commission, not denying the fact, finds it not applicable to the situation and insists upon a reduction of rates.

The case, decision in which was announced today, was brought by the American Cyanamid Company against the carriers, charging that rates on cyanamid in carloads from Suspension Bridge and Niagara Falls to the Pacific Coast terminals was unreasonable. The commission holds the contention is correct and grants the lower rates.

It was shown, according to the decision, that other fertilizer materials, as nitrate of soda and sulphate of potash, are shipped eastward from California points at a materially less rate than is demanded on the west-bound movement of cyanamid. The complaining company protested against such discrimination and the American Agricultural Chemical Company, which has a plant in California, intervened in support of the complainant, alleging that the high rates on cyanamid prevent large use of that material.

In its decision reducing rates and ordering reparation for excessive freight charges in the past, the commission says:

"The total consumption of manufactured fertilizers in California is about 50,000 tons per annum. A large tonnage of cyanamid is improbable, as in addition to the competition from the large amount of fish scrap produced locally on the Pacific Coast the movement of sulphate of ammonia is said to be very substantial. Complainant concedes that the movement of cyanamid to the coast has been insignificant in volume but attributes this to the more favorable freight rates afforded competitive fertilizer ammoniates. Defendants contend that the use of fertilizers is largely confined to southern territory; that the soil on the Pacific Coast is such as to make unnecessary the extensive use of fertilizer; and that because of the small movement the low rates on fertilizers, etc., should not be extended into western territory.

SUICIDE LAID TO PUNCTURE

Chauffeur for Prince Regent of Japan Kills Himself Because of Flat Tire

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

TOKIO, July 22.—A chauffeur employed by the imperial household, who accompanied Prince Regent Hirohito on his northern tour, yesterday committed suicide because of a tire puncture which delayed his imperial passenger for half an hour on the open road. He left a message explaining his desire to atone for his neglect.

ARBITRATION COURT MEETS IN HOLLAND

NORWAY TRUSTS HER CASE AGAINST AMERICA TO AMERICAN LAWYERS

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

SCHEVENINGEN (Holland) July 22.—The permanent court of arbitration assembled today at the Carnegie peace palace to decide the shipping dispute between the United States and Norway, arising from the requisitioning of Norwegian ships built in America during the war. Though millions of dollars and important points of international law are involved in the dispute, Norway intrusted the presentation of her case to American lawyers.

A large number of Americans came to The Hague for the opening of the court, which is organized in a manner similar to the court which heard the Anglo-American fisheries dispute in 1910. It is not to be confused with the permanent court of international justice, which is an outgrowth of the League of Nations. There are three judges, Chandler P. Anderson, of the United States; Benjamin Vogt, Norwegian Minister at London, and a neutral, James Vallolan, Swiss legal expert.

Former Senator George Sutherland of Utah, is chief of counsel for the United States. The argument in behalf of Norway will be presented by Walter L. Fisher of Chicago, assisted by George Rublee of New Hampshire, and Edward Burling of Washington, D. C. The case may require a month.

"Gas" Reserve for Autos Low, Reports Show

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—Although gasoline refineries in the United States are breaking all records for production, the reserve supply of "gas" for the nation's automobiles is steadily growing smaller, the American Petroleum Institute declared today.

In May 12,229,975 barrels of motor fuel were refined, topping by over 1,000,000 barrels the highest previous record, made in September, 1920. Yet according to the institute's figures, if all production would cease simultaneously there would be only 82 gallons apiece for the 10,448,632 automobiles registered in the country.

Despite the record-breaking production month of May, 849,084 barrels were withdrawn from reserves to supply the current demand, it was shown.

NOTED JAP CHEMIST DIES IN NEW YORK

ORIGINATED NEW CHEMICALS TO AID DIGESTION; WAS DECORATED FOR WORK

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—Dr. Jokichi Takamine, prominent Japanese chemist, died in Lenox Hill Hospital shortly before noon today after an illness of several weeks. Dr. Takamine, producer of the diastatic enzyme "Takadiastase" and originator of adrenalin, died of a complicated kidney disease from which he had suffered for several months.

Dr. Takamine was particularly well known for his discoveries in chemical research and he also was the head of several organizations which manufactured and distributed chemical products.

A native of Takaoka, Japan, he was graduated in chemical engineering from the University of Tokio in 1870 at the age of 25. The Japanese government then sent him to study at the University of Glasgow and Andersonian University at Glasgow for three years. Returning home he was appointed head chemist of the Imperial Department of Agriculture and Commerce, serving until 1884 when he was sent to New Orleans as Japanese commissioner to the Cotton Centennial Exposition.

In 1885 he married Miss Carolina Hitch of New Orleans and returned to Japan where he organized and erected the first super-phosphate works at Tokio. In 1890 he came to America and applied his new process of conversion and fermentation to practical purposes, resulting in the production of the diastatic enzyme "takadiastas" now largely used as a starch digestant. He established a research laboratory in New York and originated a process for isolating the active principle of the suprarenal glands, the process being known as adrenalin.

In 1915 he was decorated by the Emperor of Japan with the fourth Order of the Rising Sun. The Emperor had previously made him a member of the Royal Academy of Science. In New York he was head of the Nippon Club and a member of others, including Lotus, Chemists, Drug and Chemical, and New York Athletic.

Dr. Takamine was consulting chemist for Parke-Davis and Company of Detroit and several other organizations.

He is survived by his widow and two sons, Jokichi, Jr., and Eben.

MOVES TO CUT DUTY ON WOOL

Lenroot Urges Reduction on Coarse Fleece

Bay State Senator Attacks Raw Wool Rate

Says Consumers Penalized Many Millions

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, July 22.—While the barrage preliminary to the battle over the wool schedule in the administration tariff bill, was laid down today in the Senate an under-the-surface movement was started by Senator Lenroot, Republican, Wisconsin, looking to a general reduction in the higher duties proposed on raw wool and manufactures of that wool, little of which is produced in this country.

Senator Lenroot, who conducted a successful fight against some of the rates in the cotton schedule, said there was a considerable number of Republican Senators dissatisfied with the duties to which he had objection and that he was hopeful of getting an agreement with the committee majority for a maximum duty of 60 per cent. Should his effort in this direction prove unfruitful, however, it is his plan to make a fight in the Senate.

The Wisconsin Senator estimated that the duties on the coarse wool products ranged from 26 per cent to 137 per cent. He made it plain that he was not opposing the committee duties on the fine grades of wool either in the raw state or manufactured products.

PLAN CLOTH RATE CUT

Before the Senate met the Finance Committee majority agreed tentatively to a reduction of 5 per cent in the ad valorem duty on woolen cloths, and other manufacturers, including clothing. Whether these reductions are to be recommended to the Senate is to be considered further on Monday.

Debate in the Senate today was confined almost wholly to the 33 cents a pound duty proposed on scoured wool, with Senator Walsh, Democrat, Massachusetts, making the principal attack and Chairman McCumber and Senator Smoot of the Finance Committee and Senators Gooding of Idaho, chairman of the Republican agricultural-tariff bloc, and Bursum, Republican, New Mexico, defending the committee proposal.

The famous schedule of the Payne-Aldrich law got into the debate early and was referred to frequently. At the outset Senator McCumber told how the woolen manufacturers had brought in wool of low shrinkage, which took a low rate, with a result that the producers received an actual protection of 76 cents a pound instead of 33 cents as was intended by the farmers of the law.

JONES CHARGES DECEIT

The manufacturers came in for attack from Senator Jones, Democrat, New Mexico, who charged that when the Payne-Aldrich law was drafted they had "deliberately deceived" Congress and the country as to the amount of compensatory protection they would need on account of the raw wool duty. In this connection Senator Smoot said the committee this time had paid no attention to the testimony of the manufacturers, relying upon an exhaustive report on the world woolen industry made by the Tariff Commission at a cost, he said, of $250,000.

In the course of Senator Walsh's assault on the 33 cents duty, there was a lively dispute between Democrats and Republicans as to whether Senator Bursum, in interrupting Senator Walsh to defend the duty, had stated that the 33 cents was designed to afford the wool producers an average annual profit of 10 per cent over a period of five years.

Senators Overman, Democrat, North Carolina, and Walsh, contended that this had been his statement, whereas Senator Smoot argued that what the New Mexican Senator intended to convey was that the duty proposed would enable the producers at best to make not more than 10 per cent profit.

ASSERTS RATE HIGHEST

Attacking the committee rate, Senator Walsh said that barring the "joker" in the emergency tariff law, the duty proposed was the highest ever levied on raw wool. He asserted that it could be shown that the duty would cost the manufacturing industry $76,000,000, which when paid by the consumer after pyramiding would approximate $200,000,000.

Senator Smoot argued that this would not prove the case, and undertook to refute the claims of manufacturers that the duty would result in a material increase in the price of clothing. He called attention to the fact that the present duty was 45 cents a pound, but Senator Walsh replied that the emergency tariff duty had not become effective, both because of a diminution of imports and the fact that wool brought in under the duty had just now reached the stage of the finished cloth.

Tot Hikes With Artist Father to Win Wager

"Coast to coast in 254 days, age 4 years and 3 months." Thus reads the sign on the knapsack of little Carmel Rodney, who with her father, Francis Rodney, artist of Eureka, Cal., is attempting to capture a bet made by H. E. Hoskin of Columbus, O.

The couple started from Eureka forty days ago and in that time have covered a total of 614 miles. This is to be applied on the coast-to-coast trip and after hiking to San Bernardino, the trekkers will board a train for the East, which will take them to Albuquerque, N. M., which will be the equivalent of the distance which has been hiked on this coast.

When Columbus, O., is reached a premium of $500 will be given the youthful hiker and when New York is reached a premimum of $500 more will be given. The total of the bet is $1000 and the premiums total another $1000.

The mother is not accompanying the hikers, but will meet them shortly before they reach New York next December.

OBREGON'S APPROVAL EXPECTED

De la Huerta Declares Oil Agreements on Loan Certain to be Ratified

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

EL PASO (Tex.) July 22.—President Alvaro Obregon of Mexico will ratify the agreements entered into by Adolfo De la Huerta with New York financiers, "oil agreements," by which back interests on the Mexican foreign debt is to be paid.

This statement was made by Adolfo De la Huerta, Mexican Secretary of Finance, on his arrival here this afternoon from New York and Washington. In the latter place he held conferences with President Harding and Secretary of State Hughes. He denied emphatically statements appearing in New York papers that the Washington conferences were anything else but cordial and satisfactory.

He declared the agreements as to future operations of American oil magnates in Mexico would be presented by him personally to the Department of Industry and Labor, and then to the President, confident they also would be approved.

He declared the agrarian bonds issued on expropriated lands were satisfactory to conferees in both New York and Washington.

FLAPPERS FALL FOR LOLLYPOP

Simple Confection Tempts Modern Maids, and Candy Firm Recoups

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEWARK (N. J.) July 22.—The sudden passion for lollypops developed by flappers has proved a life saver to the Charms Company, Newark candy manufacturers, it was revealed in Federal Court today.

Receivers reported that since a year ago, when the firm was nearly defunct, it has made a profit of $44,000—all because of lollypops and flappers.

The firm bought huge stores of sugar at the high prices prevalent prior to 1921 and when prices dropped, faced bankruptcy. Receivers decided to revive the lollypop. They boiled down the sugar, flavored it, wrapped it in brightly colored paper and the flappers did the rest.

The court ordered creditors of the firm to show cause August 7, why they should not accept a settlement offer made by the company.

The company explained that the "stone tonnage" meant that there was not an available inch of cargo space left. It was one of the biggest cargoes ever taken out of the port of San Francisco, company officials said.

CANADIAN DISCOVERS TWIN SUNS

Huge, Hot and Distant Planets Revealed Through Observatory Telescope

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

VICTORIA (B. C.) July 22.—Twin suns, 52,000,000,000,000,000 miles from the earth, have been discovered by Dr. J. S. Plaskett, director of the Dominion of Canada's astrophysical observatory here through the observatory's big seventy-two-inch reflector telescope, it was announced today.

Scientists here said the discovery was one of the outstanding astronomical achievements of recent years. The suns have been named Plaskett, for their discoverer.

Dr. Plaskett has estimated that the suns burn at a temperature of 30,000 deg. Fahr. as they whirl around one another. One, the more massive, is believed to be seventy-five times the bulk of our sun. The lesser is sixty-three times heavier.

One is 15,000 times as bright as the sun, the other 12,000 times as bright. Plaskett, Dr. Plaskett estimates, is more than five times as large as any other heavenly body. Reducing the figures to moderate terms, scientists pointed out that an airplane, traveling 200 miles an hour, would require 30,000,000,000 years to travel from the earth to the newly discovered planets. Light, traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles a second, requires more than 5000 years for the passage.

The announcement of the discovery quotes Prof. Harold Jacoby, of Columbia University, as characterizing it "the most outstanding of recent astronomical discoveries" and as declaring that the measurements recorded by Dr. Plaskett must be accepted as most reliable.

DAIRYMEN MAKE MONEY

Sales for June Total More Than Previous Month; Other Tulare County News

TULARE, July 21. — Tulare's monthly dairy pay roll amounted to $101,859.64, a gain of about $18,000 over the payments in June. Business houses, banks and shops were pressed to care for the business which was augmented by the thousands of Portuguese who arrived to attend the I.D.E.S. celebration. Increase in dairy payments was caused by the higher prices for cream and milk, although the production was some less than for May.

About 5 cents more per pound was paid for June than for May marketings on bases ranging from 45 cents to 45 1-2 cents. The greater volume of business was handled by the Dairyman's Co-operative Creamery and the Los Angeles Creamery.

In the district, 410,835 pounds of butter fat were produced, considered good for the time of the year. The cottage cheese factory uses much skim milk, which heretofore had been a waste product.

INTERESTING MEETING

PORTERVILLE, July 21.—One of the most interesting meetings of the Porterville Rotary Club in the history of the organization was that at which twenty-five members told "Why I Came to Porterville," and "Why I Entered My Profession or Business." Almost as many reasons were given, proving interesting, entertaining and enlightening about the "best enterprises of the town." Other members will speak on the same topic at the next luncheon.

A weekly bulletin is to be issued under direction of Frank A. Gehring. Mynard Sherman Jones has been named as song leader for the club. Donald Jones, J. A. Milligan and Dr. H. E. Reed will have charge of future programs.

GETS HEAVY SENTENCE

TULARE, July 21. — Marion Bouman received sixty days in the County Jail and a fine of $50 when he decided to run the town. Bouman is said to have been drinking and engaged in a series of fights. When placed under arrest by Deputy Marshal J. W. Allen he decided not to go to jail and the officer was compelled to call in the aid of several by-standers before the man was subdued. Sentence was pronounced by Judge Ward G. Rush.

NEED MORE MONEY

GENERAL GRANT PARK, July 21.—All records were broken in the Yosemite National Park July 2, when 560 automobiles and 1943 people entered the Yosemite Valley.

General Grant National Park has doubled this record. On July 4, 1010 automobiles carrying 4130 people passed through the Sand Creek road checking station.

"In view of this showing it is time that Fresno and Tulare counties got behind the national park service in the effort to secure adequate appropriations for General Grant National Park," declares Col. John R. White, superintendent.

Col. White states that figures show that Chief Ranger Decker at Grant Park has less than half a cent per head to spend for providing water and sanitary conveniences for each visitor to the park. Total appropriation for the park in 1922-1923 is but $6500 and this sum must be stretched out to maintain sixteen miles of roads, several miles of water pipe, sanitation for more than 30,000 visitors this year, pay of the rangers, maintenance of telephone lines and trails.

Efforts to secure sufficient appropriation for the park have so far been unsuccessful.

FIND LEMON PEST

PORTERVILLE, July 21.—Several boxes of lemons, infested with red, scale, part of a shipment from Los Angeles county, were destroyed by Inspector Wymore. More boxes are expected to be placed in the bonfire this evening as most of the grocers in the city had received part of the shipment before the infection was discovered. The inspector is making a personal examination of every box.

An entire carload of lemons, believed to have been shipped from the same place, is being held up at Visalia, and the shippers have been instructed to move it out of the county. Tulare county citrus groves are free of red scale as yet.

DEATH CALLS RANCHER

TULARE, July 21.—J. W. Dunlap, 71, pioneer rancher of Tulare, died suddenly at his country home three miles north of Tulare, following an attack of heart trouble. Mr. Dunlap was born in Hannibal, Mo., on Nov. 24, 1850. When fifteen years of age he moved to Colusa county, California, with his parents. In 1883 he moved to Tulare, settling on his ranch north of here, where he has resided ever since.

His death occurred shortly after breakfast. He was sitting on the couch, apparently in his usual health, when he suddenly fell to the floor and passed away before medical aid could be secured.

Besides his wife he is survived by one daughter and four sons, also three sisters. Funeral arrangements will be made later.

FACE SERIOUS CHARGE

TULARE, July 21.—Trials for Lester Sanderson and Edward Kasuth, youthful Tulareans who were arrested and charged with a statutory offense, as result of an automobile party in Tulare some time ago, have been set jointly for October 5.

The prosecuting witness is a 14-year-old Tulare girl, who was found unconscious on the front porch of her home the morning following the automobile ride in question. She declared that she was given drugged wine and attacked.

Both boys entered pleas of not guilty, when arraigned before Superior Judge J. A. Allen of Visalia.

NAVY DESIGNS NEW TYPE OF SHIP PLANE

TESTS SHOW CRAFT EQUAL TO LAND MACHINES AND ADAPTED TO SEA

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The naval bureau of aeronautics is developing a ship plane for combat and pursuit in conjunction with fleet operations which from tests now being conducted gives promise of equalling any land plane in general use by the Army or Navy for combat purposes in addition to its being adapted to ship use, the Navy Department announced today. The plan was designed by the Navy, built at the naval air craft factory at Philadelphia and is undergoing further tests at the Anacostia air station. Another plan of similar design recently was completed by the Curtiss Company at Garden City, L. I., ad shortly will be flown to Anacostia for tests.

The new type has been designated the TS and was built to meet these requirements of combat: best performance, greatest radius of action, smallest dimensions and best adapted to handling and stowage on shipboard and operation from a ship or airdome. The TS type is speedy, is easily maneuvered and, while strong, is lightly constructed.

A new peace plan is submitted to President Harding and mine-workers' leaders by John F. Durkan, mayor of Scranton, Pa.

Government agencies take steps to effect emergency distribution of fuel to railways and public utilities in need.

Federal survey of strike situation gives 610,000 miners on strike and 185,000 still at work.

Michigan officials report coal shortage becoming more acute with supplies at several State institutions pracically exhausted.

London reports heavy demand for ships to transport English coal to the United States.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Another effort to bring about a conference settlement of the national coal controversy was suggested to President Harding today by Mayor John F. Durkan of Scranton, one of the five mayors of anthracite cities in Pennsylvania who have tendered their services to the administration in the interests of conciliation.

Immediately after presentation to President Harding of his plan for settlement of the strike in the anthracite fields, Mr. Durkan wired John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, with whom he previously had discussed the possibility of peace, inviting the union leader to meet with the five mayors in Scranton or New York, the first of the week.

KEEPS PLAN SECRET

Mr. Durkan would not disclose the plan of settlement which the mayors laid before Mr. Harding, but declared that while their interest lay mainly in the anthracite problem, should the bituminous dispute be inseparably linked with the hard coal situation, both branches of the industry would be discussed at the proposed conference.

Formation of the President's arbitration commission was understood to be nearing completion and it was thought the announcement of its personnel would be made before the expiration of the ten days or two weeks during which it has been indicated the administration will await the results of the invitation to operators to resume production.

Meanwhile various agencies of the government are combining to effect emergency distribution of fuel to railroads, public utilities and localities in need. Atty.-Gen. Daugherty spent the day preparing a report to Secretary Hoover on legal aspects of the plan for using local committees in the producing fields, working under a central committee of Federal officials, to pool and distribute coal by means of rail priorities and to check undue price advances.

PREPARES FOR CONFERENCE

The Attorney-General's opinion is expected tomorrow and Mr. Hoover went ahead today with preparations for a conference with some thirty or forty operators from the producing fields on Monday, when the plans will be discussed and administrative aids to the central committee selected.

Mr. Hoover's program is aimed at giving the country the full benefit of the present bituminous production in the face of a rapidly dwindling coal supply and active mine force. According to a survey issued tonight by Secretary Davis, 610,000 miners are now out on strike and 185,000 are still at work.

The policy of the administration to go slow in the assignment of Federal troops to guard duty in the mine fields was indicated today by Secretary Weeks, who stated that except at the request of State governors, troops would be detailed only after a survey of the situation in a troubled district.

THEY'RE NOT GRASSHOPPERS

Mysterious Glacier "Bug" Declared Ancient and Extinct Insect

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LIVINGSTON (Mont.) July 22.—Insects, buried for thousands of years in a glacier in Yellowstone Park, known as Grasshopper Glacier, are not grasshoppers at all, but an unclassified insect now entirely extinct, according to William C. Alden, expert in glacial geology for the United States government, who has just completed an extensive investigation in the Yellowstone.

Specimens of the ancient insect, found by millions on Grasshopper Glacier, will be taken to Washington, D. C., for further investigation and scientific classification.

According to Dr. Alden, the insects may be plainly seen in the ice. When their bodies are removed to the air, they immediately disintegrate and turn to dust.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA FIRM TO REORGANIZE

EDISON COMPANY WILL ISSUE PREFERRED STOCK FOR DEVELOPMENT

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 22.—A permit to reclassify its stock in accordance with plans recently published was granted the Southern California Edison Company today by the State Railroad Commission. The plans call for the issuance of $9,500,000 of 7 per cent cumulative, nonparticipating, preferred stock to retire outstanding stock and for development work. A meeting of the stockholders, called for August 1, next, is expected to ratify the proposed changes.

According to the commission, $12,029,900 of the company's second preferred is owned by H. E. Huntington, who has agreed to sell it back to the corporation for $9,458,221, or approximately $78 a share. Huntington has agreed to take $4,000,000 of the new preferred stock and will receive the balance of approximately $5,500,000 in cash. This amount the company hopes to realize from the sale of common stock and $2,000,000 of the new preferred issue.

The commission refers to the reclassification as the erection of a new financial structure by the company and believes that the company should "be able to effect substantial savings" as a result. The privilege of permitting the company to dispose of preferred stock gives it a new avenue of income, the commission said.

JUDGES HUSTLE TO RECEIVE PAY CHECKS

DOCKET OF STATE SUPREME COURT IS CLEARED IN TIME PRESCRIBED

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 22.—The justices of the Supreme Court of California will be able to draw their salaries for the first time within several months as a result of having decided every case submitted within the past ninety days, it was announced by the court officers. The court issued a statement on the situation today, omitting, however, the salary feature.

The court is bound by a law directing that it must decide each case within a period of ninety days from submission or have the pay of the justices suspended until the case is decided. Due to the great volume of business the court has frequently been unable to meet the dictates of the law, and the salaries have been held up as a result.

The clearing up of cases within the limits set by the law is due not only to the industry of the justices of the Supreme Court, but also to the present practice, which is being generally followed, of transferring appeal cases from the Supreme Court to the various District Courts of Appeal.

SAILING FOOL, CALIFORNIA, COPS "TIMES" TROPHY

Frank Garbutt's New R Boat Shows Saucy Rudder to Four Other Fast Sloops at Harbor

BY ED O'MALLEY

Vive La California and Master Frank Garbutt! The two proved a combination yesterday afternoon in the fluted waters of the Pacific off the San Pedro breakwater that nothing in the way of canvas-pressed boats could ever hope to cope with. The new R boat California simply walked away with the Los Angeles Times challenge trophy for sloops, outfooting four others of her ilk in hollow fashion. The race was an eighteen-mile spin.

The last word in sailing celerity is a cross between Man 'O War and a frightened greyhound. She is built on slim lines and when in full career raises her knife-like prow to the height of a flapper's skirt. Believe us, ye jolly jack tars, that this wave cutter of the Alden design can shake a saucy rudder at anything of its size and heft in this wide waste of the Pacific waters.

Just before starting for the judge's boat, Garbutt, with malice prepense in his eyes, scurried past the Los Angeles Yacht Club at the helm of the California, evidently to get some one's goat. As the new R boat shot along like an inspired phantom, Paul Jeffers got a glimpse of her and quietly burbled to the skipper of the Jubilo "that baby can sure plow some and she should go some this afternoon."

FASHIONABLY LATE

The start was scheduled for 12:30 p.m., but the Wasp, skippered by Paul Jeffers, wishing to show her new gowns, made it a first nighter and was fashionably late. Dr. Eisen, acting in the double capacity of chairman of the regatta committee, and judge, therefore yodeled through the megaphone "start postponed until 1 o'clock." Promptly at the appointed hour the sloops fiddled around the judges' boat at the end of the San Pedro breakwater. Just as the doctor was about to fire the warning gun, an apparition in the form of the Detroit hissed out of the ocean as if it had come from "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

At the tiller stood Skipper Laplante looking like a veritable Capt. Bunsby. He signified his willingness for a try at the cup and Dr. Eisen most graciously gave his consent. The warning gun was fired at 12:55 p.m. and at 1 o'clock sharp, the starting gun exploded.

DETROIT FIRST

The Detroit poked her snout over the line first attended by Mischief I. A few moments later came the Vite chaperoned by the California with the belated Wasp last. A ten-mile wind was fanning along about this time over a slightly choppy sea. The Detroit swung close to the breakwater, but soon tacked about.

Suddenly, the young giant California, probably prodded by Neptune's trident, fairly leaped out of the water and snapped at the Detroit. In the twinkling of a bedpost the new R flashed by the leader as if the latter were in the doldrums. That redoubtable old sea dog Matt Walsh was at the stick of the California and when he stepped on the accelerator she tore away for her playmates as if they were tied and quickly began the play of solitaire.

INCREASES LEAD

All down the breakwater and along the rocky reaches of Point Fermin the new wonder gradually increased her advantage until opposite the Palos Verdes Hills she was at least a mile and a half in front of the Vite, who held the Wasp and Detroit by good margins. Lubbering along, far in the rear, handicapped by an engine and propeller that had recently been built in her, sloshed the Mischief I seemingly waterlogged.

Just before reaching the Point Vincente turning buoy, Skipper Paul Jeffers of the Wasp ran far out to sea hoping to get a propitious push from Aeolus, but the god was not in that frame of mood and Paul was the loser. The California rounded the buoy for the run homeward about fifteen minutes ahead of the Vite, with the Wasp third, Detroit fourth and Mischief I last. Here was the crucial test for the newcomer.

HOLDS HER OWN

From the press boat it appeared as if the California held her own well, but Skipper Jeffers avowed after the race, that the Vite gained five minutes and the Wasp three on the winner down the homestretch. As the wind never attained more than a twenty-mile velocity it would appear, according to Skipper Jeffers, that the California would be "on her pretties" only in a light or medium wind and that had there been a spanking breeze a different tale might have been told.

However, old Man O'War went on about his business as valiantly as ever, crossing the winning line about ten minutes ahead of the Vite. About seven minutes later the Wasp followed the Vite. The Mischief finished fourth and the Detroit last, many minutes behind.

OFFICIAL TIME

The official placing and time follows: California, first, elapsed time, 3-46-12, corrected time 3-23-44. Wasp, second, elapsed time 4-3-2, corrected time 3-43-46. Vite, third, 355-31, corrected time 3-46-35. Mischief I, fourth, 4-18-14. The Detroit, fifth, 4-31-33.

The following was the official handicap: Mischief I, scratch; Vite, 8m. 56s.; Wasp, 18m. 16s.; California, 22m. 39s.

The California was skippered by Mat Walsh; Wasp, by Paul Jeffers; Vite by Owen Churchill; Mischief I by Charles Maddock, and the Detroit by Bill Laplante.

POOR DICKSON

The judges' boat, the Jubilo, was skippered by J. T. Dickson, who, in a luckless moment, gallantly tendered his services as host to three of the skippers' wives. The ladies sat close to the tiller and during the long hours of racing, ran the gamut of life's story from moving-picture queens to the latest sartorial hints from Paris, and poor Dickson, willy-nilly, without a pinch of ear cotton on board, fell a martyr to a noble cause. A "man overboard" might have given him a loophole of escape, but nary a gentleman present volunteered his services.

TILDEN CINCHES ANOTHER TITLE

Champ Humbles Williams at Brookline Nets

Philadelphian Wins Leg on Longwood Bowl

Bettens and Fisher Defeated in Doubles Play

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BROOKLIN (Mass.) July 22. Masterful in every detail was the tennis display which William T. Tilden II of Philadelphia set off at the expense of R. Norris Williams II of Boston in the final round of the Longwood bowl singles at Chestnut Hill this afternoon. The national champion raced through his 1921 Davis cup team mate and Williams's portion was the short end of 6-1, 6-2, 7-5 sets.

In the doubles final Tilden frequently acted in the role of a spectator, as his partner, Wallace F. Johnson of Philadelphia was the target, but his team-made had sufficient power and steadiness to overcome the youthful Phillip Bettens of San Francisco and Carl Fischer of Philadelphia 6-1, 8-6, 5-7, 6-0.

CHAMP AT TOP OF GAME

Seldom has Boston been treated to a better exhibition of lawn tennis than Tilden and Williams uncovered in their singles match. The elongated Philadelphian was at the very top of his brilliant game, yet, it was a "flub" of the easiest sort of a "sitter" that cost Williams a chance to carry the match to four sets. Leading at 5-2, third session, Williams ran into a lead of 15-40 on Tilden's service, only to hear the call of "deuce" when he missed the range on two sizzling volleys. Even then Williams again had the set in the hollow of his hand when Tilden made an error, for on the next point he sent the ball down into a corner and Tilden did well to get it back. The whole court was open and Williams was in position to clinch the set. But the Longwood man imagined that the linesman had called "out" on his brilliant stroke and his half-hearted return found the strings.

Along about that time Tilden seemed to be willing to conserve enough energy for a fourth set, for the prospect of pulling out the set from a 2-5 stage was not encouraging. When Williams's error brought the game to deuce again, Tilden suddenly became a human dynamo. He rushed things with a fury, produced a placement and forced Williams into an error and the games were 3-5 with Tilden trailing. Then Williams dropped his service at "30" and thereafter Tilden lost a single point—a netted return of service in the eleventh game.

WILLIAMS SMOTHERED

Williams played excellent tennis, but Tilden simply smothered him. Three times in the fifth game of the opening set Tilden netted Williams's service and these errors enabled the former national title-holders to capture his only game of the first set. Even that game was carried to deuce.

In the second set Tilden ran into a 3-1 lead on a "break" in the fourth game, but Williams retaliated by taking Tilden's service at love. Williams then clicked off four more successive points—making eight in a row—the last two being cleverly placed service shots for clean aces. Followed a sequence of three games and the set for Tilden from the three-all stage.

Williams was superb when the third set opened, for he won the first game at love and quickly ran into a lead of 3-1 and 5-2, but even that margin was of no avail against the inspired Tilden.

Tilden played largely from the base line, his incursions to the barrier being widely separated. He knows from experience where it is best to place the ball to force Williams into error and his control was so perfect that he had no trouble in keeping full command of the situation.

FRIENDLY DOUBLES MATCH

This was the first time that Tilden has ever played a singles tournament in this city. He earned the right to have his name engraved under that of William M. Johnston of San Francisco on the eighth Longwood bowl. It was Williams's fourth attempt to win a leg on the bowl, but in previous challenge round matches he had lost to Californians—to McLoughlin in 1915 and to Johnston on two subsequent occasions.

Today's doubles match was a friendly, jolly affair. The players delighted the capacity throng with their brilliant exchanges, but in the end it was Johnson's steadiness that turned the tide. The Tilden-Johnson team had to play fourteen games to win the second set. In the third the score was 5-6 in games and 15-40 on points, with Tilden serving. He unleashed two aces to deuce the game, but Bettens and Fisher pulled it out after all.

POLISHED OFF YOUTHS

There was no rest after the third set, as ominous clouds loomed and Tilden and Johnson, fearing a postponement, polished off their young rivals in a love set. Bettens was the steadier player on his side. Fischer was the more spectacular, but he frequently lapsed into error. By their victory today Tilden and Johnson keep their slate clean. They never have been beaten together in doubles.

NO OFFER YET

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

OAKLAND, July 22.—William H. Klepper, president of the Portland Club, whom Commissioner Landis barred out of organized baseball, said while attending yesterday's game here that he did not talk with Frank Chance while in Southern California about Chance and Orval Overall buying the Portland Club. Klepper said no one had yet shown him any money.

SPORT SHRAPNEL
By
HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

William Klepper, president and principal owner of the Portland club, will be deposed as a director of the Pacific Coast League.

This, on the face of informal returns, appears to be the only possible forecast of action which will be taken at a special meeting of the league to be held on August 1.

Such action will not represent the personal attitude of a majority of the club owners against Klepper. These feel that they are coerced into it by conditions. They believe that it is a question of sustaining the drastic Landis decision or of having the Coast League outlawed. This, they feel, would handicap the league and not benefit Klepper. In short, it might work to his immediate disadvantage, as he has a couple of young players he is desirous of selling. With the league outlawed, there would be no buying and selling between it and the majors.

As to the right or wrong of the case, there probably is not a club owner in the country who does not feel that the penalty was entirely too severe and wholly beyond the pale of the law. In the East, writers are likening the punishment meted out to the Portland magnate to "being burned in oil."

Klepper or any other one man is merely an incident in baseball, although in this case it is a tragic incident; but back of the punishment and its appalling injustice is a deep, underlying, lasting principle which will some time recoil with destroying force.

Attorney Moser has been serving as active head of the Portland club and may succeed Klepper as a director of the league.

In what manner Klepper will dispose of his holdings cannot even be predicted. However, if an attempt is made to dispossess him, it probably will mean a long and bitter fight in the Federal courts.

Even Klepper's warmest friends among the club owners believe he will be deposed as a director. There is said to be a less friendly element favoring the extreme penalty as already pronounced.

There are rumors of veiled threats to forfeit the Portland club and move it to San Francisco so as to provide that city with continuous baseball. This would mean the ruin of J. Cal Ewing and the Oakland club just across the bay. I can place no credence in this report. In the first place it would be impracticable, because isolating Seattle in the Northwest. In the second place it would be an act of piracy, something of which real sportsmen are incapable.

Teddy Hayes, trainer for Jack Dempsey, is reported to be in Los Angeles with a message of some sort for Willard. When apprised of this, Jess remarked that he was prepared to receive no messages from the champion's trainer. Says he is dealing direct with Tex Rickard and that Dempsey should go and do likewise.

Rickard, according to New York advices, has tentatively scheduled the Dempsey-Willard battle for September. Dempsey has, as far as known, offered no objections to this rather early date. Willard feels it is crowding him a bit. He wanted at least three full months of training, and preferably four.

Kearns and Dempsey recently declared Willard the most dangerous opponent in the world for the champion. No objections from them apparently for an early fight with the latter. Their articles with Wills call for a fight "some time within a year," which is delaying matters as far as possible and still doing business. Willard not fully trained and Wills a year older would be easier to crack. However, picking them, if possible, when softest is part of the game, and to consent to take on Willard and Wills within the same year is all that could be asked of any champion. In fact, there could be no criticism were two such presumably formidable opponents sprinkled through eighteen months or two years with the set-ups sandwiched in between.

Still somehow there lingers with us that original doubt that Wills and Dempsey will ever meet. The champion showed no inclination to sign with the big challenger, yielding only to the pressure of public opinion in general and the threats of the New York Boxing Commission in particular.

It is predicted that within the next few months there will be much subtle propaganda to bring the match into disrepute and create adverse sentiment, particularly by playing on race prejudice. Just as safe as playing on a powder keg with Roman candles.

Recently at a boxing show there was a colored individual sitting not a vast distance from the ring during a mixed match. He was rather loudly abusive in his remarks directed at the white fighter. This is very unusual. I have witnessed many mixed matches, and nine times out of ten the abusive remarks came from the other side of the house. In fact, the disturber in this particular instance was so insistent and at such pains to make himself disagreeable as to suggest that he may have been "ribbed up" or "planted" for the express purpose of making his kind obnoxious.

Keep cool under the collar, brother. Remember that neither one loud-mouth negro nor one yawpping white is representative of his race, or that great majority who believe in a fair field with no favors, and that the only aristocracy of the ring is the aristocracy of achievement. Riots are ruinous. Likewise, brethren, refuse to fight unless well paid for it, and to that extent be a champion.

'Nother reason why there may be no Dempsey-Wills fight. Mistah Wills is booked to battle lil' Tut Jackson fifteen rounds in Brooklyn on August 8. Tut has stiffened fifty-two opponents in fifty-three starts, and there might not be anything of Mistah Wills left to quarrel over. Jack Johnson failed to post forfeit money for his match with Jackson, with result it was called off. Whether Jack is broke or simply regarded Jackson too big, young and tough is a question. Should either Wills or Jackson win decisively, said cullud genman will be regarded as extremely dangerous. A draw merely would further "cloud" up the heavyweight situation.

Local Dentist Triumphs in Dental Association Shoot at Vernon Gun Club Traps

The National Dental Association held its annual trapshooting championship tournament at the Vernon Gun Club grounds yesterday, with Dr. L. M. Packard coming out the winner by many birds. Dr. Packard is a local dentist and for years has been one of the best trapshooters on the Pacific Coast. Wherever tournament was in progress Dr. Packard was either a winner in some event or a very dangerous contender.

PAIR SETS PACE

Three different events made up yesterday's title shoot, the first at 50 targets from 16 yards. Dr. Packard proceeded to break 48. The other dentists strangled many birds in the rear. Packard's score was bested by a bird by Don Morrison and E. Nutting, two local shooters, who were doing their stuff "just for fun."

Twenty-five birds at distance handicap was the next shoot on the bill in it. Dr. Packard scored 24 kills from 21 yards. Dr. Johnson was but one bird behind this score. The difference, however, came up in yards, Packard was at 19 yards, while Johnson pulled his trigger at 16 yards.

SHATTERS NINETEEN

The third and final event was the doubles shoot at 13 pairs. Again Packard showed the championship stuff and broke 19 targets. He was not pressed by the other contending dentists.

His total score of work in the three events was 91x100. That is a good piece of work for one shooter all in one day at three different days of shooting.

Today, the Vernon traps are expected to be well-crowded when a registered club tournament at 100 targets is held for American Association and Vernon take home trophies.

NEW YORK, July 22.—Johnny Weismuller of the Illinois Athletic Club, Chicago, easily won the national A. A. U. 440-yard open-water swim today in a field of five at Brighton Beach, but failed to equal the record of 5m. 7 4-5s. he recently established at Honolulu. Weismuller finished fifty yards ahead of the field in 5m. 16 1-10s.

Thomas Blake, Los Angeles, new American long-distance champion, was second, fifteen yards ahead of Lee Jarvin, Dallas, Tex., southern champion, who barely defeated James Hall, Brooklyn, former long-distance champion for third place.

Weismuller dove into the lead and constantly drew away from the field on the 110-yard course, reaching the half-way mark fifteen yards ahead of Jarvin, who began to fall back before the challenge of Blake. The winner swam without exertion and finished in good shape.

July 22.—Miss Leslie Bancroft of West Newton, Mass., defeated Miss Helen Wills of San Francisco, national girls' tennis champion, 7-5, 6-2, yesterday in the third-round match of the invitation tournament at the Field club. Misses Mungen and Grieve Cop Tennis Laurels

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DENVER, July 22.—Playing a brilliant net game and placing their shots spectacularly, Miss Grace Mungen and Miss Jessie Grieve of Los Angeles won the women's doubles tennis championship of Denver today by defeating the Meyer sisters, Annette and Mae, in a spectacular match at the City Park courts, 7-5, 0-6 and 6-1.

Especially brilliant was the play of Miss Grieve, her serve and clever back hand strokes being her best assets. Miss Mungen's shots were less accurate but nevertheless she played a brilliant game. The first set was hard fought, with Miss Mungen and her partner usually proving victorious on their own serves. The second set proved a complete reversal in which the local girls outplayed their rivals from every point. The first strenuous set told on the visitors. Frequently the Meyer sisters forced the visitors to the net, then driving he ball back of them for well-earned points.

At the completion of the second set the Meyer sisters drew a hearty round of applause but were practically helpless before the Californians in the final games. Miss Grieve's best shot was an underhand lob and she used it to advantage in this set. It had a terrific cut that completely baffled the Meyer girls, causing them to miss their swings altogether several times. The visitors took the first five games of the final set and the locals the next. The final went to deuce and when Mae Meyer shot the last volley at the net the greatest women's championship ever played on a local court ended. The Californians left Denver last evening, defaulting in the mixed doubles.

> Los Angeles yesterday tied Oakland's old winning streak. At the start of the 1912 season, the only year in which the Oaks won a flag in the history of modern baseball, they got away to a flying start with thirteen straight wins from opening day. Whether the same sort of achievement in midsummer will bring similar results remains to be seen. Oakland's thirteen straight put the Oaks away out in front. Thirteen straight by the Angels merely has aided them in catching up.

PLUCK PROVED ENOUGH TO WIN

Girl Captured Automobile in Former Campaign

Tells How Profitable Her "Times" Work Was

Only Matter of Going Ahead, She Advises Others

The same courage and ambition that won beautiful prizes in a campaign conducted by The Times in 1915, is being displayed daily in The Times $70,000 campaign that now has all Southern California in a fervor of enthusiasm.

Miss Florence Ruether, who is now Mrs. George Buehn of Artesia, was one of the winning candidates in The Times Automobile campaign in 1915. Although a very young girl at the time, she stood third in the list of winners and was awarded a beautiful Apperson automobile.

In looking back upon her experiences in that former campaign, Mrs. Buehn insisted she had nothing to say that would be interesting; that the one quality that had carried her through to success was pluck—the common heritage of all candidates.

"It was just a matter of going after subscriptions every day," she protested, "and that is all there was to it. I'd made up my mind to win a car. Father let me drive his and I had a pony, too; but I wanted a machine of my own. I just went after it.

FRIENDS HELPED

"You see, I knew a great many people around here, in Long Beach and in Los Angeles—I never spared anybody! My friends knew lots of people, too, and that helped. They'd pass me along from friend to friend—sometimes it seemed like an endless chain.

"I learned a good many lessons in that campaign—some of them I shall never forget. Have you ever noticed how people tell their troubles to strangers? I think it's very funny, but they do. I learned to be a good listener—it's a valuable asset! And the jolly part of it was that the longer the tale of woe, the bigger the subscription. I used to tell mother about it at night and we'd laugh together. Most of their troubles were imaginary. I got a big lesson out of it. It taught me not to take my troubles too seriously and not to tell them to strangers.

"I learned another thing that might help some candidate: I learned to keep going. It's easy enough to start things, but it takes will to finish.

"I made friends, too. It was an enjoyable experience from beginning to end.

IT WAS BUSINESS

"Did anybody ask me to put up money to win? Goodness, no! It was to build circulation for The Times and I knew it. My father was in business and we knew what it was for, of course. I was very young, but I knew a little about business myself. It was pure business with me, too. I wanted a car; The Times wanted more subscribers. Of course, people tried to discourage me. It's always that way when you try to do something. It's so much easier for some people to say: 'You can't do it,' than to say, 'Stick to it, and you'll win.' I knew if I ever listened to them, I'd quit in the middle of the race.

"My father took my last subscriptions into Los Angeles the day the campaign closed. I'd gathered up all I could the day before and didn't worry after that. I knew I was ahead—at least I felt pretty sure of it.

"I was the proudest girl in California the day I got that car. It was just beautiful to me. And it was mine!

"That campaign was a great experience for me—you see, I wasn't 17. Most of the time I rode my pony. He knew every front gate between here and Long Beach. That was about all that the Apperson car cost me—shoes for my pony."

Taxi Head Resigns Office After Wrangle

As a sequel to the fight, which has been raging for some time among the directors of the Yellow Taxi Company, Dick Ferris has resigned as president of the organization. The action was taken last Friday evening at a special meeting which was called, Mr. Ferris says, for the purpose of obtaining his resignation. This is denied by Harry Lieb, newly elected president of the company.

Mr. Ferris has stated that he resigned when he was informed that the president's salary was to be eliminated. Mr. Lieb's statement declared that the salary was eliminated by the vote of the majority of the directors of the company. It also declared that most of the stockholders favored the action.

Mr. Ferris has been active president of the taxi company for several years. Recently the directors became involved in a legal battle which was finally ended with Mr. Ferris's re-election as president. Because of lack of sympathy for his policies on the part of other directors, Mr. Ferris declared that he has been little more than a figurehead for some time.

ACHING CORNS EASILY REMOVED

How Anybody Can End Tortures of Corns and Callouses at Once.

Many an otherwise pleasant hour is made agony by the aching and stinging of corns. These painful growths interfere with walking, dancing and other pastimes and have a bad effect on the nerves.

This suffering, however, is needless. All drug stores have now a "paint" which stops the pain of corns and callouses almost at once and causes them to soon dry up and fall off. It is called Cactus Corn Compound.

A small bottle of Cactus Corn Compound relieves dozens of corns. If your druggist hasn't it, send his name and 35c to the Cactus Remedy Co., Kansas City, Mo., for a bottle prepaid to you.—[Advertisement.

ASPIRIN

Say "Bayer" and Insist!

BAYER

Unless you see the name "Bayer" on package or on tablets you are not getting the genuine Bayer product prescribed by physicians over twenty-two years and proved safe by millions for

Colds	Headache
Toothache	Lumbago
Earache	Rheumatism
Neuralgia	Pain, Pain

Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proper directions. Handy boxes of twelve tablets cost few cents. Druggists also sell bottles of 24 and 100. Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid.—[Advertisement.

Careless Shampooing Spoils the Hair

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than anything else you can use.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a cup or glass with a little warm water is sufficient to cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.—[Advertisement.

Beauty Culture Hints

There is real common sense in just noticing whether the hair is well kept to judge of a woman's neatness, or good taste. If you are one of the few who try to make the most of your hair, remember that it is not advisable to wash the hair with any cleanser made for all purposes, but always use some good shampoo. You can enjoy the very best by getting some canthrox from your druggist, dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water. This makes a full cup of shampoo liquid, enough so it is easy to apply it to all the hair instead of just the top of the head. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its luster and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth.—[Advertisement.

GIRLS! LEMONS BLEACH FRECKLES AND WHITEN SKIN

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle and tan bleach and complexion whitener.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles and blemishes bleach out and how clear, soft and rosy-white the skin becomes.—[Advertisement.

NEW STORY OF MURDER TOLD

Eyewitness Reveals Further Incidents

Clara Threatened Victim, She Asserts

Latest Evidence Had Been Kept from Jury

One more threat, said to have been made by Clara Phillips before the murder of Alberta Tremaine Meadows, with which she is charged, was told to Frank Dewar, deputy sheriff, yesterday by Peggy Caffee, only eyewitness to the crime.

"You ———, I'm going to kill you."

Mad and with profane language, Mrs. Phillips threatened the potential victim, clutching her around the neck, according to Peggy Caffee.

This story of the incidents leading up to the killing was revealed for the first time yesterday when Peggy told it to Mr. Dewar. When asked by the deputy why she hadn't told the grand jury about the threat she accuses Mrs. Phillips of making, she said, "I didn't have the heart to use the profane language."

M. D. Caffee, husband of the eyewitness, stated yesterday he had met Mrs. Phillips only once and had never become acquainted with A. L. Phillips, husband of the woman charged with murder.

AFFECTED BY STRAIN

Mr. and Mrs. Caffee, accompanied by Mrs. Caffee's brother, John O'Neill of Philadelphia, returned to their apartments in Long Beach at 11 p.m. Friday.

"No. We haven't been dodging newspaper men, but I can't figure out how you found us," Mr. Caffee told a Times reporter. "The worry and strain have borne down heavily upon my wife and we have been out riding with some friends getting her mind off the case. She will be here at the time of the trial and until that time either myself or her brother will be with her for her protection."

Peggy Caffee, accompanied by her brother and husband, was escorted to Dep. Dist.-Atty. William C. Doran's office yesterday morning for further questioning. Shortly afterwards she was officially placed under the care of a bodyguard by Undersheriff Biscailuz. Miss Ines Clampitt will be the eyewitness's constant companion through Monday when a woman deputy sheriff will be detailed to look after Peggy.

STRIKINGLY DRESSED

Mrs. Caffee arrived at Mr. Doran's office a few minutes after 11 a.m. Attired in a tailored suit of black, a modish veil and a light lavender hat, trimmed with a plum of same color, she made a striking appearance as she walked down the narrow hallway of the District Attorney's office.

Mr. Doran, Deputy Sheriffs Nolan and Dewar and Undersheriff Biscailuz took part in the conference with Mrs. Caffee. The conference lasted a half hour.

Following the woman's departure to the Sheriff's office, Mr. Doran announced that the witness expressed herself pleased with the arrangements to have a woman guard with her. "Mrs. Caffee was satisfied in every way," Mr. Doran announced. "She discussed with us everything we wanted to know and answered all questions."

The witness, according to Undersheriff Biscailuz, volunteered to tell of any details that may have escaped her memory in the grand jury testimony. Asked about the gun, the purchase of which by Mrs. Clara Phillips was uncovered by The Times, Mrs. Caffee said she knew nothing about it.

RUNS AMUCK WITH AUTO

Wealthy Long Beach Youth Smashes Three Other Cars in Quick Succession, Then Disappears

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, July 22.—The gay and giddy career of Fred Rogers, youthful son of wealth living in Long Beach, crashed head-on against the law again yesterday afternoon when his automobile smashed into three other cars in quick succession. Immediately young Rogers, abandoning his own machine, which was badly battered, disappeared in the near-by fields. Members of the Sheriff's office searched for him in vain.

The accidents occurred in Los Angeles Boulevard, about three miles north of Los Cerritos. Speeding south, with Miss Francis Woodard of 1022 South Hill street, sitting beside him, Rogers drove his car onto a long, narrow bridge over which several other machines were passing. He scarcely slackened speed, according to eyewitnesses.

Instantly things began to happen. The first car to be hit was one driven by W. E. Smith of 2105 East Ocean avenue, Long Beach. The latter's wife received injuries of the right arm, while a Mrs. Edward Brown of Seattle, who was sitting in the rear seat with her husband, suffered a gash in her forehead.

From the Smith car the machine of Rogers caromed against a heavy automobile piloted by J. A. Braught of the Hayward. Then it battered against the car of M. L. Robertson, 1201 Molino avenue.

All of these machines were badly smashed. There were several occupants in each of them, but the extent of their injuries could not be learned because they hurried away for first-aid treatment.

Rogers's companion, Miss Woodard, did not escape unhurt in the series of smash-ups. Suffering from a gash in her cheek, she was taken to the Los Cerritos home of her sister, Mrs. W. H. Meyers, wife of "America's tiniest millionaire." There Mrs. Meyers sought to guard her from investigators trying to learn details of the accident.

Meanwhile Rogers had fled. Deputy sheriffs examining the wreck of his erstwhile handsome machine, declare they found three bottles of whisky in the car. Then they set out to locate the owner.

It was only a few months ago that Rogers got into a similar scrape. On that occasion, too, liquor was discovered in his automobile. He was given a ten days' suspended sentence.

UNION LEADER LOSES FAITH

members of our organizations who believe that it is better to fight, even if you go down, than not to fight at all.

DAMPEN ENTHUSIASM

"They are entitled to their opinions, but the march of events in industries where they have fought and where they have been ultimately compelled to admit defeat, does not show that the financial, numerical or moral strength of such organizations is any better than that of the unions which, under economic duress, have accepted wage reductions."

The tendency of the British worker to accept wage reductions with such grace as may be possible is further emphasized by more remarks of Mr. Gosling, who fully believes that the days of wage inflation were due to war causes and that wage deflation, therefore, must come now if the worker is to have employment.

These statements from this particular man have been cold water upon the enthusiasm of all those labor leaders who declared that the war had given a new wage standard which would have to be maintained willy nilly by employers through the long days of the future.

"We are faced, as all trades unions are, with further applications on the part of the employers for still more wage reductions," Mr. Gosling went on, carefully.

"It may be estimated that since the end of 1920 the working class, of whom large numbers are not employed, have through those who are employed, sustained a collective wage reduction of £500,000,000 per year (which would approach $2,500,000,000 in American money) and this in spite of the fact that the government has made no effort to reduce the interest rate on the £8,000,000,000 which is the present war indebtedness.

ENGLAND GASPS

"The nation today is paying roughly £400,000,000 on the various war loans, which, in the main, were war-time profits made out of the sacrifices of the working people.

"Strikes will not help this situation.

"There never has been, however, a time more favorable than today for the workers to make the most effective demonstration at the ballot box, and I for one hope for ultimate triumph there.

"The ballot box must be the weapon of the worker of today."

The abandonment of the strike weapon by a man as eminent in the labor movement as Mr. Gosling has left England gasping, workers and employers alike.

It is significant to note in this connection that the vote of the engineers (machinists) to go back to work, the other day, despite the fact that most of their important demands had not been granted, was almost two to one in favor of return, or, exactly, in the proportion of seventy-five to thirty-nine.

The agreement greatly favors the employers, for they only agree to put the men back at work "as and when they can."

The National Union of Foundrymen accepted exactly similar terms a little later, and this was followed by forty-six other unions. As I write, the only union holding out is that of the boiler makers.

The great labor disagreement which this comes to an end lasted almost exactly three months, affected almost 500,000 men, and cost the unions in benefits paid to the idle men three-quarters of a million pounds, or, roughly, $3,750,000.

TESTED UNION STRENGTH

The quarrel was a great test of union strength, for it did not concern wages, but had to do with the employers' right to use certain types of semiskilled labor upon new kinds of machinery, and to call for overtime work at the discretion of the management.

Before the mills were closed, the employers had the hardihood to draw up a memorandum defining and limiting the functions of the union, and the end of the lockout on the employers' terms necessarily means the acceptance of that memorandum.

Here was an extraordinarily interesting case, as it represented not only the defiance of the unions by the employers, but the defiance of their own leaders by the workers.

Their leaders advised them to accept the memorandum, but the men would not.

The end of the great quarrel will have an immense effect upon English national prosperity, it is believed.

Resumption of business along the Tyne will revive the whole nation in some degree and that large measure of unemployment due to but not directly connected with the lockout will greatly decrease.

Already the lessening of unemployment affects directly 30,000 persons not associated with any trades union dispute—and things are looking up in England.

The number of those on short-time throughout the country also has been materially decreased.

But what will be the ultimate effect upon the labor unions?

Every union man and a large part of the public is now asking that momentous question.

Mr. J. R. Clynes, M. P., regarded as the best thinker in the ranks of labor, and the one man who did more than any other to keep labor and the government in co-operation during the war, is almost as sensationally frank as Mr. Gosling in what he says to British trades union members.

HAMPERED BY POLITICS

He believes that the weakness of the unions which leads them to starting many fights which never should begin and which must lose, and which leads them to defeat in some which might be won if better managed, is due to the lack of intelligence among those at the top in union organizations.

This is a frank and rather awful statement for any man who, like Mr. Clynes, must more or less depend upon trades union support for the rounding out of a career which, up to date, has been singularly useful to his country and satisfactory to himself.

He complains of politics within the unions which makes it possible for some to devote their whole attention to attacks upon officials who, in fact, are doing quite their best.

Experienced leaders who might win battles are, he says, through the efforts of such men, robbed of authority and confidence and therefore find themselves unable to deal competently with employers.

It is his belief that the unions cannot gain their rights until their leaders are given real power which cannot be taken from them by the plots of petty politicians in the unions seeking for their own advantage.

SOCIALISTS LOSING OUT

Socialism is losing much of the tremendous hold it had here for a while as the result of the Russian and German propaganda and the disease of workers after the war.

The Second Socialist International has just come to an end in London, and was a peaceful, almost pink-tea affair—obviously for the reason that its leaders saw that nothing else would be acceptable to the British delegates.

Arthur Henderson, who was in the chair, looked down upon a snug and well-fed gathering, which did not show a red flag or even a red necktie, which revealed few bushy whiskers and which displayed no tendency to rant and shout.

The most loudly applauded speeches of the whole affair were denunciations of the Bolshevists of Russia.

Sixteen nationalities were represented, including Armenia and Georgia, the new republic of the Balkans.

"The difference between British labor and the Russian Communists is the difference between a democracy and a dictatorship," was the sentence most loudly applauded during the whole conference.

On the whole it may be said that things are looking up as far as the relationships between British employers and British labor are concerned; and it seems certain that an unexpectedly sweet reasonableness is diffusing itself through the minds of many spokesmen for the people, who, in the past, have been very radical and anxious to destroy the present order.

The report also urged Presbyterians to vote for the Wright prohibition enforcement bill at the election on November 7 and called upon constituted authority to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment. The Anti-Saloon League was named as the church agency in matters pertaining to enforcement and the discouraging of "outside agencies" entering California to obtain funds for the temperance cause was voted.

FAVOR NEW CHURCHES

The committee on church erection declared that while 100 new churches were being erected, at least an additional 100 were needed, of which twelve or more were needed in Los Angeles.

"The wonderful increase of Los Angeles in its population requires that the church keep pace with the erection of new building," the report said.

The joint meeting of the synods was addressed by Rev. Warren H. Wilson, representing the board of missions of the general assembly, who said the spirit of adventure and desire of doing something for somebody that was never done before, animated missionaries.

"Funds have to be raised," he said, "and this is done by the older synods of the Eastern States. They like to put their money on these adventurers in the West. They love to see them paid, to send them comfort, to hear their stories and to dream with them their dreams. What is needed in America are men who minister to their own kind. It takes a Frank Higgins to be a sky-pilot to the lumber jack, it takes a Dirk Lay to be a missionary to the Indians. When such men are sent the people to whom they go never tire of the story of the Cross."

Dr. Wilson presented in person to the synod the first convert to Christianity from the Pima Indians of the Gila Valley, Horace Williams. The late Rev. Charles H. Cook worked among the Pimas for nine years before Williams was converted, the speaker said, and it was ten years more before his church membership reached sixteen.

An interesting feature of the session is an exhibit of church work prepared by the Pasadena Presbyterian Church in the gallery of the chapel. The bulletins, posters and other publications of the church are shown, also specimens of the work of pupils in the summer week-day Bible class sessions, where models of biblical subjects are made to teach the work graphically. The Boy Scout activities of the church also are illustrated. The plans and elevations of the new educational building of Pasadena Presbyterian Church, now being erected at a cost of $125,000, also attracted much interest.

City Will Sue as Result of Oil Line Break

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, July 22.—City officials decided today to make formal demand on the Union Oil Company for damages growing out of the spreading of the surface of the ocean adjacent to Long Beach with a heavy coating of oil from a broken oil pipe line. It was intimated by City Manager Hewes that local interests may seek further damages from the company on the ground that the oil spoiled the city's bathing facilities, kept thousands of tourists away and gave Long Beach an unenviable reputation.

The accident to the company's pipe line, which created havoc with bathing suits and white-coated yachts in the harbor, occurred several days ago.

San Diego Judge Sends Fair Traffic Violators to City Jail

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, July 22.—Women who violate traffic ordinances must accept the same punishment as the men, it was indicated in police court today when Judge Ed Davin sentenced three feminine automobile drivers to languish in the City Jail until midnight tonight. They are Mrs. F. M. Grace, Mrs. W. H. Minshall and Mrs. Henrietta Coates, all of whom had been arrested or failed to comply with the city traffic laws.

"It's nice they don't handcuff us, anyway," one of the women remarked as the trio were led away to get a taste of life behind the bars. Six men were somewhat more harshly dealt with by Judge Davin, who meted out sentences of thirty-six hours in jail to each.

PRISONER FIRES OLD CITY JAIL

Thirty Inmates of Long Beach Prison Threatened With Death from Flames

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, July 22.—The Long Beach City Jail was threatened with destruction and the lives of more than thirty persons, prisoners and policemen, were endangered just after daylight this morning when a prisoner, being held for investigation into his sanity, set fire to hs padded cell. The prompt work of Sergt. William Dovey, who rushed into the cell and fought the rapidly spreading flames with an extinguisher, held the blaze in check until the fire apparatus arrived.

The City Jail, an old wooden structure in use temporarily pending the completion of the new city building, would have been totally destroyed within a short time, fire department officials said, if the flames had obtained greater headway.

Other officers rushed to the various tanks and unlocked cell doors in readiness to move the prisoners into the street in the event the flames spread to adjoining rooms.

The prisoner, taken into custody Friday night because of his strange actions, battled desperately with Sergt. Dovey in the padded cell while the officer was endeavoring to check the flames. Dancing around wildly and shouting "pieces of eight." The prisoner fought to remain in the cell and perish in the flames. He was finally subdued and taken out of the cell by the officer.

The detention cell, a small room, padded on all sides with horsehair, proved ready food for the flames which spread from the mattress on the iron cot. The prisoner had started the fire with matches and papers. A double alarm was sent to the fire department and all the apparatus in the downtown section responded to the call.

NURSE NEAR DEATH

Fresno Hospital Attachee Victim of Sleeping Sickness

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

FRESNO, July 22.—Lying at death's door as the result of sleeping sickness, Miss Bernadine Olson, a nurse at the Fresno County Hospital has been kept alive for the last two days by the watchful care of Drs. A. B. Cowan and Roland B. Tupper while the girl's father is hurrying to Fresno from Minneapolis. A telegram from Mr. Olson reached the hospital late last night stating that he was leaving Denver at 9:45 o'clock.

Miss Olson was seized with the fatal malady on Tuesday morning, July 11 when she fainted while on duty. For a number of days her condition was not alarming, although she steadily lost strength. At the beginning of the present week grave fears were expressed that there was no chance of recovery. Able to eat with the greatest difficulty, the girl finally became so weak that she could no longer take food and on Thursday it became necessary to feed her through a tube.

Miss Olson, during her employment at the hospital for several months, has been noted for her efficiency and the affectionate regard for the children who were in her care.

SEA CLAIMS TWO

Young Boy and Beach Bather Are Drowned at San Diego

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, July 22.—Two persons were drowned here today and four others were saved from death by timely rescues. Woodrow McCall, a 9-year-old boy, fell into the bay from the slippery surface of a big sewer outfall and sank before help could reach him.

At Mission Beach, Clarence Schottle, 22, was carried from shore by a strong rip tide and despite heroic efforts of two companions to save him, he was carried under. Neither body had been recovered early tonight.

H. D. Bush and W. H. Crary, who were with Schottle, were so exhausted by their efforts to save the victim that they were barely able to keep afloat until help reached them.

The same rip tide that took Schottle to his death clutched Miss Dina Pairo and Abe Sable and only after a hard battle by a life guard, Mickey Jones, were the couple brought to shore. The life guard's boat was swamped by the breakers, but Jones promptly righted the craft and succeeded in getting the man and girl to shore. They were resuscitated by a pulmotor.

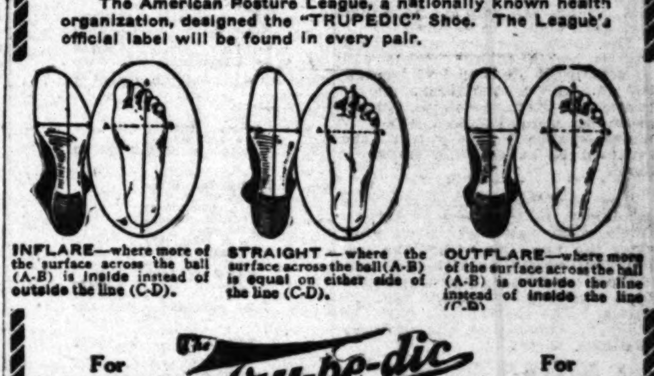
The Feet of the World Reduced to Three

The old ideas in Shoe Fitting and Shoemaking have been scrapped—Science takes a hand for Better Shoes—All normal feet have three different shapes—INFLARE, STRAIGHT and OUTFLARE. One of these shapes is YOUR foot. The "TRUPEDIC" Shoe is made in these three shapes. One of these three shapes of shoes is YOUR shoe—POSITIVELY.

This real anatomical shoe—without the freak shoe look—permanently settles your shoe problem. "TRUPEDICS," with their exclusive features, make and comfort, fit and good wear of your shoe a certainty. It establishes a NEW ERA in shoe fitting and shoemaking.

The American Posture League, a nationally known health organization, designed the "TRUPEDIC" Shoe. The League's official label will be found in every pair.



INFLARE—where more of the surface across the ball (A-B) is inside instead of outside the line (C-D).

STRAIGHT—where the surface across the ball (A-B) is equal on either side of the line (C-D).

SHOVEL FINDS HUMAN BONES

Operation at San Pedro Unearths Body

Scientists Believe Relics Are Centuries Old

Ancient Casket Also Dug Up, but No Data Found

Shadows of California before the days of Spanish rule were brought out at Los Angeles Harbor yesterday by a steam shovel, excavating for the summer resort at White Point. One hundred yards above the shaly beach of the scenic cove were found the remains of one whom scientists declare was a follower of Don Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo, Spanish explorer, who, on Sept. 16, 1542, landed at what is now the bustling port of Los Angeles.

The battle that the Castilian adventurer and his followers had with Indians in landing at the Bahia de los Fumos y Fuegos is still legend among the pioneers of the local port. Cabrillo himself died two years later on the island of San Miguel, but the remains unearthed yesterday are believed to be those of one of his men, brought down by an Indian arrow while attempting to reach the beach through the surf at White Point.

ANCIENT CASKET

The bones were covered with the crumbling wood of a rough casket, strengthening the assertions of scientists that they are the bones of a white man. Less than two feet from the spot where yesterday's find was made, Roman D. Sepulveda, head of the famous old Sepulveda family, and his son Phillip, twelve years ago unearthed a human skull and an ancient Spanish cannon. An Indian flint arrowhead was firmly embedded in the back of the skull. The skull is now on disply at the Museum of Natural History here, curators declaring that it is that of a white man. The cast iron cannon, its three-foot length ornately carved in Spanish designs, is in the possession of Roman Sepulveda.

Dr. David Davidson, local surgeon, declared after an examination of the bones that they are more than 300 years old. Included in those unearthed were a right and left femur leg bones, a right tibia leg bone, a right fibula leg bone and a right humurus arm bone.

F. C. Bosserman and Ernest Barker, steam-shovel engineers who unearthed the find, say that other parts of the skeleton were unearthed by the shovel and carried away to the fill before Mr. Sepulveda reached the scene. Mr. Sepulveda is of the opinion that the skull found twelve years ago originally belonged to the same Spanish adventurer.

PALOS VERDES LAND GRANT

The history of the Palos Verdes land grant and the Sepulveda family makes one of the most interesting chapters in early California history. In 1790 Don Dolores Sepulveda left his Castilian home for California on a military mission for the King of Spain. For the dispatch and thoroughness with which he executed this mission he was granted the land on all four slopes of the Palos Verdes Hills, comprising 36,000 acres of rolling, fertile, tree-covered land.

Don Dolores brought his wife over from Castile and established the family castle on the spot where the present homestead of the Sepulveda family still stands. That was the birthplace in 1813 of Jose Diego Sepulveda, father of Roman Dolores Sepulveda, present head of the pioneer family of Southern California.

CABRILLO'S REPORT

Don Juan Rodrigues Cabrillo, in his report to his King, told of the discovery of the broad, sweeping Bahia de los Fumos y Fuegos, (Bay of Smokes and Fires.) The Bay of San Pedro got its first name because of the brush and forest fires which continually swept its slopes during the dry season. Rising thousands of feet above the rest of the shoreline, the fires thus were visible miles at sea.

Mr. Sepulveda is confident that before excavations for the $200,000 resort are completed, several more remarkable finds casting light on Los Angeles' early history will be unearthed.

British Buy Vaccine for Tuberculosis

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

GENEVA, July 22.—The British Red Cross, after careful investigation, has decided to purchase the vaccine treatment against tuberculosis originated by Henry Spahlinger, the Geneva biologist, and a contract for the sale has just been signed in London.

The Spahlinger laboratory here will be continued and others will be established, it is stated. A number of American patients, many of them advanced cases, and some given up by physicians, are now under treatment here and all are reported to be showing improvement.

The Spahlinger discovery was announced in Paris early in 1914. Little more was heard of it until after the war, but within the last year or two it has attracted considerable attention, notably on the part of British scientists and officials. The serum can now be made as cheaply as the ordinary smallpox vacine.

PORT NOTES

Sixty cabin passengers for Los Angeles disembarked from the Pacific Mail liner Venezuela upon her arrival at daylight yesterday from New York. Included in the arrivals were Miss Harriet C. Lasier, social leader of Washington, D. C.; George Haven Putnam, publisher of New York City; Mrs. Ernest Roberts, prominent socially in Baltimore; Mrs. Mayne Ramer, wife of the American Minister to Nicaragua, accompanied by her daughter, Rachel; and Dr. John Scott, surgeon of Marinette, Wis.

The Venezuela also brought for local consignees 450 tons of Central American sugar and a large consignment of coffee from Isthmian points. Also in port during the day at the Pacific Mail terminal was the liner Newport, southbound for Central America. The Newport discharged 400 tons of oriental freight here and loaded a similar amount of cargo and a number of passengers.

Clay Hutchinson, general passenger agent of the Pacific Mail for Southern California, announced last night that the liner Cuba will Tuesday make a special northbound call at Los Angeles Harbor to discharge a large shipment of sugar and coffee from Central America.

Trade conditions between the Pacific Coast and Brazil have improved markedly of late, according to a statement just issued by O. K. Davis, secretary of the National Trade Council, who quotes a report from the American Chamber of Commerce at Sao Paulo.

The report states that the crisis has passed and Brazilian buyers are anxious for American goods although the advance exchange rate is still interfering somewhat in business. Cases are cited, however, of Brazilian merchants refusing to take European goods and waiting for improvement in the exchange situation to buy in this country.

The Sao Paulo organization calls attention to some minor matters, such as the marking of packages for export and the making out of consular invoices, which might be bettered and improve conditions.

One of the biggest peace-time shipping jobs ever taken, that of supplying food to starving Russia, has virtually been completed by the Russian Relief Commission, there remaining only 5000 tons of miscellaneous supplies in small parcels still to go of the 788,000 tons purchased with funds of $20,500,000.

There were eighty vessels used for the shipments, of which sixty-five took full cargoes and fifteen part cargoes. Eight were foreign vessels, thirty-three privately-owned American vessels and thirty-nine Shipping Board vessels.

BOAT TO GET MORE PAY FOR MAIL HAUL

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 22.—The Oceanic Steamship Company liner Ventura departed today for Sydney under a revised subsidy arrangement with the United State government for carrying the mails to the Antipodes. Recently, the company notified the government that it could not carry mails at the existing rate of 2 cents a mile and asked that the figure be doubled. Before the government could act the company announced that it would suspend operations if the added subsidy was not granted. The Postoffice Department arranged a temporary increase of $80,000 a year and the company decided to continue operations on that basis.

DENY SHOT NEARLY HIT WARCRAFT

Fort Officers Point Out Visiting Squadron Not Bothered by Target Fire

Officers at Fort MacArthur yesterday emphatically denied published reports that an 1800-pound projectile from one of the post's 14-inch rifles nearly struck the Japanese cruiser Iwate while the Nipponese warcraft was off Los Angeles Harbor Friday afternoon. The reports stated that due to an error in the plotting room of the battery, one of the projectiles, fired in target practise, crossed the Iwate's bows at less than 500 yards distance.

"The projectile would have had to ricochet ten miles at an angle of 90 degrees to have been in the vicinity of the Japanese squadron," declared Capt. Wallace D. Collins, post adjutant at Fort MacArthur.

At 10 a.m. yesterday the officers of Fort MacArthur entertained Vice-Admiral Shiyoshin Taniguchi, commanding the Japanese training squadron, and his officers at a reception on the post.

Among the notables attending the reception were Capt. T. Nagano, military attache to Japanese Embassy at Washington; Consul-General Shichatari Yada, of San Francisco; Admiral Taniguchi, his chief of staff, and the captains of the three cruisers.

Lieut.-Col. Ernest R. Tilton, recently assigned to command Fort MacArthur, will assume his new post August 3, it was announced yesterday. Col. Tilton, who has just returned from the Philippines, where he has for two years been commandant of Fort Mills, in Manila Bay, is now on leave visiting his son, Charles C. Tilton, of 250 Pearl street, Pasadena.

Col. Tilton will relieve, as commandant of the local coast defenses, Maj. Isaac E. Titus. Whether Maj. Titus will be given a change of station has not been announced.

News of Ships and Sailings at Pacific Ports

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

TACOMA, July 22.—Reports from San Francisco stating that the Garland Steamship Line intended to enter the intercoastal trade and operating between New York and Puget Sound was received with considerable interest by Tacoma shipping men who are familiar with this company. For a number of years the Garland Line had the Austin and Javary plying out of Tacoma to the Orient. These steamers were withdrawn at the close of the war and sent to the east coast.

The Garland Line for a number of years has been interested in shipping on the Atlantic Coast and Europe. When this firm entered the Pacific trade, tobacco export business was handled by their vessels with return cargo being made up of oil. The company did have six vessels in the eastern trade at one time.

The Nika of the McCormick Line is due Monday at the terminal dock to load box shooks and other cargo for San Francisco.

To load flour at the Sperry mill and lumber at the port dock, the Talthybius of the Blue Funnel Line is due here early next week. The vessel will be in port about four days taking cargo.

The Admiral Schley is due Monday at the Commercial dock on her regular schedule. This vessel will be followed by the Dorothy Alexander Friday.

Reports received from San Francisco state that the schooner Rose Mahoney which was expected here to load lumber at the St. Paul mill has been seized by the United States marshal at San Francisco for some infraction of the harbor regulations.

The Alabama Maru of the O. S. K. Line will shift to Vancouver tonight to discharge and load. The vessel will return to Tacoma to complete loading the latter part of next week. The Hawaii Maru of this line, now loading here, sails Wednesday for Japan and China.

PORTLAND, July 22.—With paper and general cargo for San Francisco the motorship Boobyalla departed today.

The Norwegian steamer Huftero has been chartered to load lumber on the Columbia River and at Vancouver, B. C., for Montreal. She will take 2,500,000 feet at St. Helens.

Demand for tonnage to bring coal from the United Kingdom to America is said by grain operators here to be making it difficult to get a sufficient supply of grain ships for carrying away the new crop of the Northwest.

Negotiations were reported under way today for the charter of the sailing schooner Dauntless, owned here, to carry lumber and telephone poles to Honolulu.

The steamer West Prospect, which was turned over by the Shipping Board to the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Steamship Company at San Francisco yesterday, will come here to load for Atlantic Coast ports.

Figures prepared by the Traffic Bureau of the port of Portland and the Public Dock Commission show for the first six months of 1922 a total of 150,065,841 feet of lumber was exported with a valuation of $3,615,028 as compared with 58,[illegible]877 feet with a valuation of $1,641,016 in the corresponding period of the previous year.

Domestic lumber water shipments totaled 52,768,000 feet valued at $1,114,808 as compared with 12,757,000 feet valued at $378,719 in the corresponding period of 1921.

Wheat shipments to foreign ports during the first six months of the year totaled 12,279,935 bushels against 13,769,623 bushels for the corresponding period of 1921.

ASTORIA (Or.) July 22.—The Dutch steamer Tjilboet will be due at the mouth of the river tomorrow morning from San Francisco and goes to Rainier to load lumber.

The steamer Rose City, carrying freight and passengers from Portland and Astoria, sailed this evening for San Francisco.

After discharging freight in Portland, the steamer Delco sailed this morning for Seattle to discharge the balance of her cargo.

The Delco will then load lumber at Gray's Harbor and Westport.

Carrying 825,000 feet of lumber from Portland and 750,000 feet from Westport, the steam schooner George L. Olson sailed last evening for Los Angeles.

The steam schooner G. C. Lindauer arrived last night from Albion bringing a cargo of redwood railway ties which she is discharging. The Lindauer will shift to Warrenton where she will take on a full cargo of lumber.

Following the receipt of official notice from Maj. Park of the United States engineers that the government has taken possession of the wrecked British steamer Welsh Prince and her cargo the watchmen whom the owners kept stationed at the wreck for several weeks were discharged. Capt. H. H. Hill, master of the steamer, left for Seattle yesterday but will return to Astoria on Tuesday and within a few days will start for his home in Europe.

BELLINGHAM (Wash.) July 22.—The American-Hawaiian liner Ohioan, en route to New York from Vancouver, B. C., docked at the Bloedel-Donovan mills here late last night for lumber. Leaving here the ship goes directly to New York, via the Panama Canal. The Kenu Maru left this morning carrying 2,600,000 feet of lumber and Japanese squares for Kobe.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 21.—The schooner King Cyrus, wrecked July 17, which lies stranded off the Washington coast, is to be abandoned, according to word received here today by the Chamber of Commerce from Aberdeen, Wash. The determination that the vessel could not be saved was reached, the message said, after an examination by Capt. S. P. Gibbs and W. G. Mahoney of the San Francisco Board of Marine Underwriters. All the material possible will be salvaged by Capt. Rosendale, the master and his crew, all of whom were saved.

SEATTLE, July 22.—All passenger-carrying records since the peak days of the Klondike rush were shattered today when seven liners, five of them American ships, sailed from this port with a total of 1228 travelers, bound for coastwise and offshore ports, a rush of travel which kept the officials of the steamship lines busy most of the day.

The liner President Jefferson, bound for Manila, via ports, left with sixty-seven first cabin passengers and ninety-six steerage, while the Matson Line steamship Lurline sailed for Honolulu with forty-six first cabin passengers.

Two liners of the Admiral Line, each filled to capacity, also left here this morning for southeastern and southwestern Alaska. The steamship Queen had 288 passengers and the Admiral Watson 117 first cabin travelers.

The liner President McKinley sailed this afternoon from Yokohama for Seattle, according to notices to local offices of the Admiral Line. She is bringing 180 first cabin passengers and 6000 measurement tons of cargo. She will reach here the afternoon of Tuesday, August 1.

The Crosby Marine Corporation, owners and operators of the steamship Brookdale, were notified today of the acceptance of their bid for carrying fall supplies to the Pribilof Islands stations of the United States Bureau of Fisheries. The vessel will sail north-bound July 25.

George F. Nicholson, chief engineer of the Seattle port commission, arrived here tonight after an eight months' trip to European ports. Nicholson was granted leave of absence by the port commission to become advisory engineer to the port authorities of Cork, Ireland, where a new and extensive system of docks and wharves is being constructed.

PORT TOWNSEND (Wash.) July 22.—With her hold filled with lumber and her decks piled high, the Japanese steamer Kureha Maru arrived this morning from Bellingham, where, after loading part cargo of lumber at Tacoma, she completed. She will remain here lashing cargo until Sunday morning, when she proceeds to the Orient.

The tanker Yorba Linda early this morning finished discharging her oil cargo at Everett, sailing this morning for Los Angeles.

Bringing a cargo of copper ore from the West Coast of South America for the smelter at Tacoma, the steamer Derbday will reach Tacoma early Sunday morning, she having passed in at Cape Flattery at 11:40 a.m.

VANCOUVER, July 22.—The Canadian government merchant marine officials expect the coastwise freighter Canadian Farmer in from San Francisco Sunday. The Canadian Traveler will depart tomorrow for Victoria to complete for Cuba.

The Canadian Australian Royal Mail liner Niagara, Capt. Rolls, got away at midnight Friday for Australia.

VICTORIA, July 22.—The Furness-Withy freighter Mongolian Prince is leaving port today for Vancouver. She took aboard while here over 800 drums of whale oil for Glasgow.

The wooden barkentine S. F. Tolmie, which sailed from this port July 11, laden with a cargo of 1,500,000 feet of lumber for Australia, has been chartered for the return voyage to load coal at Newcastle, N. S. W., for San Francisco. She has been chartered for October loading by James Rolph & Co. of San Francisco.

FORMER ATHLETE OF CORNELL IS DROWNED

ASSOCIATED PRESS EDITOR MEETS DEATH IN LAKE GEORGE

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LAKE GEORGE (N. Y.) July 22. William A. Caldwell, of Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., a former Cornell football and crew star, was drowned this afternoon in Lake George near Ticonderoga when a canoe in which he was paddling overturned.

Mr. Caldwell, who was early morning general editor of the Associated Press, had been visiting the director of a large boys' camp and had gone out on the lake alone in the canoe. It is believed that while removing his outer clothing in the canoe before swimming, Mr. Caldwell's arms became entangled in his shirt and when the canoe capsized he was unable to free himself. The body was recovered early this evening after the canoe had been found floating without any occupant. This was the first intimation anyone at the camp had of the accident.

Meet the new Road-Tax on Gasoline

By John Eliot

CALIFORNIA needs $65,000,000 for Road Repair and Extension!

Who should provide that Bagatelle?

Fair-minded people (who do not own Automobiles) will speak up and say:

"They who USE the Roads MOST should pay MOST of their cost and maintenance!"

Sounds reasonable, too,—doesn't it?

What's a Motor-Car but a White Elephant in a country where there are no good Roads to drive it on?

Isn't the ROAD as necessary to the Car as the TIRES that roll over it?

And,—when we buy a Car we don't expect the STATE to supply us with the TIRES we wear out in exact proportion to our Road Mileage.

California contemplates taxing GASOLINE to pay for Road Repair.

Why not Tax TIRES, too—based upon their guaranteed mileage?

Leaving selfish, Auto-interest aside, what could be FAIRER?

Gasoline-Mileage should be, and CAN be, in exact ratio to Road Use.

The Car-Owner who uses MOST Gasoline takes MOST out of the Roads.

And, if he is EXTRAVAGANT in the use of Gasoline, he presumably can AFFORD to pay a larger share of the Road-Repair Tax than the Automobilist who practices reasonable Economy on Fuel and Tires.

"To the Motorist belongs the Roads"—today.

Would he rather do WITHOUT them than pay a reasonable Road-Tax on Gasoline to maintain and extend them?

Save Six Cents per Gallon for Road-Tax

WHO paid for the Brooklyn Bridge, N. Y.?

Nobody! Because, it paid for itself out of Ferry fares saved to every one who used it INSTEAD of the Ferries!

Who must pay for the Road-Tax on Gasoline?

Nobody! If Motorists will take the trouble to SAVE more than the Tax on Gasoline they are now heedlessly wasting!

Thousands of Cars have been tested for Gasoline WASTE at the Proving Station of the Motor Economists,—3000 South Main Street.

The results of these Tests are open to the Public (or to Legislators),—each fully certified and each can be sworn to by three witnesses if necessary.

These Gasoline WASTAGE Tests can therefore be VERIFIED beyond question.

They indicate that more than 30 per cent of all the Gasoline used in America is being unconsciously WASTED by Car-Owners who COULD save it without effort, if the necessity for doing so was brought home to them in an authoritative way.

On 74 Buick Cars recently tested at the Proving Station, 45% more Mileage-per-Gallon was secured, ON AVERAGE, by installation of "Econo-Mist" Self-Paying Carburetors.

This means that 45 per cent of 23c-per-Gallon Gasoline Mileage had unconsciously been WASTED—equivalent to more than 10 cents on every Gallon used.

Name, Address, and Signed Contract of each Econo-Mist Car Owner open for verification.

Buicks, Studebakers, Overlands, Chevrolets and Others

ON seventy-two Studebakers tested, 43% more Certified Mileage-per-Gallon was delivered, on average, by "Econo-Mist" Self-Paying Carburetors.

That 43 1-5% of 23c is equal to 10 Cents per Gallon of Mileage, equivalent to buying 23c worth of Gasoline-Mileage for 16 1-10 Cents per Gallon.

On 41 Overlands tested it was proved to their Owners' satisfaction that 37% more Miles-per-Gallon was delivered, on average, with "Econo-Mist" Self-Paying Carburetors installed.

Equal to 8½ Cents per Gallon more Mileage, with self-same Gasoline on self-same Cars.

On 21 Chevrolets tested, 38% more Miles-per-Gallon was delivered, on average, with "Econo-Mist" Self-Paying Carburetors.

This was equal to 8¾ Cents per Gallon MORE Mileage-value, with self-same Gasoline at 23c Gallon.

On the usual 10,000-Miles-per-year driving in California, these entirely worthy, and otherwise efficient, Cars now deliver as follows:

—Buicks that averaged 671 Gallons of Gasoline per 10,000 Miles, with their own Carburetors, NOW deliver same 10,000 Miles with 461 Gallons through "Econo-Mist" Self-Paying Carburetors.

—Studebakers that averaged 800 Gallons of Gasoline per 10,000 Miles with their own Carburetors, now deliver same 10,000 Miles with 559 Gals. of Gasoline, via "Econo-Mist" Carburetors.

—Overlands that averaged 680 Gallons of Gasoline per 10,000 Miles now deliver same 10,000 Miles with 496 Gallons of same grade Gasoline.

—Chevrolets that averaged 575 Gallons per 10,000 Miles with their own Carburetors now deliver same 10,000 Miles with 416 Gallons of same grade Gasoline.

This translates into price-per-gallon of Gasoline henceforth used as follows:

—Owners of Buicks here cited will henceforth buy the same Gasoline-Mileage they have heretofore paid 23c per gallon for at less than 16 Cents per Gallon.

—The Studebakers at rate of 16 1-10c per Gallon.

—The Overlands at rate of 16 1-5c per Gallon.

—The Chevrolets at rate of 16 4-5c per Gal.

While space admits of citing only Buicks, Studebakers, Overlands and Chevrolets here, the certified Records on more than 2000 Cars of other makes are open to the inspection of all Car-Owners, including Legislators and Competitors,—at this address, 3000 S. Main St.

What these Records show will convince any fair-minded person (who is not a Car-Owner) that it NEED be no hardship to pay a Tax on Gasoline for Road-Maintenance out of Six Cents per Gallon practicable saving on average Gasoline Waste.

This Tax-Saving Carburetor Must Pay for Itself

BRING your Car around to the Proving Station of the Motor Economists, at 3000 S. Main St.

Test out its Miles-per-Gallon with its own Carburetor there.

Then test out its Miles-per-Gallon of same grade Gasoline with the "Econo-Mist" Self-Paying Carburetor.

You be the Judge in both Tests.

If less than 22% INCREASED Mileage-per-Gallon be delivered with the "Econo-Mist" Carburetor, no charge whatever will be made for the test.

If 22% to 150% more Mileage-per-Gallon be delivered by the "Econo-Mist" Self-Paying Carburetor, to YOUR SATISFACTION, do this:

Pay for it Monthly out of its own proven Gasoline SAVINGS, until the Econo-Mist Carburetor thus becomes your property practically free.

No other Carburetor in the World is EFFICIENT enough to make such an Offer profitable.

But, thousands of these "ECONO-MIST" Carburetors have been sold here in Los Angeles, within the past few months, on this identical Self-Paying Plan.

Twenty per cent more of these Carburetors have been sold in LOS ANGELES ALONE, under this Plan, since Feb. 15th, than were previously sold during same period in the ENTIRE United States, and with 62% Per Annum Net Profit, on Capital Invested.

Ask for the EVIDENCE when you bring your Car around to 3000 S. Main Street, for Proving Ground Test.

ESKIMO KILLS SEVEN NEAR ARCTIC CIRCLE

MURDERED FIVE COMRADES, MOUNTED POLICEMAN AND HUDSON BAY FACTOR

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

EDMONTON (Alta.) July 22.—Out of the frozen north a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has just arrived with news of the murder of seven men by an Eskimo, who ran amuck on Herschell Island, Hudson Bay, four months ago.

His victims were Constable Boak of the mounted forces, G. Binder, Hudson Bay factor, and five of his tribesmen.

The Eskimo, a young seal hunter, employed by Binder, killed his five comrades as they lay sleeping one night last March. The mounted police trailed him, captured him and brought him back to Herschell Island, where he was jailed to await trial for the murders. Constable Boak was detailed to guard the Eskimo. One night as the officer slept his prisoner seized his rifle and killed him. When Binder threatened to cut off escape, the Eskimo killed him, too.

Making his way back to the tribe, the murderer told his fellows he had killed seven men and declared he intended to "wipe out the rest of the island." Twenty-four hours later the police captured him again. The prisoner may be brought to Edmonton for trial.

PUBLISHER PREDICTS HEARST TO BE ALONE

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—W. J. Conner, Buffalo newspaper publisher tonight issued a statement in which he predicted that William Randolph Hearst would be the only candidate when the Democratic convention meets in Syracuse next September to pick a nominee for Governor of New York.

Mr. Conner indicated that the 5-cent fare throughout the State and the milk question would be the chief issues of the campaign.

JAPANESE EMBASSY REPLIES TO RUSSIA

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

BERLIN, July 22. — The Japanese Embassy replying to the charges of M. Tchitcherin, Foreign Minister of Russia, regarding Japanese designs on Siberia, declared that Nippon intends to maintain the open door.

"Although the Dairen conference was not successful," says the embassy's statement, "Japan has decided to recall all its troops from Saghalin when satisfactory amends are made for the Nikolaievsk massacre. This should end talk of Japan's intentions of attacking the Far Eastern republic. Japan's only wish is for friendly relations with its neighbors and recognition of the open-door policy.

Blowing Up of House Results in Police Quiz

There is a mystery in the town of San Fernando. At midnight Wednesday a two-story frame house, located two miles East of San Fernando on Mulholland Road, was blown up. But whether dynamite was used or not doesn't make any difference for the fact remains the house was "blown to splinters and kindling wood," according to Capt. George Home of the Hollywood police.

The house had not been occupied for eight or ten years, according to Capt. Home. As there was no "spooky" legend attached to the place, no reason can be advanced for the destruction of the house, Capt. Home says. The occurrence was reported to the Hollywood police by the owner. The debris failed to substantiate the early suspicion that bootleggers might have been using the place without the owner's knowledge, and that the wrecking was due to the explosion of a still.

Literary Club is Jailed After Reading "Bones"

The next meeting of the Unique Literary and Social Club, composed of negroes, will convene in the City Jail. The click of the "bones," some times termed "African golf" by the most elite rollers, became too distinct at 128 North Main street last night, and there followed a raid of the purity squad under the direction of Lieut. McClary, assisted by Sergts. Massey and Hodges, and Officers Johnson, Clementine and Hoy.

As the officers entered a number of the negroes attempted to escape by breaking through rear windows in the building. The patrol wagon made several trips to the club, depositing a total of fifty members of the Unique Literary and Social Club in the calaboose.

QUARTET WHOSE NAMES ARE NOT IN LOCAL DIRECTORY AUTO SMASH

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SALEM (Or.) July 22.— Four women, all residents of Los Angeles, were in a local hospital here tonight, suffering injuries sustained when an automobile in which they were riding was struck by another machine occupied by J. M. Stovell and daughter of Williams, Cal.

The injured are: Mrs. C. L. Shetts, 28 years of age; Mrs. Grace Lloyd, aged 28; Mrs. G. M. Stoddard, 55 years old, mother of Mrs. Shetts; Mrs. Madge MacDonald, aged 30. Mrs. Stoddard may die, physicians said.

According to the story told to the police, the machines collided when the car occupied by Mr. Stovell and his daughter started to pass a wagon on the Pacific highway about five miles north of Salem. The car driven by Mr. Stovell struck the Shetts machine a glancing blow with the result that the latter vehicle crashed into a telephone pole at the side of the road.

The names of the injured mentioned in the foregoing dispatch do not appear in any of the Los Angeles directories.

MANY SUCCESSES ON PLAY BOARDS

The condition at local theaters just now is undoubtedly one to make managers offer up hymns of thanksgiving, but it's not very interesting from a news standpoint. There are too many successes on Broadway. Everything is holding over. The only really new event on the horizon is the appearance of Maude Fulton in "The Humming Bird," which begins tomorrow, and whatever variety the variety houses have to offer.

"Abie's Irish Rose" has now run so many weeks that everyone has lost count of them. "The Fool" is proving a decided attraction. "Sinners" is getting a third week at a Broadway stock house. "Letty Pepper" will run another seven days. The prospect is a bit like middle western landscape—fertile, but lacking ups and downs.

In vaudeville, the appearance of Mildred Harris at a leading house is the most prominent event of a midsummer week program. Singer's Midgets remain headliners at another theater, with Wellington Cross running a close second. Will King is staging a tabloid version of "Lombardi, Ltd." And there you are.

Gala Week at Dalton's

The coming week will be known as Jinnistan Grotto week at Dalton's Broadway Theater, for the Mystic Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm have taken over the theater for five nights, from Monday to Friday, inclusive.

"Sinners," the William A. Brady success, in which the Smith-King stock company has been featured for the past two weeks, will be presented during this coming week for the Jinnistans and their friends. Every night will be a gala night, with special attractions presented on the stage and a concert

NEW SPECIALS HIT THE SCREEN

The screen is better off than the stage for new arrivals this week, although the microbe of success has bitten the picture houses also to some extent, and there are several holdovers.

One cannot prophesy sight unseen, but it looks as though "Borderland" might prove interesting above the average, as its subject matter comes under a classification not yet much exploited in celluloid—namely, spiritism.

Basil King's second screen production, "The Dust Flower," sounds like human and interesting drama in the advance stuff. "One Clear Call" has reached the silver sheet via the direction of John M. Stahl, and here one knows that there is a good story, while Henry Walthall may be expected to add the charm of a subtle interpretation of character.

"Sherlock Brown," a Bayard Veiller drama of an amateur detective, gives Bert Lytell room to function adequately, and the Vidors have a domestic drama called "The Real Adventure." And there the list stands, and one falls back upon either revivals or holdovers.

Prominent among the latter are "The Storm," now in its fourth and last week, and "Nice People," in its third. Another revival of Valentino's prestar days appears in "The Delicious Little Devil," Mae Murray being one party of the first part. "Orphans of the Storm" is still running, but will finish its present engagement next Saturday.

Psychic Plot in Feature

Rich in subject matter and background, "Borderland" will come to Grauman's Theater tomorrow. It is a story of life in the great beyond—the unknown, the inevitable—that all, sooner or later, must experience, based on an orig-

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

Most women exaggerate their age on the nether side, so to speak. But evidently, Edna Wallace Hopper is an exception. Years mean nothing to her, now that she is young again. At least, the advertisements of her appearances during the past few weeks locally have diligently asserted that the aetat of Edna was a safe 60.

Researches in regard to her senectitude have, however, been brought to our attention, which would seem to indicate a slight overemphasis of time. We learn from the Who's Who in the Theater that, at best, Edna Wallace cannot be over 50. The year of her birth, in fact, is given in this presumably authentic record as 1874, which puts her exact age at 48.

But—then, what is a mere matter of 60 or 50 or even 40, when a woman is supposed to look as if she were 19?

Once in a while we, who are rather proud of our homegrown industry of pictures, get a slight, but rather poignant jolt. We have always thought that somehow, somewhere, the films were having an appeal to a majority if not all of the intellectual lights of the world. That, in fact, there were few people of knowledge and erudition who have not at least a nodding acquaintance with the cinema, if not with the films, whatever the difference may be.

But, woes never cease, for Richard Dix, who has just returned from abroad, is relating the shocking information that Cambridge University is notoriously ignorant of the finer shades of meaning in pictures. His own rude awakening came about when the company making "The Christian" was planning to photograph some

TAME VAMP IN NEW "FOOL"

Critic Finds No Thrills in Fox Revival

William De Mille on Ornate Cruise is Latest

Another Darktown Show is Thriving in Gotham

BY FREDERICK JAMES SMITH

NEW YORK, July 22.—William Fox's revised version of "A Fool There Was," very much minus Theda Bara, was the outstanding cinema advertisement, as the English would say, of the New York week. This production of Emmett T. Flynn is exceedingly feeble—lurid stuff diluted to pass the censor boards of Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio and points west.

In the present version it is rather difficult to gather just how John Schuyler is wrecked by "The Woman They Call the Vampire." Theda Bara's version, as we remember it, left no doubts on these points, but here old John Barleycorn seems much more guilty.

The big daring moment comes when the vampire telephones John and wantonly consumes wicked chocolates at the same time. As we recall the original "Fool There Was," there was no telephone service to separate John and the vampire.

Moreover, "The Woman They Call the Vampire" is at present done very inadequately by Estelle Taylor, who succeeds in achieving about the only dramatic mood missed by Theda, wherefore the coyness?

Theda may have been flamboyant and overzealously the vamp but there certainly was no more doubt about her destructive power than there could be of a steam roller. Estelle is very, very circumspect, even as to gowns. Only once is there a hint that the vampire smokes, a hint that can easily be trimmed out in Kansas and as for "licker" the lady probably never touched it.

The rest of the film is per the usual Fox standard. The bankrupt and ruined John Schuyler slips to the depths in one of those sordid little places the size of a railroad terminal. John's wife is one of those very good movie wives who listen to the children's prayer, kiss the baby's toes and puts the kiddies to bed in a nursery covering an acre or so of the studio floor. While the vampire's steenth victim still lies on a perfectly gorgeous flight of marble steps, we wouldn't be at all surprised if the vampire reforms later and cuts out the chocolates.

We had an opportunity to catch an advance view of William De Mille's newest production from Rachael Crother's stage play "Nive People." The footlight opus was directed against the wayward younger folk, the giddy youth who, as Mr. De Mille expresses it, believe that "The hand that rocks the cocktail rules the world." Mr. De Mille never forgets that he has to point a moral. The subtitles are the usual gems of upstanding celluloid philosophy.

HAREM-SCAREM HEROINE

The heroine is a harem-scarem young thing whose life has been dedicated to jazz. The dedication continues until she meets a real man from the great open places and then she renounces all the old life. In telling his tale, William shows indications of following in the ornate footsteps of his brother, Cecil.

Exhibitors will be pleased to learn that there are several cabaret and masquerade ball scenes and that Mr. De Mile shows the utter depravity of the younger generation by having one of the society flappers smoke a pipe. Somehow or other, the younger generation always incurs the worry of the older folks—and yet the old world goes right on just the same.

The decorative Bebe Daniels plays the jazz maid done on the stage by Francene Larrimore. From a romantic standpoint, one can't quibble at the performance. Bebe goes through all the emotional byplay, but somehow or other the darn thing doesn't ring true. Conrad Nagel seems to us to be final story by Beulah Marie Dix, and directed by Paul Powell.

The theme of "Borderland" is one of tremendous public interest, involving the question, "Can the dead return to warn the living?"

Belief in the premise is not necessary to enjoy this story, however, as the tale is fancifully and delightfully filmed and unusually dramatic.

A discontented, restless modern wife is about to make a misstep when she is warned by an ancestor who had suffered from a similar error.

Agnes Ayres, Milton Sills, Casson Ferguson, Bertram Grassby, Sylvia Ashton, Dale Fuller, Walter Wills and many delightful kiddies are seen in this remarkable picture.

In conjunction with "Borderland," Sid Grauman will present a "Night in Dreamland," with fifteen people on the stage.

Fourth Week and Last

"The Storm" will play a fourth and final week at the Mission Theater, which news should result in considerable joy among those fans who so far have missed this remarkable hit of cinema art.

"The Storm" is so unlike any other motion-picture that its singular charm lies in that very fact. Having a cast of only three principals one would imagine the qualities of entertainment and fascination to be limited. Just the opposite is the case.

One may characterize "The Storm" as a spectacle, with its background of turbulent elements. The open wilderness of the far North, the blizzards and snowstorms, landslides, the swirling rapids through which the characters plunge, the forest fire—form backgrounds of spectacular and thrilling quality.

Against this panorama of nature is set the dynamic story of the love of two men for a girl who came into their lives as an unwelcome guest. How these two men, first friends, become bitter enemies, as their passions arise with the first storms of nature breaking over their peaceful solitude, form the development and climax of "The Storm."

Marital Drama at Clune's

Florence Vidor will appear at Clune's Broadway Theater today in the King Vidor Production, "The Real Adventure," a drama of the first year of married life.

A picturization of the popular novel by Henry Kitchell Webster, it relates the story of a poor girl who met and married a rich man and discovered soon after the honeymoon that, in the accepted order of things, a wife is supposed to share her husband's heart but not his brain. In other words, she can be his pet but not his pal; his sweetheart but not his partner.

Lytell as Amateur Detective

Bayard Veiller, stage producer and playwright, has produced one of his original stories for Metro. It is called "Sherlock Brown" and affords Bert Lytell one of the best roles that he has ever played. It is coming today to Loew's State Theater.

Incidentally, two of the players who enacted important roles in Veiller's stage successes, "The Thirteenth Chair" and "Within the Law," are in the cast of this screen drama.

De Witt Jennings, the iron-jawed police inspector of both the stage productions mentioned, is seen in a similar role in the Lytell picture. The leading woman is Sylvia Breamer, star of numerous screen successes, who played the leading feminine role in Veiller's "Within the Law" when it was produced in Australia, Miss Breamer's birthplace.

In "Sherlock Brown" Lytell appears as a young clerk with an overwhelming desire to become a detective. He obtains a badge from a distant detective agency, and begins his career as a sleuth. Through an unusual train of circumstances, he is involved in a mystery of vital importance to the government. When the regular officials scoff at his clew, he decides to pursue it anyway, and is successful in running down an unsuspected individual.

"Orphans" in Last Week

D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay sensation "Orphans of the Storm," is now in its third and positively final week at the Alhambra Theater.

The production represents months of preparation and a most careful study of the period depicted, the time of the French revolution. The basis of the story is the famous old play, "The Two Orphans," but Mr. Griffith has woven into it an historical romance. The guillotine is seen at its deadly work and there are crowds of frantic men and women fighting wildly against the aristocrats in the hope of freedom.

In the role of Henriette is Lillian Gish, whose work in former Griffith productions has placed her at the forefront of screen artists. Dorothy Gish has the role of the blind girl Louise, the other orphan. Then there is Joseph Schildraut, said to be the handsomest actor in Europe, and who made such a notable success in the "Liliom," in New York. He is seen as the romantic lover of Henriette, the Chevalier de Vaudrey. Monte Blue has the part of Danton. Sidney Herbert, another artist of high repute, is the Robespierre of the production.

"Nice People" Attracts

William De Mille's production, "Nice People," now playing at Grauman's Rialto, begins its third week today and is still attracting such crowds as to warrant it as much a record breaker on the screen as was the original play on the stage.

In "Nice People" Bebe Daniels, Wallace Reid, Conrad Nagel, Julia Faye and a brilliant cast including Claire McDowell, Edward Martindale, Eve Sothern, Ethel Wales, William Boyd and Bertram Johns, depict the carnival life of the youthful pleasure-hunters of today.

On the same program Bobby Vernon is seen in the latest Christie comedy, "The Hickory Hick," in which he plays the role of a country boy on his honeymoon in a great city. How he is swindled out of his money by oil slickers; his struggle to get it back; his realization that once a farmer is always a farmer—these situations lead to a very happy time throughout the comedy.

"Good Provider" at De Luxe

The new photoplay is "The Good Provider," a Paramount picture created by Cosmopolitan Productions, written by Fannie Hurst and directed by Frank Borzage.

These four—Miss Gordon, Mr. Davidson, Miss Hurst and Mr. Borzage—helped to make "Humoresque" the sterling picture that it was and Miriam Battista, who also did her share in it, has an important part in "The Good Provider," which comes to the De Luxe Theater today for three days.

Southern Romance at Kinema

A romance of the South, colored with pathos and humor and sprinkled with mystery, furnishes the story thread in the new John M. Stahl production, "One Clear Call," now playing at the Kinema Theater. Produced by John M. Stahl, this famous story has been adapted to the screen from the widely read novel of the same name by Frances Nimmo Greene.

The scene is laid in a small town in Alabama, where two men of strangely contrasting natures are in love with the same woman. She is in love with one of the men but married to the other. The eternal triangle receives treatment that is both novel and interesting in the development of the story, and winds up with a climax that will make the people talk about it after the show is over.

An all-star cast interprets the roles. Heading the list are Henry B. Walthall, one of the first favorites of the screen who in this picture returns after a long absence; Claire Windsor, Milton Sills, Irene Rich, Joseph Dowling, Shannon Day, Fred Kelsey, Annette De Foe and Nick Cogley.

Managing Director George Dumond of the Kinema is staging a second series of atmospheric prologues, featuring the Singing Sherwoods and their Tantalizin' Band, titled "Alabama Echoes." With an augmented chorus and surprise numbers, this musical act will be a featured part of the week's program. Gale Sherwood and her group of merry-makers will be heard to good advantage in popular ballads, "Blue" songs, teasing tunes and ensemble numbers full of animation and genuine syncopation.

Mae Murray-Valentino Revival

Another revival of one of the hits of the past season is to take place at Miller's Theater today, where the Mae Murray-Rodolph Valentino success, "The Delicious Little Devil," is to open a limited engagement. Both of these stars have advanced rapidly to the front ranks of filmdom, and this picture was one of those that first brought them to the notice of the public.

The story was written by John B. Clymer and Harvey Thew, and the latter prepared the scenario. The picture was directed by Robert Z. Leonard, who made Miss Murray's other two triumphs, "Fascination" and "Peacock Alley."

In it Miss Murray is seen in the role of a cabaret dancer, which of course comes natural to the former star of the Ziegfeld Follies and other Broadway musical shows. The handsome Rodolph is seen as a young man about town who falls madly in love with the cabaret dancer, but fears to propose to her because he believes she has had a lurid past.

"The Dust Flower" Here

Basil King's first photoplay since "Earthbound" of two seasons ago, is Goldwyn's picturization of his latest novel "The Dust Flower," which is to open at the California Theater today. It is altogether different from "Earthbound," yet it is said to have the same faculty of arousing the emotions.

Its characters are taken from life itself—most of them are people you might bump into any day in going about your routine affairs. A wealthy young man angered because he has just been thrown over by his fiancee; and a young girl, a dust flower from the roadside, who was on the point of committing suicide rather than accede to her step-father's wish that she become a cigarette girl in an underworld cafe, are the chief characters.

The man was sworn to marry the first girl he finds who will have him, and persuades Letty to reconsider jumping off the bridge and accept him. A very superior butler sees in the girl just the kind of wife his master needs, and proceeds to teach her how to behave and dress. This is only a bare outline of the plot but Mr. King is said to have embroidered it with vivid drama.

Helene Chadwick is the heroine and outshines her previous successes in Goldwyn pictures. James Rennie, well-known stage player and husband of Dorothy Gish, is the hero, and Mona Kingsley is another stage recruit. Still another is Claude Gillingwater, famous for his work in "Three Wise Fools," and his characterizations in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," with Mary Pickford and in Marshall Neilan's "Fools First."

Garrick Shows Thriller

Edwin Carewe, who is known from coast to coast as a "sure fire" director, who has always produced photodramatic successes, is in the limelight again with a smashing picture of the north country, "I Am The Law."

"I Am The Law" is playing at the Garrick this week.

This vivid photodramatization of the land of frozen silence, featuring Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Noah Beery and Wallace Beery, is said to be the greatest work of Carewe's highly successful career.

Shows for Second Week

"The Son of the Wolf," adapted from Jack London's story of the great North, is continuing its showing at Tally's Broadway for a second week. The film is vivid in action, and the plot has a vigorous romantic theme.

The principal players in the picture are Edith Roberts, Wheeler Oakman, Arthur Jasmine, Willie Mae Carson and others.

Mildred Says She's Loved and Learned

"Me marry? No indeed. I've taken the cure!"

So speaks pretty Mildred Harris, who has the distinction of having been the wife of the funniest man in the world. Miss Harris is appearing in person at the Orpheum Theater this week with a small company in a one-act playlet entitled "Movie Mad."

As a matter of fact, blonde Mildred breaks out in denial of matrimonial intentions every time her engagement is reported to this or that cavalier.

The latest rumor had Lochinvar riding out from Chicago, which annoyed her so much that she delivered herself of a few personal views on the subject of altar travel.

Orange blossoms are not her favorite flowers. So far as she is concerned, Cupid can go out of the bow and arrow business any time he gets good and ready.

"A career," says the lady who loved and learned. "A career, that's the ticket! Work has given me the only real happiness I ever have known. Husbands come and go, but work goes on to the end of the chapter.

"I have no intention of marrying again, for a long time to come. When a girl is happy in her friendships, it seems unnecessary, even risky, to exchange any one of them for matrimony. I learned my lesson young, and I have taken every bit of it to heart. It has converted me to the gospel of ambition and hard work."

FINISHING "MINNIE"

Marshal Neilan's production for First National, "Minnie," is now receiving its final editing and will be shown publicly in the early fall. D. J. Gray, film director, has just returned to Los Angeles to give the new picture its final treatment, under the producer's supervision. Gray has already started the work of cutting the film to the desired footage. The story, suggested by Frank Pattulo's, "Her Man," is said to be a typical Neilan plot, offering an unusually human tale of small-town people. Leatrice Joy, as a homely boarding house slavey, Matt Moore in his first character part of a small-town newspaper editor, and Raymond Griffith, as a dapper city slicker, are some of Neilan's personalities. Others in the cast are Helen Lynch, George Barnum, Josephine Crowell and George Dromgold.

Will Read Play

The regular weekly meeting of the Playcrafters will take place tomorrow evening in the Tajo Building. At this meeting Karyl Marker will read and interpret "Sintram of Skagerrack," Sada Cowan's successful dramatic gem.

WINS FRIENDS IN THE WILD

one of Jane's hobbies. She lay for two hours near the grazing grounds of wild deer, and finally caught photographs of them.

"They were very lovely as they came tripping daintily along. They would look all around before they would put down a foot after raising it. Two does came first, and the buck followed. I don't know, of course, whether this is always the procedure. I didn't think it was.

"Perhaps they were all rather carefree that morning. My movement to photograph had to be very quick and light, but I caught them on the instant. The next second they were fleeing.

"Speaking of animals scenting trouble, we were going out one day, up in the Shasta district, to look for location, when our horses scented a forest fire before ever we caught a glimpse of the smoke. They refused to go on, and perhaps saved our lives.

"I love horses very much, but I shall never own another one. The reason? My pet horse, Jim, was killed doing a stunt. I cannot get over it.

"It was at Prescott, Ariz., that I first came into possession of Jim. He was a trick animal owned by Tom Mix. I rode in a cattle round-up down there. It was tremendously exciting. I believe it was rather dangerous sport for a girl, but I never thought of that at the time.

"Tom Mix said: Why I thought I had a leading lady, but I see I have a cowgirl. You love that horse, don't you? Well, I'm going to give him to you.

"Jim was as cute an animal as I ever saw. He never did care much for the saddle, and would do anything in the world to get you off the idea of riding him. He had found that force was merely met with force, so he tried cunning. He would pretend to be sick, droop his head, shut his eyes, even lie down; when that didn't work, he would pretend to be lame—limp about to beat the band. But he loved sugar, and this weakness always proved his undoing. He'd come after the sugar, and then somebody could clap the saddle on. Once that was accomplished he was as docile as a lamb.

"I do not like working with Alaskan dogs very well. If you turn your back on them for an instant, they will attack. I was bitten three times by an Alaskan dog when I turned my back to fight off wolves in a scene. I made friends with the dog that played in 'Kazan.' It wasn't quite the thing to do, however, as afterward they had a hard time making him be mean to me when they wanted him to.

CAPTURE BEAR

"But speaking of bears, we captured one up in the Shasta country. We were living at a ranch house, and one night we heard a terrible commotion outside in the stockyards. We ran out. It was moonlight, and we saw a huge bear hovering.

"He was evidently very hungry and very cross. Two of the cowboys chased him and roped him. He fought valiantly, but with one pulling one way and the other the other, he could do nothing. He was dispatched, and the boys sold the skin."

Didn't Jane, I asked her, ever meet with any odd characters in those out-of-the-way places?

"Why, yes, lots of times," she answered. "I met a real hermit once. He hadn't been out of the mountains or seen anything, and hardly a soul, for two years.

"It was one morning when I had nothing to do but roam the mountains to my heart's content. I mounted my horse, and we took to a faint trail up the hills. Suddenly I realized I was lost. I looked about and caught sight of a tumble-down old cabin; but a thin streak of smoke was coming out of the chimney.

"I drew my horse up at the door, and as I did so an odd-looking old fellow appeared in the doorway. He smiled in friendly fashion, took a good, long, hard look at me, and then said, 'Good morning, miss. Anything I can do for you?'

"'Well,' I said, 'I guess I'm lost. Can you show me the way to the nearest forest ranger's?'

"'Come right in,' he invited, and there was that about him, despite an unkempt appearance, that took away my fear.

"'I guess I'm what you'd call a hermit, miss,' he explained. 'I haven't been out of these parts for two years—don't want to, either. I have a permit to fish, but I don't care about killing things to eat, so I live principally on beans and canned stuff I import, and on berries and the things I raise in my garden.

"'Sometimes I work a little for the government and make a little money. I get along somehow. My wife died. I don't seem to care much for folks since then.

"'And now, miss,' he went on, 'I got to do an errand for a ranger, but when I come back I'll take you to your camp.'

"I asked him if he would be back by lunch time and he said 'no, not until night.'

"'But,' he inquired, 'can you make muffins? I ain't had a muffin in years.'

"I asked him where he kept the flour and sugar, and he told me.

"'Well,' I said, 'I'll have some muffins for you when you get back.'

"I cleaned up his cabin, and it was certainly an awful mess. Then I got some wild flowers and put them in old jars. And then I made the muffins! Back he came early that afternoon. He was so pleased over the change in his cabin that he wept. And as for those muffins—well, I didn't know that a man could hold so many! After he had eaten, he said:

"'I got a nice surprise for you!' He went over to the corner and proudly uncovered the squeakiest, crackedest old phonograph I ever saw! But he was so proud of it!

"'Yes, ma'am,' he said, 'I never allow anyone but myself to touch it!'

"Well, I didn't think anybody would ever want to that heard it once. It squawked out 'The High School Cadets' and 'Everybody's Doin' It.'

"Then we started back for the camp, but my hermit wouldn't wait even for supper with us—didn't seem to want to converse with anybody. But the rangers knew all about him, and said he was quite harmless, but that they had the story that his wife had died quite suddenly when he was absent from home and he had always blamed the people with her for the catastrophe, thinking they had been careless, and it had soured him on humanity."

It was getting time that Jane and I retraced our steps. We were a wee bit thirsty and hungry.

"Ought to be wild blackberries around here," said Jane. "See that weed? Well, that grows around wild blackberries."

We looked, and sure enough we found some.

ALL-STAR CAST MIGHTY FACTOR IN SUCCESS OF MAGNIFICENT PICTURE

Claire Windsor and Milton Sills are two luminous personalities that any all-star cast might well be proud of. They shine with exceptional brilliance in John M. Stahl's "One Clear Call."

Henry B. Walthall rises to new histrionic heights in "One Clear Call." Edith Yorke gives a notable performance.

Beauteous Irene Rich and juvenile Stanley Goethals are two reasons why "One Clear Call" is acclaimed as one of the greatest of pictures.

John M. Stahl's directorial skill and ingenuity is universally recognized. "One Clear Call" serves but to enhance an already great reputation.

Love Plays Its Part

In discussing the case with Faith, the doctor scores Garnett's wife for deserting him years before. He has never seen the woman, but he insists that if she had any strength of character she would be with her dying husband, regardless of his unsavory reputation. When Faith confesses that she is Garnett's wife, Hamilton's love for her reverses his views and he begs her not to sacrifice herself by returning to Garnett.

This is the turning point in the story and stark thrilling climaxes follow in quick succession. It is here that Stahl touches the directorial pinnacle. The deft and artistic manner in which he handles his tense scenes without either overdoing the sentiment or permitting his players to overdo their roles is most admirable.

Cast Superlative

A numerous cast of superlative merit appears in Stahl's picture, an all-star cast in the full significance of that abused phrase. In addition to Mr. Walthall there are such notables of the screen as Milton Sills, Claire Windsor, Irene Rich, Joseph Dowling, Doris Pawn, Donald MacDonald, Shannon Day, Stanley Goethals, William Marion, Edith Yorke, Annette DeFoe, Fred Kelsey, Albert McQuarrie, and Nick Cogley.

TERPSICHORE TABOO

Margaret Loomis, who has one of the prominent roles in "Money, Money, Money," the Preferred Pictures' production for Associated First National in which Katherine MacDonald is the star, first achieved prominence as chief understudy for Ruth St. Denis, the interpretative dancer.

When Miss Loomis essayed screen work she was so successful that she quickly forgot all about prancing around the stage in filmy Grecian attire to the music of Mr. Mendelssohn's sweet and diverting Spring Song.

TANGO NOW SCREENED

The appearance of the internationally famous dancers, Hilda Lee and Boyd La Dero, in the elaborate cafe scene in "The Dangerous Age," John M. Stahl's latest production now being filmed at the Louis B. Mayer Studios, is indicative of the high standard Mr. Stahl seeks to maintain in all his productions. Their fiery interpretation of the Argentine Tango proved an attractive feature of the scene.

Miss Lee and Mr. La Dero recently completed engagements at the Palais Royal and Golden Glades cafes in New York.

BEAUTY IN BUNCHES

Katherine MacDonald, admittedly the screen's greatest beauty, has surrounded herself with beauties in "Money, Money, Money," her latest picture. Jacqueline Logan, Brenda Fowler and Margaret Loomis are three young women of exceptional pulchritude and rare physical charm.

PATSY AN AUTHOR

Who would think that a 17-year-old girl with big brown eyes and a satiny complexion would bother about writing plays? Patsy Ruth Miller does—and she doesn't even wear spectacles or look old-maidish. One of her plays has received the commendation of noted playwrights and critics to whom she embarrassingly submitted it. They said that she has a splendid sense of dramatic values and of comedy relief. Doubtless it is this understanding of principles of drama that enables her to portray so vividly the role of the little Shireen in Richard Walton Tully's "Omar the Tentmaker," a First National attraction which will be ready for the exhibitors within the next month.

"Suzanna" Is Fun-Drama Without Peer

The outstanding comedy-drama of 1922 promises to be "Suzanna," Mack Sennett's costume play starring Mabel Normand, soon to be released through Associated First National.

"Suzanna" represents a monumental effort on the part of everyone connected with its production—from the lowliest property boy on the Sennett lot in Edendale to the producer himself.

No one item has been left out of "Suzanna" to make of it an altogether interesting, beautiful, enjoyable photoplay. Much time, effort and money have been expended, but the result has more than justified the expenditures, aver those qualified to judge.

Mabel Is Bewitching

The story of "Suzanna"—adapted by Mack Sennett from a novel by Linton Wells—is appealing, thrilling. It gives to the screen a character—Suzanna—that will live for all time; a character that bewitches, is irresistible, lovable. And that character is portrayed by Mabel Normand.

Without Mabel Normand "Suzanna" never could have been possible, for there is no other screen player of today who can compare with this little irrepressible child-woman in her chosen type of screen characterizations. Who can forget her as "Mickey" or "Molly O"? Those characters were the talk and delight of the world; they are yet. But Suzanna excells either of them.

Cast Distinguished

Directed by F. Richard Jones Miss Normand is supported by one of the most distinguished groups of featured players in the cinema world. Included among them are Walter McGrail, Leon Bary, George Nichols, Eric Mayne, George Cooper, Carl Stockdale, Evelyn Sherman, Winifred Bryson and Lon Poff.

Miss Normand is now touring Europe, but will return about September 1 to resume work on another Mack Sennett feature, now in course of preparation.

HOPE HAS NEW HOBBY

Hope Hampton, the star of the current and forthcoming First National releases, "Star Dust" and "The Light in the Dark," makes a decided hobby of amateur photography. Unlike most amateurs she also develops her own films and plates. She insists on beautiful printing of all her feature subjects and gets it, too, possessing the technical knowledge to demand and secure results from the laboratory.

Graphic Sea Tale Judged Film Classic

Few have been the great dramas of the sea mirrored on the motion picture screen. The sea, and the story of the sea, has an evasive quality that generally successfully eludes the ablest of directors. Indeed, it too frequently eludes the pens of those gentlemen who try to write about it. There are not many Conrads. Not many McFees. Not many Stevensons. The story of the sea is almost unfathomable, impenetrable.

Charged With Action

And yet Allen Holubar in "Hurricane's Gal," the First National attraction starring Dorothy Phillips, has caught that evasive thing and has painted it in splashing colors. So effective has been his work, so graphic is the photography, so compelling is the story, that one can almost hear the whip of the surf, and feel the salt spray on the cheek.

"Hurricane's Gal" is charged with action. No parlor drama, this, with small talk and tea fights, but a raw insurgent narrative, terrific in its maneuvers, elemental in its passions, hair-raising in its climaxes. It is to the screen what "Treasure Island" is to the library.

Radiates Atmosphere

Miss Phillips plays the role of Lola, captain of a smuggling schooner, which she has inherited from her roaming Irish father. But she inherited more than a rakish craft from him, she inherited his wild ungovernable temper, his love of adventure, and his pugnacious spirit. The story carries on from a storm at sea to the depths of the underworld. Destroyers, hydroplanes, phantom ships and revenue offices and slinking smugglers, all figure in this powerful story.

Sufficient ingredients for a vividly exciting dramatic tale, you say? And as directed by Allen Holubar, "Hurricane's Gal" is nothing less than that.

HOW FLUID IS FAME!

Regardless of one's personal fame, one is sometimes known by one's relatives.

Recently Norma Talmadge was working on a street scene in the heart of Hollywood. A large crowd had gathered to see the First National star perform before the camera.

"Who's that working there?" asked one of the crowd, pointing to Miss Talmadge.

"Oh, that's Buster Keaton's sister-in-law," replied another visitor.

Such is fame, folks!

Herod Court Scene Addition to Sacred Drama

The Dance of Salome

THE beautiful presentation of the life of the Christ, the Pilgrimage Play, will enter its third week tomorrow night at the open-air amphitheater, Cahuenga and Highland avenues, Hollywood.

Enacted in the stillness of night under the stars with unusual lighting effects, the Pilgrimage Play is a spectacle of surpassing beauty and is attracting capacity audiences for each performance.

This story of the ages is revealed with all the truth, beauty and poetry of the teachings of the Savior in its full dramatic value by the group of men and women who offer their services in all humility and reverence.

Included in the drama is a prologue and an epilogue. In the prologue are depicted the nativity, the prophecies of Christ's coming, the baptism of Jesus by John the Baptist, the Savior's temptations and teachings to His disciples, the miracles before the multitude, the episodes of the Samaritan woman and the adulteress, the Last Supper, Gethsemane and the trial by Pilate, and many other episodes of His life. The epilogue is devoted to His death, resurrection and the Ascension.

The gorgeous court scene, where Salome, at the instigation of Herodias, dances before Herod and thereby brings about the death of John the Baptist, is a new and thrilling act this year.

The costumes are correct as to period, many having been imported from Jerusalem for the production.

PRIZE MOVIE TYPE ENGAGED

Eleanor Boardman has been selected for the part of John Keogh's flighty wife in his picturization of Donn Byrne's "The Strangers' Banquet." Miss Boardman has just finished work in Rupert Hughes, "Gimme," and several months ago was named the prize-winning movie type of greater New York by Bob MacIntyre who selected her from among 5000 applicants and awarded her a Goldwyn contract.

"It's Human," Verdict on Lloyd Comedy

When a five-reel production runs for eleven weeks during the season when business is supposed to be "not," as Harold Lloyd's first five-reeler has done and is doing at the Symphony, there must be some out-of-the-ordinary reason for the exceptional run.

A production nowadays must have some exceptional factor even to "get by," and world records are not being created every day, especially by comedies.

"It's human," is the consensus of opinion among the critics of the day, who apply the phrase to every Lloyd comedy, and the public has applied it to "Grandma's Boy."

Lloyd has the human touch. His comedies are always based on an idea, and the ideas are consistent, and so he creates laughter by legitimate means through the medium of the motion picture with all the art employed by the masters of stage comedy.

Being human is the difference between success and failure. Even in the old days when custard pies and grotesqueries were in favor, Lloyd stubbornly refused to be identified with slapstick, and though there were many who thought him foolish, his persistency has won out.

To take the role of a weakling, a coward, and make that role sympathetic all through the production is a task to test the courage of anyone, and that Lloyd made such a character the lead of his first five-reel effort, and created a role that will live in screen history, is an achievement far out of the ordinary.

STUDIES OWN ACTING

How many times in the studios one hears some leading man say, "Oh, what's the use of looking at a thing after you've done it? I haven't seen over half my pictures." House Peters, the star of "The Storm" at the Mission Theater, ridicules this false modesty and frankly admits that he has watched each of his portrayals on the screen at least two or three times. He has never ceased to study them to correct mistakes, and declares that he never will.

FOURTH .. DIMENSION .. STUFF

Here's a Real Pioner in Radio Field

Allan Holubar

Allen Holubar is a pioneer in the use of the radio in directing the photographing of a production, the action of which takes place in the air, and on the land and sea.

This achievement was effected by Mr. Holubar during the mak- of "Hurricane's Gal," the First National attraction featuring Dorothy Phillips, which will have its world premiere at the Kinema Theater next Saturday.

In both American and Mexican waters, off the California and Lower California coasts, Holubar used radio and radiophones and successfully directed the operations of a pirate schooner, a portion of the United States Navy and a number of hydroplanes. A part of this time Holubar directed from a hydroplane, both in the air and on the water.

It was necessary for him to study navigation in order accurately to film the big sea scenes in this production, to give commands in nautical terms, box a compass, take observations and sail a three-masted schooner.

Through the use of his radio sending apparatus, Holubar was able to instruct hydroplanes to rise to a greater elevation or to descend. Destroyers and subchasers maneuvered as though the director stood on the bridge and was in command of the flotilla. When he wanted a destroyer to send up a smoke screen he merely spoke the word, and though the ship was barely discernible on the horizon, the smudge would almost instantly appear. Sails were raised or lowered on the schooner though it was miles away from the director.

"The radio has at last given the picture director a means of keeping constantly in touch with his assistants during the shooting of long-distance scenes," says Holubar. "In former pictures I have been compelled to rely on wireless, smoke signals, wigwags and fire in order to have my directions carried out.

"Many times these directions were misunderstood because of inability to see the signals or inability correctly to interpret them. With the radiophone it will be possible hereafter to give the screen scenes which would have been out of the question before the invention of the radio sending and receiving outfits. Every up-to-date studio should have this apparatus installed."

WILL CHARLIE DANCE?

Writer Compares Chaplin to Famous Russian

Charlie Chaplin, first national star, has been compared with poets of old. Now he is likened unto a great dancer.

In his book, "Charlie Chaplin," H. Louis Delluc compares Chaplin with Moliere, but he declares that Moliere became tedious, whereas Chaplin can never become so. He also compares the great little screen star with Nijinski, the dancer, saying:

"Charlie Chaplin is an inventor in his art as Nijinski is in his. But remember that plastic expression is as old as the world. There are stages in its history, and each has its own distinguished figure. Nijinski, the representative figure of our epoch, stands only for one phase of the dance in all the history of the dance. But Charlie is the pioneer of the very first epoch of his art. Chaplin interprets himself. And he sums up not what is being done, like Nijinski, but what is going to be done. "I think of Nijinski when I think of Chaplin."

All of which brings up the question of whether Charlie will do any dancing in his next First National comedy.

KOSLOFF WAS VIOLINIST

In case you didn't know it, Theodore Kosloff, Russian dancer and actor in Paramount Pictures, once swung a mean violin in a Moscow orchestra. By this means he supported himself while attending the Imperial Russian ballet school from which he graduated in company with such famous dancers as Pavlowa, Mordkin and Nijinsky. Mr. Kosloff is now playing a strong "heavy" role in "To Have and To Hold," a George Fitzmaurice production for Paramount, featuring Betty Compson and Bert Lytell.

Depressions Are Nothing in Her Life

There may have been some business depression in the film industry during the past year; but if so, Virginia Valli hasn't heard of it.

The busy little bee, to whom all are urged to turn as a shining example of industry, is a sluggard compared with this little lady who has piled success upon success until her many achievements on the screen have been rewarded with stardom.

Ten big pictures within a year is the record of Miss Valli. Her latest and greatest, "The Storm," is now playing at The Mission Theater. It may be regarded as the chief reason for Miss Valli's having been elevated to stardom.

Her career is a proof of reward awaiting the combination of beauty, personal charm and dramatic ability on the screen. She came to Los Angeles from New York about a year ago to play opposite Bert Lytell in three Metro pictures. Her services were in demand at other studios before she had finished this engagement.

She was immediately engaged by Fox for several leading roles, and went from there to support Frank Mayo in "Tracked to Earth." Her work in this production made such a favorable impression that she was cast for the leading feminine part in "The Storm."

Since then she has been rushing from Goldwyn to Fox, to Universal and back again, trying to keep everyone satisfied, and to take fullest advantage of the great vogue into which her early pictures thrust her.

Although Miss Valli is somewhat out of breath from the pace fame has set for her she is now playing in two productions at different studios; she is very grateful for her good fortune.

She is hoping that her new starring contract will relieve her from working more than 16 hours a day, but if it doesn't she'll make the best of it, she says. She's used to it by this time, anyhow.

SOME BALLYHOO

Three-Ring Send-off is planned for "Oliver"

If Jackie Coogan's recently completed feature, "Oliver Twist," is not ballyhooed louder than a three-ring circus, it will not be the fault of Sol Lesser.

Mr. Lesser has practically decided that he will road-show this attraction, and September release dates are already being prepared. If Mr. Lesser's plans work out favorably, he will have some twenty-five companies on tour at the same time, each company carrying musicians, operators, advance men and managers.

Exploitation campaigns will be mapped out and supplied each city showing the Dickens masterpiece. A special book will be published and sold in the theater lobby as in the case of a song hit from a musical production.

The local premiere will take place late in September and will be produced on a lavish scale with the possibility of a big society presentation for the opening night. Arrangements for the social premiere are now under way between Mr. Lesser and Mrs. Michael Connell and other social leaders of the Southland.

BABY PEGGY CONTEST

The West Coast theaters, owned and controlled by Gore Brothers, Ramish and Sol Lesser, are running a Baby Peggy contest in all their theaters. This takes in the entire seventy-five playhouses that comprise the circuit. The contest is along the same lines as originated by Sid Grauman and Julius Stern.

IN "ENTER MADAME"

Elliott Dexter is to appear opposite Clara Kimble Young in "Enter Madame," her new starring picture, being produced by Harry Garson for Metro. This will be the second picture in which Mr. Dexter has played with Miss Young, as he was her leading man in "The Hands of Nara," recently completed.

scenes at the British institute of learning.

The company guides had informed the headmaster, or some such, that they were planning to take some pictures of one of the old portions of the buildings for the Hall Caine story.

"Pictures?" queried the master. "You mean photographs."

"Not still photographs, no," replied a member of the company. "Moving pictures."

"Moving pictures!" exclaimed the master. "You mean the pictures that flicker."

"Yes," his informant answered, somewhat perturbed.

"Moving pictures!" exclaimed the master. "You don't say. Well, well. I saw one of them eight years ago, and actually, would you believe it, there was a train in it that moved."

Our general impression is, that the movies will remain in their infancy as long as the producers and the censors, whom we lump together in this instance (for they are both to blame,) continue to regard the public as children.

It is the fate, or the virtue, or the misfortune — whichever you please—of some men to go through life suffering the mispronunciation of their names. Not that it makes any difference to anybody, except themselves. And I don't suppose they care particularly if, while succumbing to the popular strangulation of vowels, consonants and foreign accents, they attain fame.

However, I take this opportunity of putting one good old Spanish-California name back on the phonetic chart, as it were, said name being none other than that of Leo Carrillo, who has been playing at the Orpheum.

The other night, in conversation with Carrillo, I caught his own pronunciation of his name, and it varied considerably from the popular a-la-umbrella style. I asked him for the phonetic facts and he gave them to me as Ca-reel-yo, with a strong roll of the "r."

Carrillo comes of one of the oldest Spanish families in Southern California. Six generations, in fact, have lived in this locality, and they are the descendants of the followers of Cortez, who conquered Mexico and discovered California early in the Fifteenth Century.

Can the Dead Return, is Film's Theme

Do the dead ever return? Can there be a personality strong enough, so that once having entered the next life, it can reach back to earth and influence the ones with whom it was familiar? This question is said to be affirmatively answered in "Borderland," a recently completed Paramount picture, in which Agnes Ayres has the stellar role, and which opens at Grauman's tomorrow.

This strange, yet beautiful story, is calculated to appeal to all classes regardless of whether or not they believe in spirit return. It is the story of a woman who is tempted to desert her husband and child for another man. The spirit of a relative who lived and died seventy or more years before, gropes its way to the side of the girl-wife and shows her the sorrow of evil-doing. The tragedy in the life of the former inhabitant of earth are depicted in a sequence of cut-backs of the 1850 period and, before it is too late, the modern woman is saved, and her child rescued from a sad fate, thus ending the drama most satisfactorily.

It is to be understood that in no way is this a ghost story, nor yet spiritualistic propaganda. It is more on the order of that fascinating story, "The Return of Peter Grimm," or the great New York success, "Liliom." With Agnes Ayres playing a dual role, supported by Milton Sills, Casson Ferguson, Bertram Grassby and others, it is to be noted that a powerful and competent cast has been selected for this unusual picture.

HUMOR ON SCREEN

Neilan Is Only Director Who Gets It, Says Critic

The one American director capable of getting a sense of humor on the screen is Marshall Neilan, according to Frederick James Smith, Eastern correspondent for The Times, in his review of films for the past year which appears in the August issue of Photoplay Magazine.

In making his selection of the eight best motion-picture productions of the past year, Mr. Smith, who is one of the foremost authorities on things cinematic, lists Neilan's, "Bits of Life" as one of the most noteworthy achievements.

"Marshall Neilan, it seem to me," says Mr. Smith in his review, "is the one American director capable of getting a sense of humor on the screen. Chaplin, you ask? His is a sense of trgi-comedy, not of humor.

"Neilan revealed his forte, along with his keen ability at melodrama and variety, in his Grand Guignol picture of the photoplay, 'Bits of Life,' a telling of four entirely separate stories. Of these I liked best the story of the deaf man living in his tottering world of dreams, although the opus of the briskly humorous young graduate of the college of crime, adroitly played by Rockcliffe Fellows, lingers in my memory."

STUDIO WILL HAVE FORMAL OPENING

At the formal opening of the new Cosmosart studios at Temple and Vermont, tomorrow evening, the Federal Photoplays, Incorporated, will present a preview of Benjamin B. Hampton's production "Hearts Haven," by Clara Louise Burnham. The invited guests will include many of the stars and officials in the motion-picture industry. Several scenes from "Hearts Haven" will be reacted upon sets used in the making of the picture. The cast will appear personally, including Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Claire McDowell, Carl Gantvoort, Betty Brice, Jean Hersholt, Frank Hays, Aggie Herring, Frankie Lee and others, with Jean Hersholt directing. Following the preview dancing on the big stage will be in order, with a special jazz orchestra. The entire grounds of the Cosmosart studios, comprising twenty acres, will present a gala appearance for the affair.

First Coast Bow of New Puppet Plays

The Hollywood Community Theater will sponsor the first Southern California appearance of Grace Barnes's puppets next Friday and Saturday as a part of the summer course in the arts of the theater. Three clever marionettes will appear in "The Tale of Peter Rabbit," and a "Puppet Circus"—a program that will appeal to children of all ages from 9 to 90.

The puppet play is the newest and at the same time the oldest entertainment in the world. It may be traced back for centuries to its origins in ancient Egypt, India, China, Japan and Greece, where the marionette appeared before the human actor was thought of.

In America, the art-marionette has been known less than ten years, having been first brought to life at the Chicago Little Theater by Ellen Van Volkenburg (Mrs. Maurice Browne,) who with her husband established there the first art theater in this country. There she made her production of "Alice in Wonderland," and "Midsummer Night's Dream"—later showing these in New York, where in the meantime Tony Sarg had created his puppets. Mrs. Browne produced "The Rose and the Ring" for Mr. Sarg, when it was first given in New York.

"The Tale of Peter Rabbit" and "A Puppet Circus" will become a visible reality to those who visit the Hollywood Community Theater next Friday and Saturday, when Grace Barnes's puppets will appear. Miss Barnes has been associated in her work with both Mr. Maurice Browne and Miss Van Volkenburg and brings to her productions a knowledge of the art theater which adds much to their aesthetic value.

NEW MOVIE PALACE IS HUMDINGER

They Call It the Barn, and It Lives Up to Name; It's a Place of Filmy Relics

Shades of Biograph!

Wanta know what's become of Helen Holmes, and all the old-time vanguard of the fillums? Where they've disappeared to?

Well! They haven't disappeared. They're just coming to light again. Down on South Main street. At the Barn.

The Barn, folks, is the most ultra-modern thing they have in motion-picture theaters. Serve $23,000,000 spring water, and all that. It doesn't look like much from the outside. A few cheap posters, and a tin box with a hand-painted sign that says "Please drop tickets here." A box office at one side, where a girl slips you a piece of card board for your dime. There's a bale of hay hung up out in front for a sign.

Inside it's different, though. You're accustomed to seeing beautiful lighting effects, aren't you? So beautiful that nothing surprises you any more? Well, down at the Barn you'll find something that will surprise you. The color effects just naturally aren't.

The walls are made of rough planks ten inches wide, running from the ceiling to the floor. They didn't (or couldn't) spare any paint for the inside. But you'll never miss it. They have concealed lighting at the barn. Lights are concealed in large wooden tubs (any farm-yard has 'em) hung from the ceiling. At various points of vantage wooden ladders run straight up the walls to the lofts above. Beams and supporters are beautifully decorated with old wagon wheels, and bits of harness that have outlived their usefulness. Tools and horseshoes abound.

Comfort, apparently, is the watchword of the management. The seats don't boast leather arms and backs, but there's plenty of room to sit down without sticking your feet in the aisle, and people can walk past without walking all over your pet corns.

Music is supplied by a superb eighty-five-piece organization (if you count each key a piece) composed of one (1) automatic piano, electrically driven.

The program is made up of some of the oldest pictures the management can dig up. They had Ben Turpin, the other day, in a picture made before Ben learned to use his eyes. And Mary Pickford in "The Hunted Beast." Not to mention the Helen Holmes railroad pictures that have more thrills per square inch than any other similar series ever flimmed.

You folks who always point with pride to the great advance motion pictures have made in the last ten years don't want to overlook the Barn. You'll be surprised at the great advance we haven't made in certain branches of the industry. Some of the stories turned out in those days are the equal of anything on the screen today.

ENGLAND SEES FOREIGN FILMS

"Jewish Hearts" Acclaimed German Success

"Love's Crucible" Becomes Swedish Masterpiece

Jessie Hasselquist Said to be Great Artiste

BY DAVIS EDWARDS

[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE]

LONDON, July 9.—The first big German film to be shown in London since the war (that is, the first film to be announced here openly as a German film, several have been produced here as American which I am told confidentially really have been German) is now bing shown at the big Rivoli Theater.

And there have been no riots.

On the contrary, there has been almost universal praise.

I am told that the film has not yet been shown in America and therefore I shall write of it freely.

"Jewish Hearts," it is called here, and it is said that its original promotors had in mind the thought of doing something to allay the anti-Jewish propaganda which as well as the thought of making money seems to be sweeping the world.

RUSSIAN LOCALE

The tale goes to Russia for its scene and its time is in the early 90's.

A young Jewish student has violated his religion and has been baptised so that he may gain certain advantages in his crosen profession of law.

In consequence, his father curses him, and his relatives revile and disown him.

His career is brilliant but entirely without love, for his own race will not have him and no Christian girl whom he could care for could destroy herself by marrying a Jew.

I never have seen any film so slow, which at the same time was effective. This, done with amazing deliberation but with infinite artistry, seems to have swept the most serious-minded British critics off their feet, even though it is a production of the Germans.

COMPETITION FOR BIG FILMS

It is so good a production that it may seriously compete with some of the big films with which the British industry is trying to fight America's habit of film success in British theaters. And its careful thought certainly makes some of America's slap-dash extravagance of production seem foolish and tawdry.

British film men find some comfort in the thought (as expressed to me by one of them:) "Well, any way, it's a tragedy and tragedies are not popular at the filmhouses."

The tragedy comes when this young Jew, who has denied the faith of his fathers, is caught in a pogrom.

In this terrible and brutal demonstration of hostility against his race, the fact that he has been baptised a Christian does not save him. The political agents, who have instigated the attack upon the people of his blood, have no desire to save him; his change of faith has not made them admire him. He dies.

RUSSIAN CAST

Most of the actors are Russian, not German; but the production in every detail of its direction, is wholly German—and is literally magnificent.

Its extraordinarily slow progression does not bore the spectator, but gives a great sense of dignity.

Perhaps this film will make some of the American apostles of "speed," even in the most serious film scenes, take thought. Here is deliberation in a film holding an average audience literally spellbound—as if frozen motionless in their seats.

FINEST FILM IS SWEDISH

But this is not the finest film that I have seen this week.

The finest, also, is neither British nor American. It will make a profound impression, I am sure, when, next week, it is offered to the public. A private view occurred this week.

"Love's Crucible" is the name of this extraordinary photoplay, and it was made in Sweden. Unless I very much miss my guess American producers will find much to study in this film and others which may come out of the studio of its creator, Victor Seastrom, although if the producers persist in the gloomy endings, so popular among their own people, they will not compete successfully with American films.

DELIBERATE DEVELOPMENT

Here is imagination and no garishness. Again the lack of hurry, the definite avoidance of "speed" is an extraordinary relief to eyes and nerves. Nothing flashes at you and is gone; no characters hop about like jumping-jacks, because a cameraman has erred in rate of turning at his handle. Above all, in this film, something is left to the imagination. The power of suggestion is utilized as I never have seen it utilized in an American film.

I do not say that there are no faults in the film. In fact, there are many; but they are minor matters born, perhaps, of lack of knowledge of mechanical technique. Nowhere is there any lack of art or any evidence that the producer was "speeding up" as most American films do, because of an idea that film audiences prefer rapidity of action and even of motion, to art and naturalness.

NEW STELLAR LUMINARY

Unless I entirely err Jenny Hasselqvist, (no; I cannot pronounce "qv.") the star, will become one of the greatest film favorites in important roles if she has any reasonable opportunity.

I wish some great American company might get both her and the producer—and, mind you, I never heard of either of them before this week. Jenny Hasselqvist, at least, is a great actress.

But, alas! the tragic story told by the film also makes most unlikely any great success in the United States, where I am sure the methods by which it has been produced might well be studied with the utmost care by ambitious young producers, directors and actors of both sexes.

I will say this for this really great Swedish actress—she can wordlessly express emotion with fewer motions than any person who has ever posed for any picture I have ever seen. It is an artistic

New Comedy Plot Wanted by Will King

Will King wants a new musical comedy.

Of, course, King could write it himself, but after writing 300 or 400 for the same number of consecutive weeks, he wants to take a week off—and the only way he can secure a vacation is to have somebody write a show for him.

King holds many records for speed, and distance in the musical comedy free-for-all, being not only continuous, but automatic, and ambidextrous as well. He is always working simultaneously on three musical shows—the one he is writing, for week after next; one he is rehearsing for next week, and one he is playing. Is it any wonder Will King wants somebody to write him a new musical comedy?

There are no restrictions as to scene or theme. The only conditions imposed are that the plot be original, the situations funny and the conversation clean. "The Girl in the Taxi," last week's show at Pantages, "Stop Thief," the George M. Cohan farce, which is the feature of the present week's Pantages show, and "Lombardi, Ltd." which King has translated into musical comedy for the coming week, indicate the standard required.

Write out your plot in synopsis form and send it to Will King. He will do the rest.

JUVENILE SCHOOL

Warner Brothers May Start New Branch

Warner Brothers West Coast studios will soon be the home of a juvenile motion picture school, if plans materialize.

Jack and Sam Warner, along with Harry Rapf, have evolved a plan whereby the numerous youngsters who belong to the different employees of the studio will be able to learn the motion-picture business.

"This school will not be for acting but to teach the youngsters the production and," Jack Warner said yesterday.

The only children admitted to the class will be those of the studio people. Among those already enrolled are Jackie Warner, Jack L. Warner's youngsters; maurice Rapf, son of Harry Rapf; William Beaudine, Jr., whose father is directing Wesley Barry in "Little Heroes of the Street," and the youngster of James Hogan, assisting Beaudine.

WHAT'S WORTH WHILE

Opinions of "The Times" Readers Regarding Plays, Pictures and Music, and Their Interpreters

Criticises Acting

Among the feminine cinema stars, Norma Talmadge holds first place. She is the ideal of all what an actress should be. She is both beautiful and talented; a perfect dynamo of dramatic power. Furthermore, she is an artist to the very tips of her well-manicured fingers.

The pictures in which she has been appearing of late are far below par; they fail to measure up to the excellence of the former ones when Eugene O'Brien was for the first time her leading man. And now that she is to have him again as her principal foil, it is to be hoped that the roles these artists will enact will not be found wanting in artistic success.

How delightful it would be to see Norma Talmadge on the speaking stage. I hear that she has a well-cultivated voice, which a vast majority of the screen stars do not possess. I am positive that Miss Talmadge would make an ideal Carmen, and should she attempt that passionate role she would make it one of her greatest, if not her greatest.

The main trouble with a great many of the screen stars of both sexes, they cannot act. Their only attractive attribute is their good looks. When it comes to enacting a character they miserably fail. They can only be themselves; they cannot submerge their identity in the role they are expected to portray. This is one of the prime drawbacks which make a great many of the pictures so uninteresting to an intelligent audience.

HARRY CARVIL.

Wants Better Stage Plays

I should like to say a few words of appreciation for the letter by Mr. Harry Carvil, printed in last Sunday's paper, in which he complained of the trash which is being played on our American stages today. I especially agree on his selection of plays worth while, though I am afraid Shakespeare, Pinero and Sutro would be out of the question, but "Camille" and "The Great Divide" gave enough of the old "hokum" to please the common lot, and enough of real beauty of poetry of line to please one who really appreciates good plays.

I think there is one stock company in Los Angeles which is striving slowly but steadily to produce good plays, and that is Dalton's. A comparatively new company, but one which needs the city's theatergoers, patronage to inspire their confidence.

It cannot be said that the appreciation and taste for good plays is gone from us, for it is certain that the Mason Theater, for the most part, has had a remarkable repertoire for the last two seasons, and very good houses.

I certainly feel that Los Angeles theatergoers should feel indebted to the Mason for the splendid selection of plays which it has brought to us here, such as the two plays of those splendid actors, Blanche Bates and Henry Miller, whom we could not have among us too often; also the plays of Ethel Barrymore, Walter Hampton, Robert Mantell, David Warfield and others. With such performers in a season it is only the fault of the public themselves if they fail to be content.

TRY OUT NEW ONE

Pasadena Community Stages Local Product

Starting tomorrow evening, the Pasadena Community Players will try out another new play. This time it is "The Boy," by Bess J. Crary of Los Angeles. It is a comedy-drama dealing with the age-old conflict between youth and its elders.

Miss Crary has taken a different "slant" at the subject. The judges in the play contest recently conducted by the Pasadena Center of the Drama League recommended "The Boy" for production.

A cast of twenty-two players is required. The title role will be taken by Jack Hinrichs. Gilmore Brown and his assistant, Eloise Sterling, have had charge of the rehearsals. There will be seven performances of "The Boy."

CHILDREN'S DAY

BOWL PROGRAM IS DESIGNED FOR YOUNGSTERS

This afternoon's concert at the Hollywood Bowl will be a children's program with Frieda Peycke to entertain both the children and their grown-ups with songs set to poems by Carl Bronson, James Foley and Mrs. Walter Mitchell, all of whom live in Southern California.

The performance is to begin at 8 o'clock and all children under 12 years, accompanied by parents or chaperons, will be admitted without charge.

Mr. Hertz has chosen the "Poet and Peasant" overture, "L'Arlesienne Suite" of Bizet, the "Spring Song" and "Spinning Song" of Mendelssohn and that most perfect of all waltzes, the "Blue Danube" of Strauss, to complete this twilight hour of music.

Boris Duney, who is in California to write the music for Douglas Fairbanks's "Robin Hood," is to be the guest conductor on Tuesday evening, and will conduct a typically Russian program. His only other appearance as guest conductor in this country was for Rudolph Ganz and the St. Louis Symphony.

Thursday evening is given over to Wagner, and Mme. Anna Sprotte will be the soloist on this occasion. Mr. Hertz will conduct the Prelude of "Lohengrin," overture to "Rienzi," the overture to "Tannhauser" and excerpts from "Tristan and Isolde" and the "Meistersinger."

Saturday evening Mr. Hertz will conduct the Saint-Saens Prelude to "Le Deluge," which features a violin solo by Svedrofsky, and the Ballet from "Le Cid" (Massenet,) which is entirely Spanish in character. The Liszt "Hungarian Fantasie" for piano will be played by Victoria Boshko, a young Russian pianist whose debut in Los Angeles is being watched with great interest. She is a pupil of Bauer, and has been very popular on the continent.

Presents Young Pupil

Marguerite Porter, 13-year-old pupil of Homer Grunn, will be presented in a piano recital in the ballroom of the Egan Theater on Friday evening, the 28th inst. Her program will include the Fantasie in D Minor of Mozart; the "Children's Corner" of Debussy, and the "Capriccio Brilliante," opus 22 of Mendelssohn.

Two Pupils' Recitals

A vocal recital by pupils of Joseph Nevlin Whybark was given in Walker Auditorium on the evening of the 15th inst., with Miss Nellie Vaughn Whybark at the piano. A second recital will be given tomorrow evening, featuring selections from Verdi, Massenet, Rossini, Leoncavallo and Balfe. The principal event of the program will be a scene from "Il Trovatore," in which Miss May McMullen will appear as Leonora, Mrs. Virginia Cole as Asucena, Lee Lindig as Manrico and Glen Merrill as Count Di Luna.

Special Musical Service

A special musical service will be given this evening at the First Presbyterian Church, Twentieth and Figueroa streets, under the direction of Sibley G. Pease, organist-director. A quartet composed of Jeannette Colwell, Virgie Lee Moore Mattoon, A. Sheldon Balinger and Lawrence Tibbet, with Mr. Herbert Lewin, solo violinist, will assist.

WHISTLING STAR IS HOME AGAIN

Margaret McKee

The song of the California mocking bird is now familiar to staid Londoners. They have delighted in a thrill, which is new to their ears. And they have enjoyed and applauded the runs, the roulades and the trills for which the bird of this State is famous.

All thanks to the skill of Margaret McKee, the whistling artist, who is returning to the city this week, as a featured star in vaudeville. Miss McKee has just come back from a trip abroad, during which she had a surpassing success with her talent. She proved that the California-trained artist can impress and even startle audiences of the Old World centers, accustomed to gifts of the most notable kind.

Miss McKee has been absent from this city, which is her home, for about two years. She took part in concerts in New York and abroad, visiting both the British Isles and the Continent. She later appeared in the revue, "The League of Notions," at the New Oxford Theater in London, and was praised highly by critics for her accomplishments.

She will remain in this city for one week, while appearing at the Orpheum, and then go north to make a vaudeville appearance in Oakland. Another week here, and then she will leave for New York to begin rehearsals for the "Music Box Revue," in which she is to whistle next season.

Miss McKee is married to Dr. Samuel C. Glasgow, who is at present completing a post-graduate course in eye, ear, nose and throat work in New York. When he completes this course, it is the intention of the couple to settle in California. Miss McKee has not yet determined whether she will continue her career after this time or not.

Expressing the Moods of Melody

Interpreters of Tone

Victoria Boshko (left,) pianist, to be featured in concert at the Bowl this week, and Christine Paauw, soprano soloist, on Sunday-morning program at Grauman's.

Art Center Concert

The concert given at the last meeting of the Los Angeles Art Center on Sunday evening, the 16th inst., at the George Smart studio, was a decided success, being varied and novel. A charming bit from the first act of "Madam Butterfly" was sung by Melba French Barr, soprano, and Harold Stanton, tenor. Doris June Struble presented a group of pianologues. Mr. Aldis Bartlett, an actor who has recently joined the musical colony here, presented Othello's speech to the senators. And a company of Denishawn dancers gave a colorful Javanese ballet.

Appears in Santa Barbara

Harold Stanton, tenor, who has recently come to Los Angeles, appeared in a joint recital with Frederick KoVert, dancer, at the Potter Theater in Santa Barbara on the 14th inst. Mr. Stanton will be the soloist at the California Theater in San Francisco the week of August 13th.

Features Local Composers

Frieda Peycke will include the works of three Southern California composers on the program which she will present this afternoon as soloist at the Hollywood Bowl. These numbers are: "Let's Play," by James W. Foley; "The Tale of the Whale," by Carl Bronson; and "The Big Road," by Mrs. Walter E. Mitchell.

California Concert

Carli Elinor's concert at the California Theater for the week beginning today will open with "Capriccio Italienne" by Tschaikowsky. This interesting composition all too seldom heard in America, is an orchestral treatment of melodies heard by the great composer during a sojourn in Italy.

"Entre'Acte Gavotte" from "Mignon" by Thomas, is the second number and in the way of syncopatian, "Ramany Love" by Zamecnick is offered. It is a new foxtrot, and a special arrangement is played by Mr. Elinor.

Grauman's Concert

The "distrocery" series of Grauman's Sunday morning concerts reach number thirteen today, and an especially interesting program promises to break the old hoodoo for everyone who attends.

Christino Paauw, coloratura soprano, will sing an aria from "La Traviata," while Harold Davidson, tenor, has chosen Metcalf's beautiful song, "Absent" as his offering.

A unique feature will be a "Concert Humoresque," introducing gay little pieces composed by our best musicians. Among them will be H. Leonard's "The Cat and Mice," "The Driver and the Donkey," played by a string quartet.

Henry Murtagh's organ numbers are "The Medtation," from Thais, "Artist's Live Waltz," by Strauss, Andanto Religioso," by Bendel, this being the musical expression of the composer's first Sunday morning on the shore of Lake Geneva. Selections from Friml's musical play, "Katinka," and Mr. Murtagh's own transcription of 'Mother Machree," will complete a program of unusual interest.

Los Angeles Trio

The Los Angeles Trio will give their regular concert tomorrow evening at southern branch, University of California. Following is the program:

Trio, E Flat Major, No. 1 .... Beethoven
2.
Passacaglia, violin and violoncello ....
Handel-Halvorsen
3.
Trio, A Minor, Op. 50 .... P. Tschaikowsky
(In memory of a great artist.)

This is the last of the concert series that will be given by the Los Angeles Trio for the summer session. The concerts at the Gamut Club have been cancelled.

Will Play "Fortune Teller"

Selections from Victor Herbert's "The Fortune Teller" will be played as a feature by the Ambassador sextette under the direction of Josef Rosenfeld this evening at the Ambassador. Following is the program in detail:

Selection, "La Boheme" (Puccini;) "Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltz (Strauss;) "Know'st Thou Not" from "Mignon" (Thomas;) selections, "Fortune Teller" (Herbert;) polonaise (Chopin;) "A la Bien Aime" (Schuett;) "Peer Gynt" suite (Grieg;) "Ah, Moon of My Delight!" (Lehmann;) Artists' Life," waltz (Strauss,) and "Faust" selections (Gounod.)

UNIQUE ENSEMBLE

Ukrainian National Chorus to Visit Los Angeles

The Urkrainian National Chorus, an extraordinary vocal ensemble styled by European authorities a "human symphony orchestra," is being brought to this country in the fall by Max Rabinoff, former impresario of the Boston Grand Opera Company and of the Pavlowa Ballet Russe, who also introduced to America in 1913 the famous Balalika orchestra.

Mr. Rabinoff believes the Ukrainian National Chorus will introduce something new in art to America as epoch-making as the ballet Russe. Europe calls this the most perfect ensemble organization in the world. Praise from the press and acclamation from the public have followed them in a tour, lasting three years, throughout the most important cities of Europe.

Music in Ukrainia is a national thing. And while our government is still discussing a minister of Fine Arts in the President's Cabinet, Ukrainia, who proclaimed her independence in 1918, immediately set out to establish a network of national choruses fostered by the State under the Ministry of Education.

Their music is a blend of Christian and pagan, dating back to the early Christian hymns introduced by the Russo-Greek church in 988. The heroic Cossack is here, bold and daring in love exploits or military conquests. He is the farmer-soldier from the Ukraine, and he laughs as he sings!

A new people, a new music, and a new phase of vocal art will be introduced to this country by the coming of the Ukrainian National Chorus. The season opens at Carnegie Hall, New York, on October 5.

WEARING 'EM ALL LENGTHS

Short Skirt No More

The new many-lengthened skirt and side-draped bodice is a Parisian mode.

BY OLIVE GRAY

"They are wearing them of every length," writes Mr. Max Isaacs, from Paris and accompanies his assertion with photographs illustrative to the fact. Pictures of the races show that the feminine mind is as unsettled upon the subject of skirt length, over there, as here. In the accompanying photograph, it would seem that all lengths have conspired to place themselves within one gown. The slip of silk is short enough—almost—to suit the most flapperish; while the overtunic, of French hand-woven lace, falls in several lengths, the utmost arriving at the instep. The new, one-sided drapery, wherein the mooted question of the waist-line is more mooted than ever, is a forthcoming mode of the advancing season. The broad picture hat is also in the wind, for winter. Mr. Isaacs has selected many interesting modes for The Unique, during his prolonged stay in Paris, from whence he will return early in August.

PIERRE KEY'S Music Article

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY.

PIERRE V. R. KEY

NEW YORK, July 22.—After such a sight as that at the Lewisohn Statdium, a few evenings ago, when the Philharmonic Orchestra started the summer night concerts, one has visual evidence of what music means to most everybody. The great amphitheater was packed; down on the broad strip of turf which swept before it to right and left sat some of the smartest folk who are left in town at this time of year—a few of them ran up, or down, from their summer places to be present at what turned out to be the most satisfying Stadium Concert opening in the history of that particular project. Throughout the evening there were other signs that rather hinted at accomplishments to come; for one thing, the orchestra was in midseason form. Also—after nearly forty days and nights of rain—the skies had suddenly cleared. We actually discovered the moon, and far off, a star twinkled.

After the difficulties of a year ago (when, as readers of this column may recall, the Union orchestra players struck just before the concerts opened) there was some beforehand pessimism. All this had been dispelled before the intermission by the fine playing of the orchestra and the audience's enthusiasm. One never can mistake applause; that sudden spontaneity, which flashes and swings in the winking of an eye when something impresses deeply a large number of hearers, is just as easily caught and felt as is the kind of soggy applause we know to be manufactured.

Henry Hadley conducted, and he was the one weak spot of the concert. Not that he didn't do a creditable piece of work. Hadley is a splendidly schooled musician, a fine craftsman, and one of the most technically skilled of American conductors. His conducting had moments to be commended, but none wherein a thrill was imparted to the listener.

WAGNER WAS KING

The Wagnerites were in their elements. If a count could have been taken of the fifteen thousand or so people who sat out under the heavenly canopy the majority doubtless would have admitted to a partiality for Richard Wagner's music. Everything was selected with keen regard for its appropriateness—Meistersinger (greatest of all operas,) Tannhauser, Tristan and Isolde, Parsifal, and Walkuere were represented on the program. There was just one objection; the concert was too long. Hadley might well have dispensed with the march he wrote and dedicated ("respectfully") to Adolph Lewisohn; it was music piffle, with Auld Lang Syné poking its head into the melody before one could say "boo!" Still, everybody was happy. The crowd went away satisfied; and each succeeding crowd has denoted the same feeling. There will be something to write next week about some of the soloists. It rather looks as though Mrs. C. S. Guggenheimer and Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar, chairman and vice-chairman of the executive committee, and Manager Arthur Judson will have to be congratulated . . . when the Stadium concert season ends.

THOSE AUDITION WINNERS

One of the most important undertakings affecting young musicians recently attempted is the latest Stadium Audition Contest. The first was held a year ago, wherein some shortcomings due to starting the project developed. This season, however, quite a different story can be told. The outcome gives opportunities to six young artists to appear as soloists at six Stadium concerts; and each will receive a fair fee and, possibly, gain some prestage that will mean future cash in the artist's pocket. The successful contestants were Miss May Korb, soprano; Miss Helen Jeffries, violinist; Louis Dornay, tenor; William Simmons, baritone; Frank Sheridan, pianist, and Harry Kaufman, pianist.

Eleven hundred applications were received by Mrs. William Cowen, chairman of the audition committee, of which nearly three hundred proved ineligible. The eight hundred who competed disclosed an interesting state in the development of young musicians who had expended years and much money in developing their talents . . . with the hope of turning them to professional account. The pianists revealed the highest standard; the singers and violinists were about equal. What was disheartening was the lack of preparedness of most of those heard; it is doubtful in a score of these ambitious young will ever be heard from in professional music life.

CHICAGO OPERA PLANS

I see that Richard Hageman has succumbed to the temptation to return to opera. It was a thing to be expected. For some thirteen years he was almost as familiar a sight around New York's Metropolitan Operahouse as the well-known scenery. Hageman served as a repititeur, and many is the singing youngster with ambitions of becoming a future Nordica, Fremstad or Farrar, or a Caruso, Amato or Plancon, who has been drilled by Hageman . . . thumping a piano and directing the youthful in ways it should go. The tall Richard has just been engaged by the Chicago Opera Association as its coming season's Associate Musical Director and First Conductor of French operas. He will be assistant to Maestro Giorgio Polacco and should have something of a job on his hands.

Official announcement that the Chicago company has engaged Angelo Minghetti, tenor, and Cesare Formichi, baritone, may or may not prove to be interesting. If these artists—neither of whom has ever appeared in this country—make big impressions then everybody will be happy. Meanwhile, Business Manager Clark A. Shaw is traveling across the part of the United States west of the Mississippi, signing contracts for the company's tour which may include another tournee on the Pacific Coast.

Clarence Whitehill is just back from having sung at the London opera season, and enthusiastic over the Queen of England. "Never have I met a more charming, gracious lady," declared the Metropolitan baritone. "I was fortunate in receiving an invitation to be presented at a function at which both the King and Queen of England were present, and quite a number of Americans were present. Any popular conception of the Queen's stiffness or formality was dispelled the moment I met her. She was so simple and direct in manner and speech that I could not get over it.

"The opera season serves as an example which we in our country may well emulate. It was English opera for English singers; and while my presence (as the sole American member of the organization) may not have been the cause for general shouting amongst my comrades, they were all generous in the nice things they had to say to me, and behaved like true English sportsmen. It has been decided to hold next year, for the first time since the war, a 'great' season of opera. Music in England is gradually resuming its former place in the lives of the people."

PEOPLE'S CHORUS

Comparatively few people are aware of the usefulness of New York's People's Chorus and the happiness it gives its many members. The start, a few evenings ago, of its July rehearsals resulted in the acceptance of a relatively large number of newcomers. Every Monday and Thursday, throughout the remainder of the summer, these rehearsals—which cover instruction in certain rudiments of singing and sight reading—will go on. By autumn the chorus will be ready to give its series of concerts. It is only a matter of time before every city and town in the United States will have an organization similar to this one.

HAPPY ARTISTS, MANAGERS

Smiles are beginning to cover the faces of New York's managers of artists, and the faces of those artists who are still in town. For, be it known, the local managers of concerts from all parts of the land are here—to see what they can see and get the best terms possible for the services of artists for their respective courses that will begin when summer has waned. There can be no doubt that the day of the "get all you can" is vanishing, in so far as fantistic fees for singers, pianists and violinists are concerned. Lower cachets are in order, and the result will be to the financial advantage of the men and women who run most of the risk and who do most of the work of presenting musicians to their respective patrons. It looks like a better music season than the previous one; and that should cheer up all concerned, including the public which patronizes the concerts.

DONAHUE WILL RETURN TO EAST

Having enjoyed a vacation during the spring and summer at his home in this city, Lester Donahue, the brilliant and gifted pianist, is planning to return to New York, which he makes his musical headquarters, early in the fall. He has an early engagement with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, of which Rudolph Ganz is director. He is to give one of the principal concertos with this musical organization. He will later arrange a tour, and will fill several other engagements with eastern orchestras.

Mr. Donahue presented a piano program Friday evening at the La Jolla Woman's clubhouse. Chiefly this was devoted to modern numbers, among these being Debussey's "Reflections in the Water" and "La Plus Que Lente;" De Falla's "Andalusia;" Dohnanyi's Rhapsodie; Liadow's "Barcarolle;" Godowsky's Valse, "Alt Wien," and Balakirew's "Islamey." Donahue also played Liszt's Variations on a theme of Bach.

He also took part, as soloist, in a benefit entertainment, given by Mme. Schumann-Heink, assisted by Miss Hermina West, Monday afternoon in the ballroom of the Hotel Coronado, for the Rest Haven Hospital fund. He played the Dohnanyi Rhapsodie and the "Alt Wien" valse by Godowsky, and received much applause and praise from the critics of the San Diego papers.

GET ACROSS

An idea in the hand is worth two in the head. The salesman is known by the orders he takes. Artists' dreams are worthless until they are put on canvas.

The only part of the play worth while is what gets over the footlights.

Get across! That's the entire dictionary of human success.

Not all the great thinkers of the world have reached the heights. Ability and worth are the most commendable, but it's the quality of getting over that brings home the bacon.—[Thrift Magazine.

GIANT FOR FAIRY TALE

Jack Earle, Century's seven-footer, will play a "big" part in "Hansel and Gretel," the latest fairy tale to be made into a Century comedy. Even though the part will be a "small" one, Earle will surely make a "big" one out of it.

SCHUMANN-HEINK IS CHAUTAUQUA SOLOIST

Last Tuesday evening marked an event of unusual musical interest in the auditorium of the Pacific Palisades Chautauqua, when Mme. Schumann-Heink sang there to a packed house.

Her renditions of American, French, Italian and German songs were met with enthusiastic applause, and she was called back time and time again. Many who have not heard Schumann-Heink in the past few years remarked upon the wonderful power of her voice, and it was the general consensus of opinion that her voice is as good as ever.

Mme. Schumann-Heink left immediately after her exclusive appearance here for an extended tour in the East.

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

By Olive Gray

Up-to-Datest:

"Here they are wearing them of every length!" Thus writes to me from Paris the proprietor of that Los Angeles store which always carries a unique selection of garments Parisian. Of course he refers to skirts. Well, so are we wearing them of every length. Still, we must own, the tendency is toward elongation. About the time we decide to accept them long, they will again be short; so let's not worry!

The revival of alpaca, for use in fashioning suits, especially those consisting of skirt and cape. Our grandames will recall with pleasure the old alpaca days. A practical material somewhat resembling palm beach, I would call it, alpaca is dust proof and in olden days was considered most practical, but we would consider it lacking in style, save that it now comes in alluring shades of breen and other popular tints, in place of blue or gray.

Electrifying!

In that brotherly store where they are installing a new department of electrical appliances, they are giving away—yes truly presenting—an electrical iron, with the purchase of each electric washer. It is only for a starter, of course; first come first electrocuted—or no! I mean first ironed. Alicia says she would go without her automobile, (almost) rather than relinquish her electric washing-machine. "Every turn of the machinery," she declares, "sings out 'leisure,' for it is really no trouble at all to do the entire washing and almost no time is consumed in putting it through. Even blankets—those banes of the housewife, go through the electric washer, without effort to the "wash-lady." "One may truly be a lady of leisure when using one of these, the most emancipating of all modern household inventions," my friend avers. Of course, the electric iron is first lieutenant to the washer.

New Suits for Fall

It is not exactly like gilding fine gold, but it is truly adding beauty to beauty, to insert metallic warp or woof in those knitted fabrics for suits and wraps. Then, when they are embroidered, over that, they are truly marvelous creations. The newest ones in that sport-store pre-eminent, where one always finds the latest word in country club attire, all of that described and to say that they are fascinating and wantable is to express it with sobriety.

With a bushy head of bristling black hair sprouting out from the stopper, a new perfume bottle is as fascinating as its odor is suggestive of the South Sea Islands. The bottle itself is squat and crouching, giving an air of some outlandish native about to hurl some missile—but the missile, in this case, is a haunting flower essence.

That New Game

Of course, though, it is not actually new since it comes from China where—can you imagine anything less than centuries old? But it is new to us. There are quaint, adorable little chests with many drawers and ranged within each are ivory squares, cubes or lozenges, or painted sticks of ivory. This is said to be one of the most fascinating of the oriental gambling games and everyone knows that the Orient excels in games of chance. It is predicted that "bridge" will have to look out for its laurels, the coming season, if this new man's game "takes." Oh, yes, it is a woman's game as well—perhaps more so, although its generic title is man. Anything for a change, even for the change

Bedecked

The most ordinary and plain of hats, when purchased at a certain popular store, will arive at one's home in a box so attractive as to and value to the article contained. A gayly colored picture, fraught with an air of country life, pasted across the top of the hat-box, seems to lend vivacity to the hat within, even though it be but a plain sailor or a one-color hat. How much the package has to do with every article marketed, nowadays.

Lacey Hats

Black lace did not sound very interesting when predicted, but it has managed to make itself felt in rather a pleasing way. Used as sleeves, themselves very unusual and fascinating this season, this filmy fabric, sometimes not so very filmy, when in the heavier Spanish weaves, has gained unexpected popularity. Its latest appearance is in trimming hats of felt. Sometimes, by way of streamers, black lace takes its place on black felt; again it becomes an eye-concealing veil or fall, set 'round the brim and barely or half-concealing the eyes in a most coquettish way.

American Japped

Oil-painted parasols, in Japanese effects and brilliantly colored, are one of the season's fads. Effective and protective are these 'sols; and especially out-of-doors looking.

The little black velvet coat is still being worn with the knife-plaited skirt.

Long silk fringe is used as trimming for evening gowns.

Black and rose feather tufts are smart on a black straw hat.

One-button black velvet jackets are worn with plaited skirts.

Tiny silver clamps edge a coat-frock of navy blue gabardine.

Jack Hoxie appears at the Hippodrome Sunday in his latest production, "A Man from Nowhere," a story of action and thrills, and filled with tense situations. He will have as his leading woman Miss Pansy Porter, who was leading lady for Eddie Polo in "The King of the Circus." "A Man from Nowhere" is a tale of the old West in the days when might made right, and every man was a law unto himself.

The vaudeville program will include "The Foch Four," original dancers from Belgium. The dances which they are featuring are all novelties.

Williams and Culver form an ideal combination of talent for entertaining purposes. George Murphy juggles while telling stories, and is an artist in his line. Sykes and Sykes are an exceptionally clever young pantomime comedian and adept cyclist, with an exceedngly shaply and unusually attractive miss, who sings and performs feats on bicycles and unicycles. Rube Trip, the acrobatic monologist, has an offering that is different, and Ardell and Tracy have a musical novelty.

"The Fool" Appeals Strongly

With its unusual appeal Channing Pollock's "The Fool" continues to be something of a sensation at the Majestic Theater, where it now enters its third week, still playing to capacity houses.

With "what would happen to a man, who, in this day and age, tried to live according to the teachings of Christ?" as its theme, the author has apparently struck a universal chord in the minds of theatergoers. Certainly the reception accorded Pollock's latest achievement bears out the author's contention that the time is ripe for such an appeal.

Mr. Pollock has succeeded in making his characters real human beings who carry his message. Richard Bennett, star in a long series of plays, has achieved another striking success in the role of Daniel Gilchrist, "The Fool." The choice of Mr. Bennett by producer Thomas Wilkes was a most happy one. Perhaps no actor on the stage today could play the role with finer understanding than Bennett.

The visiting star is receiving excellent support, notable work being done by Nana Bryant, Frederick Vogeding, Cliff Thompson, Gus P. Thomas, Henry Hall and Sara Bothern. Others in the cast are Maude Truax, Winona Wilson, Clare Verdera, Norman Feusier, Fred Manley, Franklin Pangborn, Jack Vosburgh, Fred Cummings, E. Forrest Taylor and Julia Adler.

Stage New York Hit

The popular New York success, "Listen, Honey," has been selected for this week's entertainment of Burbank patrons. It is said that the shortened version of this well-known Broadway success loses none of the speed and sparkle of the original, but has gained in tempo because of the elimination of much useless material. The best known and most popular musical numbers have been retained.

"Listen, Honey" will be given a cast of favorites, headed by Lee "Bud" Harrison, who has a minstrel part. There will also be a comedy part for Billie Moody, and Henry Sheer will be given a Hebrew role. Jean Darby, popular juvenile, Viola Teal, Olga Brooks and the Kemball Four are all included in the roster of principals.

Midgets Remain Headliners

For novelty and diversity of entertainment Singer's Midgets, now playing their second week at the Hillstreet, have few equals. Thirty tiny men and women, with their ponies, hunting dogs, elephants, and a lion, stage a performance that is a show in itself. It is produced with the greatest care, and the costuming and scenic effects bring forth applause in themselves.

Another feature of the new bill is the appearance of Wellington Cross, recently of musical comedy and now a vaudeville comedian, who has reached the heights of popularity. Cross is well versed in every branch of the theater, but particularly shines in comedy and travesty. He is assisted by Dean Moore.

Artistic comedy clay modeling will be offered by Yost and Clady, the French comedians. From mass of wet mud these clever artists model as skillfully as a sculptor chiselling from marble, and they do it in the twinkling of an eye.

"Don't Make Me Laugh" is the title of skit offered by Ann Butler and Hal Parker. The title would imply that this act is serious, but it is far from it.

A bright spot on the hill will be the appearance of Bill Robinson, the dark cloud of joy. Bill is a real streak when it comes to dancing, and he sings and tells stories as well as he dances.

Humor will also prevail on the screen in "John Smith," the feature photoplay. Eugene O'Brien plays the title role, and is surrounded by an excellent cast.

Letty is Leaving

It will be "So Long Letty" in actuality when Charlotte Greenwood closes her engagement at the Mason Operahouse next Saturday matinee in her new Oliver Morosco success, "Letty Pepper." Saturday night will not only bring the happiest visit of her career to a close but will mark her farewell to Los Angeles for a long, long time. Soon after departing from Los Angeles, Miss Greenwood will go to New York to remain, having reached that eminence in stardom whereby one becomes a Broadway fixture.

It was here seven years ago that the elongated comedienne began her joyous career as Letty. That was in "So Long Letty." And now in "Letty Pepper," Miss Greenwood has achieved her goal.

Miss Greenwood has been one of Los Angeles's first favorites ever since she started toward the top under the Morosco tutelage. And each succeeding engagement has increased her popularity. This is particularly true of her present visit in "Letty Pepper" in which even a funnier Charlotte has been revealed. Not only has she become uniquely adapt in her inimitable clowning, but she has given a striking contrast in serious moments.

"Letty Pepper," with its "typical Morosco cast," has served to establish others here. Ray Raymond, the leading man, who has shown that singing is a returning art, Master Gabriel, Stewart Wilson, Ruth Rickarby, Frances Victory, Mann Holiner, Marie Holly, Thomas Walsh and Wilfred Young all have contributed to the success of the play.

Three Varieties at Pan

This week's show at Pantages falls naturally into three sections, photoplays, vaudeville and musical comedy. Will King has charge of the last named division, and offers his musical version of the Morosco comedy, "Lombardi, Ltd.," appearing himself in the Hebrew role of the proprietor of the Lombardi stores, the role made famous by Leo Carillo. "Lombardi, Ltd." has never been offered here in this form, but received the San Francisco O. K. last winter when the Will King company presented it at the Casino in that city.

At the top of the vaudeville list appears Webber's Juvenile Orchestra, fifteen talented young musicians from Portland, Or., where they enjoy the distinction of being the official orchestra of the Rotary Club. Cloude and Hutchison at the piano; Emil and Wille, sensational aerialists; Callahan and Bliss, with their hilarious comedy, "Atta Boy, Petey," and other vaudeville features are promised.

The screen event will be the comedy photoplay, "Free Air," filmed from Sinclair Lewis's romance of the same name, which recently appeared as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post. It was a garage sign offering compressed atmosphere free and gratis that first brought the principals of "Free Air" together, but the story takes its name and theme rather from the freedom of the great outdoors in which their friendship ripened into intimacy and finally love.

WALTHALL IN VAUDEVILLE

fer," Mr. Walthall continued, "there are certain big advantages in screen work. It allows you to have a home and live in it. The traveling is the part of the theatrical game that's hardest for me.

"Then, as a general thing, the hours around a studio are good, and the atmosphere is very pleasant. But, on the other hand, you sometimes have to work eighteen hours at a stretch, while when you leave the theater, you're through.

"You see," he concluded, "they both have their good and bad points. Still, I'm distinctly looking forward to this vaudeville engagement."

Touching on the probable reception of his act, Mr. Walthall made one rather good point.

"I'm really quite optimistic about the act," said he. "It was awfully well received here, and I think that's a severe test in a way. Los Angeles audiences are hardened to 'personal appearances' by picture actors. But in the East, Middle West and South they're still a novelty. That's all in our favor."

TAME VAMP IN NEW "FOOL"

miscast as a worthless young son of the rich.

The weakest link in the cast is Wallie Reid, as the clean living lad from the West who brings about the regeneration. By all the gods of the cinema, something ought to be done about Wallie! It upsets us terribly to see this excellent young actor allowed placidly to slip into oblivion. That certainly is his destination unless he pulls himself up. The screen needs you, Wallie.

The Capitol this week is featuring its incidental program with a revival of Chaplin's immortal "Shoulder Arms" as the only film feature. The Rivoli has Jack Holt's "The Man Unconquerable," a pretty poor tale, with the likeable Jack as a pearl fisher in the South Seas. The opus is silly beyond words.

DARKTOWN AGAIN

There was one stage newcomer—the all-negro "Plantation Revue." New York is mad about darkey entertainment just now, what with several theaters and most of the cabarets presenting negro shows. The "Plantation Revue" is not another "Shuffle Along," although it has the star of that show, Florence Mills, as a feature.

If any one can jazz the blues better than Miss Mills we want to know it. We pronounce her our favorite dramatic actress in these parts. One of her new blues is of a particular indigo tinge.

By the way, the California friends of Herb Howe will be glad to know that he is in Paris and may return in September after a trip to Berlin.

Theda Bara is still debating her first Selznick vehicle. Meanwhile Mr. Bara, or rather Charles Brabin, is directing a mountaineer story down in Kentucky. Elinor Fair has the leading feminine role.

George Hackathorne is playing a leading role in a William Nigh production being shot in and about New York. Its temporary title is "Notoriety," which may stick if Nigh can buy the rights. With Hackathorne in the cast are Mary Alden, Rodla Roque, Richard Travers and Mona Lisa.

THE HAYS TRIP

Just about as you read these lines, Will Hays will be alighting from a train in your neighborhood. That is, unless he makes a sudden shift of plans. Hays was visiting at his home in Bayview, Mich., last Sunday when he decided upon a flying trip to the Coast. And he left the old farm Wednesday. He is due in Los Angeles Monday and will remain but six days.

Will he remove the Fatty Arbuckle ban while he is in California? We shall see.

Marcus Loew sailed for Europe Wednesday.

The local film trade weeklies have been passing through a shake-up. Arthur James is succeeded as editor of the Moving Picture World by Robert Welsh. James is joining Will Hays's extensive staff we hear. George Gould is out as editor of the Motion Picture News.

Edmund Goulding has sodl another script to Dick Barthelmess. It is called "The Beautiful City." Goulding supplied Dick with "Fury," his next picture in which Dorothy Gish will appear in the leading feminine role. He also wrote Mae Murray's next two pictures including "Broadway Rose."

Pyramid Pictures are starting again. Ray Smallwood started work last week on Donald McGibney's "When the Desert Calls," with Violet Heming as the Sahara heroine. Sheldon Lewis and Robert Frazer are in the cast.

Pearl White is back from Paris, and has started work on a Pathe serial bearing the temporary title of "Plunder."

We hear Catherine Calvert and Lowell Sherman are to appear in the stage melodrama "Lawful Larceny" in London. Also that Ward Crane is to have the Sherman role in the Chicago production of the same piece. Sherman is playing in the film production of a "A Face in the Fog," right now. The cast is headed by Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen.

treat, a novelty, an extraordinary thing.

My attention has been called to another detail indicating the extraordinary effectiveness of both the acting and the direction.

TOO MANY SUBTITLES

It is said that with both absolutely ideal no "captions" or explanatory "readers" would be needed. That ideal never has been realized. But in American films there is, I am informed by an expert, an average of twenty-five captions to the reel, or 150 to a six-reel film. This Swedish film is of six reels; at no point is there the slightest puzzlement because of lack of explanation; and there are but sixty captions in the whole production! It is an incredible relief to be freed of the constant reading between scenes.

FILMDOM ADVANCES

I do not in the least hesitate to say that in "Love's Crucible" the art of making films has taken a great step in advance.

While I am writing about non-British films shown here in London I may as well speak of "Fredericus Rex," the story of Frederick the Great told in a superfilm. It also is German and has all the German excellencies—and all the German faults. It has not been publicly produced here and may never be, but I am told that it is going promptly to America. It was designed, unquestionably, as a German propaganda film, but I cannot see it as such, for it surely does not propagandize for anything in the present Germany.

GERMAN PROPAGANDA

If it is propaganda for anything it is for the Hohenzollerns; Germany's disturbed condition at this moment does not urge toward a return of Hohenzollernism. I am told this film when shown at home had a mixed reception from the German working classes. An amusing detail of the clever propaganda touch is the hint in the film that at heart Frederick the Great was democratic.

At the moment the film is by far the greatest financial success in Germany, but I doubt if ever it will be shown in England and there is no real certainty that it even will be sent across to the United States. But it is a "superfilm" in every sense of the word—especially in its super-revelations of the supertendency of the super-German mind to regard as utterly superior the supermilitary.

MUSICAL

BOWL PROGRAM IS DESIGNED FOR YOUNGSTERS

This afternoon's concert at the Hollywood Bowl will be a children's program with Frieda Peycke to entertain both the children and their grown-ups with songs set to poems by Carl Bronson, James Foley and Mrs. Walter Mitchell, all of whom live in Southern California.

The performance is to begin at 5 o'clock and all children under 12 years, accompanied by parents or chaperons, will be admitted without charge.

Mr. Hertz has chosen the "Poet and Peasant" overture, "L'Arlesienne Suite" of Bizet, the "Spring Song" and "Spinning Song" of Mendelssohn and that most perfect of all waltzes, the "Blue Danube" of Strauss, to complete this twilight hour of music.

Boris Duney, who is in California to write the music for Douglas Fairbanks's "Robin Hood," is to be the guest conductor on Tuesday evening, and will conduct a typically Russian program. His only other appearance as guest conductor in this country was for Rudolph Ganz and the St. Louis Symphony.

Thursday evening is given over to Wagner, and Mme. Anna Sprotte will be the soloist on this occasion. Mr. Hertz will conduct the Prelude of "Lohengrin," overture to "Rienzi," the overture to "Tannhauser" and excerpts from "Tristan and Isolde" and the "Meistersinger."

Saturday evening Mr. Hertz will conduct the Saint-Saens Prelude to "Le Deluge," which features a violin solo by Svedrofsky, and the Ballet from "Le Cid" (Massenet,) which is entirely Spanish in character. The Liszt "Hungarian Fantasie" for piano will be played by Victoria Boshko, a young Russian pianist whose debut in Los Angeles is being watched with great interest. She is a pupil of Bauer, and has been very popular on the continent.

Presents Young Pupil

Marguerite Porter, 13-year-old pupil of Homer Grunn, will be presented in a piano recital in the ballroom of the Egan Theater on Friday evening, the 28th inst. Her program will include the Fantasie in D. Minor of Mozart; the "Children's Corner" of Debussy, and the "Capriccio Brilliante," opus 22 of Mendelssohn.

Two Pupils' Recitals

A vocal recital by pupils of Joseph Nevlin Whybark was given in Walker Auditorium on the evening of the 15th inst., with Miss Nellie Vaughn Whybark at the piano. A second recital will be given tomorrow evening, featuring selections from Verdi, Massenet, Rossini, Leoncavallo and Balfe. The principal event of the program will be a scene from "Il Trovatore," in which Miss May McMullen will appear as Leonora, Mrs. Virginia Cole as Azucena, Lee Lindig as Manrico and Glen Merrill as Count Di Luna.

Special Musical Service

A special musical service will be given this evening at the First Presbyterian Church, Twentieth and Figueroa streets, under the direction of Sibley G. Pease, organist-director. A quartet composed of Jeannette Colwell, Virgie Lee Moore Mattoon, A. Sheldon Balinger and Lawrence Tibbet, with Mr. Herbert Lewin, solo violinist, will assist.

Art Center Concert

The concert given at the last meeting of the Los Angeles Art Center on Sunday evening, the 16th inst., at the George Smart studio, was a decided success, being varied and novel. A charming bit from the first act of "Madam Butterfly" was sung by Melba French Barr, soprano, and Harold Stanton, tenor. Doris June Struble presented a group of pianologues. Mr. Aldis Bartlett, an actor who has recently joined the musical colony here, presented Othello's speech to the senators. And a company of Denishawn dancers gave a colorful Javanese ballet.

Appears in Santa Barbara

Harold Stanton, tenor, who has recently come to Los Angeles, appeared in a joint recital with Frederick KoVert, dancer, at the Potter Theater in Santa Barbara on the 14th inst. Mr. Stanton will be the soloist at the California Theater in San Francisco the week of August 13th.

Features Local Composers

Frieda Peycke will include the works of three Southern California composers on the program which she will present this afternoon as soloist at the Hollywood Bowl. These numbers are: "Let's Play," by James W. Foley; "The Tale of the Whale," by Carl Bronson; and "The Big Road," by Mrs. Walter E. Mitchell.

California Concert

Carli Elinor's concert at the California Theater for the week beginning today will open with "Capriccio Italienne" by Tschaikowsky. This interesting composition all too seldom heard in America, is an orchestral treatment of melodies heard by the great composer during a sojourn in Italy.

"Entre'Acte Gavotte" from "Mignon" by Thomas, is the second number and in the way of syncopatian, "Ramany Love" by Zamecnick is offered. It is a new foxtrot, and a special arrangement is played by Mr. Elinor.

Grauman's Concert

The "distrocery" series of Grauman's Sunday morning concerts reach number thirteen today, and an especially interesting program promises to break the old hoodoo for everyone who attends.

Christino Paauw, coloratura soprano, will sing an aria from "La Traviata," while Harold Davidson, tenor, has chosen Metcalf's beautiful song, "Absent" as his offering.

A unique feature will be a "Concert Humoresque," introducing gay little pieces composed by our best musicians. Among them will be H. Leonard's "The Cat and Mice," "The Driver and the Donkey," played by a string quartet.

Henry Murtagh's organ numbers are "The Medtation," from Thais, "Artist's Live Waltz," by Strauss, Andanto Religioso," by Bendel, this being the musical expression of the composer's first Sunday morning on the shore of Lake Geneva. Selections from Friml's musical play, "Katinka," and Mr. Murtagh's own transcription of 'Mother Machree," will complete a program of unusual interest.

Los Angeles Trio

The Los Angeles Trio will give their regular concert tomorrow evening at southern branch, University of California. Following is the program:

1.
Trio, E Flat Major, No. 1 .... Beethoven

2.
Passacaglia, violin and violoncello .... Handel-Halvorsen

3.
Trio, A Minor, Op. 50 .... P. Tschaikowsky
(In memory of a great artist.)

This is the last of the concert series that will be given by the Los Angeles Trio for the summer session. The concerts at the Gamut Club have been cancelled.

Will Play "Fortune Teller"

Selections from Victor Herbert's "The Fortune Teller" will be played as a feature by the Ambassador sextette under the direction of Josef Rosenfeld this evening at the Ambassador. Following is the program in detail:

Selection, "La Boheme" (Puccini;) "Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltz (Strauss;) "Know'st Thou Not" from "Mignon" (Thomas;) selections, "Fortune Teller" (Herbert;) polonaise (Chopin;) "A la Bien Aime" (Schuett;) "Peer Gynt" suite (Grieg;) "Ah, Moon of My Delight!" (Lehmann;) Artists' Life," waltz (Strauss,) and "Faust" selections (Gounod.)

WHISTLING STAR IS HOME AGAIN

Margaret McKee

The song of the California mocking bird is now familiar to staid Londoners. They have delighted in a thrill, which is new to their ears. And they have enjoyed and applauded the runs, the roulades and the trills for which the bird of this State is famous.

All thanks to the skill of Margaret McKee, the whistling artist, who is returning to the city this week, as a featured star in vaudeville. Miss McKee has just come back from a trip abroad, during which she had a surpassing success with her talent. She proved that the California-trained artist can impress and even startle audiences of the Old World centers, accustomed to gifts of the most notable kind.

Miss McKee has been absent from this city, which is her home, for about two years. She took part in concerts in New York and abroad, visiting both the British Isles and the Continent. She later appeared in the revue, "The League of Notions," at the New Oxford Theater in London, and was praised highly by critics for her accomplishments.

She will remain in this city for one week, while appearing at the Orpheum, and then go north to make a vaudeville appearance in Oakland. Another week here, and then she will leave for New York to begin rehearsals for the "Music Box Revue," in which she is to whistle next season.

Miss McKee is married to Dr. Samuel C. Glasgow, who is at present completing a post-graduate course in eye, ear, nose and throat work in New York. When he completes this course, it is the intention of the couple to settle in California. Miss McKee has not yet determined whether she will continue her career after this time or not.

UNIQUE ENSEMBLE

Ukrainian National Chorus to Visit Los Angeles

The Urkrainian National Chorus, an extraordinary vocal ensemble styled by European authorities a "human symphony orchestra," is being brought to this country in the fall by Max Rabinoff, former impresario of the Boston Grand Opera Company and of the Pavlowa Ballet Russe, who also introduced to America in 1912 the famous Balalika orchestra.

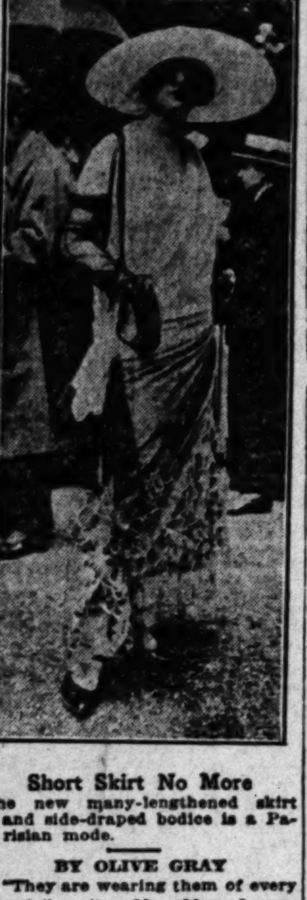
Mr. Rabinoff believes the Ukrainian National Chorus will introduce something new in art to America as epoch-making as the ballet Russe. Europe calls this the most perfect ensemble organization in the world. Praise from the press and acclamation from the public have followed them in a tour, lasting three years, throughout the most important cities of Europe.

Music in Ukrainia is a national thing. And while our government is still discussing a minister of Fine Arts in the President's Cabinet, Ukrainia, who proclaimed her independence in 1918, immediately set out to establish a network of national choruses fostered by the State under the Ministry of Education.

Their music is a blend of Christian and pagan, dating back to the early Christian hymns introduced by the Russo-Greek church in 988. The heroic Cossack is here, bold and daring in love exploits or military conquests. He is the farmer-soldier from the Ukraine, and he laughs as he sings!

A new people, a new music, and a new phase of vocal art will be introduced to this country by the coming of the Ukrainian National Chorus. The season opens at Carnegie Hall, New York, on October 5.

WEARING 'EM ALL LENGTHS



Short Skirt No More

The new many-lengthened skirt and side-draped bodice is a Parisian mode.

BY OLIVE GRAY

"They are wearing them of every length," writes Mr. Max Isaacs, from Paris and accompanies his assertion with photographs illustrative to the fact. Pictures of the races show that the feminine mind is as unsettled upon the subject of skirt length, over there, as here. In the accompanying photograph, it would seem that all lengths have conspired to place themselves within one gown. The slip of silk is short enough—almost—to suit the most flapperish; while the overtunic, of French hand-woven lace, falls in several lengths, the utmost arriving at the instep. The new, one-sided drapery, wherein the mooted question of the waist-line is more mooted than ever, is a forthcoming mode of the advancing season. The broad picture hat is also in the wind, for winter. Mr. Isaacs has selected many interesting modes for The Unique, during his prolonged stay in Paris, from whence he will return early in August.

An Electric Spark

Mamie had a negative personality which emanated from electrons which were uncontrolled. So she took a course by mail and had an audion installed, which produced harmonies superimposed on heterodyne frequencies and now she is a litzendrat wire of low permeability, and in the variometer of love, except for static reduction or oscillating resonance, all residual trouble is eliminated and—

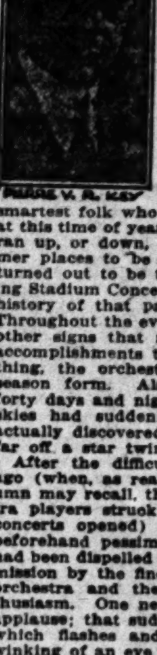
PIERRE KEY'S Music Article

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY.



PIERRE V. R. KEY

NEW YORK, July 22.—After such a sight as that at the Lewisohn Stadium, a few evenings ago, when the Philharmonic Orchestra started the summer night concerts, one has visual evidence of what music means to most everybody. The great amphitheater was packed; down on the broad strip of turf which swept before it to right and left sat some of the smartest folk who are left in town at this time of year—a few of them ran up, or down, from their summer places to be present at what turned out to be the most satisfying Stadium Concert opening in the history of that particular project. Throughout the evening there were other signs that rather hinted at accomplishments to come; for one thing, the orchestra was in mid-season form. Also—after nearly forty days and nights of rain—the skies had suddenly cleared. We actually discovered the moon, and far off a star twinkled.

After the difficulties of a year ago (when, as readers of this column may recall, the Union orchestra players struck just before the concerts opened) there was some beforehand pessimism. All this had been dispelled before the intermission by the fine playing of the orchestra and the audience's enthusiasm. One never can mistake applause; that sudden spontaneity, which flashes and swings in the winking of an eye when something impresses deeply a large number of hearers, is just as easily caught and felt as is the kind of soggy applause we know to be manufactured.

Henry Hadley conducted, and he was the one weak spot of the concert. Not that he didn't do a creditable piece of work. Hadley is a splendidly schooled musician, a fine craftsman, and one of the most technically skilled of American conductors. His conducting had moments to be commended, but none wherein a thrill was imparted to the listener.

WAGNER WAS KING

The Wagnerites were in their elements. If a count could have been taken of the fifteen thousand or so people who sat out under the heavenly canopy the majority doubtless would have admitted to a partiality for Richard Wagner's music. Everything was selected with keen regard for its appropriateness—Meistersinger (greatest of all operas,) Tannhauser, Tristan and Isolde, Parsifal, and Walkuere were represented on the program. There was just one objection; the concert was too long. Hadley might well have dispensed with the march he wrote and dedicated ("respectfully") to Adolph Lewisohn; it was music piffle, with Auld Lang Syné poking its head into the melody before one could say "boo!" Still, everybody was happy. The crowd went away satisfied; and each succeeding crowd has denoted the same feeling. There will be something to write next week about some of the soloists. It rather looks as though Mrs. C. S. Guggenheimer and Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar, chairman and vice-chairman of the executive committee, and Manager Arthur Judson will have to be congratulated . . . when the Stadium concert season ends.

THOSE AUDITION WINNERS

One of the most important undertakings affecting young musicians recently attempted is the latest Stadium Audition Contest. The first was held a year ago, wherein some shortcomings due to starting the project developed. This season, however, quite a different story can be told. The outcome gives opportunities to six young artists to appear as soloists at six Stadium concerts; and each will receive a fair fee and, possibly, gain some prestage that will mean future cash in the artist's pocket. The successful contestants were Miss May Korb, soprano; Miss Helen Jeffries, violinist; Louis Dornay, tenor; William Simmons, baritone; Frank Sheridan, pianist, and Harry Kaufman, pianist.

Eleven hundred applications were received by Mrs. William Cowen, chairman of the audition committee, of which nearly three hundred proved ineligible. The eight hundred who competed disclosed an interesting state in the development of young musicians who had expended years and much money in developing their talents . . . with the hope of turning them to professional account. The pianists revealed the highest standard; the singers and violinists were about equal. What was disheartening was the lack of preparedness of most of those heard; it is doubtful in a score of these ambitious young will ever be heard from in professional music life.

CHICAGO OPERA PLANS

I see that Richard Hageman has succumbed to the temptation to return to opera. It was a thing to be expected. For some thirteen years he was almost as familiar a sight around New York's Metropolitan Operahouse as the well-known scenery. Hageman served as a repititeur, and many is the singing youngster with ambitions of becoming a future Nordica, Fremstad or Farrar, or a Caruso, Amato or Plancon, who has been drilled by Hageman . . . thumping a piano and directing the youthful in ways it should go. The tall Richard has just been engaged by the Chicago Opera Association as its coming season's Associate Musical Director and First Conductor of French operas. He will be assistant to Maestro Giorgio Polacco and should have something of a job on his hands.

Official announcement that the Chicago company has engaged Angelo Minghetti, tenor, and Cesare Formichi, baritone, may or may not prove to be interesting. If these artists—neither of whom has ever appeared in this country—make big impressions then everybody will be happy. Meanwhile, Business Manager Clark A. Shaw is traveling across the part of the United States west of the Mississippi, signing contracts for the company's tour which may include another tournee on the Pacific Coast.

Clarence Whitehill is just back from having sung at the London opera season, and enthusiastic over the Queen of England. "Never have I met a more charming, gracious lady," declared the Metropolitan baritone. "I was fortunate in receiving an invitation to be presented at a function at which both the King and Queen of England were present, and quite a number of Americans were present. Any popular conception of the Queen's stiffness or formality was dispelled the moment I met her. She was so simple and direct in manner and speech that I could not get over it.

"The opera season serves as an example which we in our country may well emulate. It was English opera for English singers; and while my presence (as the sole American member of the organization) may not have been the cause for general shouting amongst my comrades, they were all generous in the nice things they had to say to me, and behaved like true English sportsmen. It has been decided to hold next year, for the first time since the war, a 'great' season of opera. Music in England is gradually resuming its former place in the lives of the people."

PEOPLE'S CHORUS

Comparatively few people are aware of the usefulness of New York's People's Chorus and the happiness it gives its many members. The start, a few evenings ago, of its July rehearsals resulted in the acceptance of a relatively large number of newcomers. Every Monday and Thursday, throughout the remainder of the summer, these rehearsals—which cover instruction in certain rudiments of singing and sight reading—will go on. By autumn the chorus will be ready to give its series of concerts. It is only a matter of time before every city and town in the United States will have an organization similar to this one.

HAPPY ARTISTS, MANAGERS

Smiles are beginning to cover the faces of New York's managers of artists, and the faces of those artists who are still in town. For, be it known, the local managers of concerts from all parts of the land are here—to see what they can see and get the best terms possible for the services of artists for their respective courses that will begin when summer has waned. There can be no doubt that the day of the "get all you can" is vanishing, in so far as fantastic fees for singers, pianists and violinists are concerned. Lower cachets are in order, and the result will be to the financial advantage of the men and women who run most of the risk and who do most of the work of presenting musicians to their respective patrons. It looks like a better music season than the previous one; and that should cheer up all concerned, including the public which patronizes the concerts.

(Copyright, 1922, by P. V. R. Key.)

DONAHUE WILL RETURN TO EAST

Having enjoyed a vacation during the spring and summer at his home in this city, Lester Donahue, the brilliant and gifted pianist, is planning to return to New York, which he makes his musical headquarters, early in the fall. He has an early engagement with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, of which Rudolph Ganz is director. He is to give one of the principal concertos with this musical organization. He will later arrange a tour, and will fill several other engagements with eastern orchestras.

Mr. Donahue presented a piano program Friday evening at the La Jolla Woman's clubhouse. Chiefly this was devoted to modern numbers, among these being Debussey's "Reflections in the Water" and "La Plus Que Lente;" De Falla's "Andalusia;" Dohnanyi's Rhapsodie; Liadow's "Barcarolle;" Godowsky's Valse, "Alt Wien," and Balakirew's "Islamey." Donahue also played Liszt's Variations on a theme of Bach.

He also took part, as soloist, in a benefit entertainment, given by Mme. Schumann-Heink, assisted by Miss Hermina West, Monday afternoon in the ballroom of the Hotel Coronado, for the Rest Haven Hospital fund. He played the Dohnanyi Rhapsodie and the "Alt Wien" valse by Godowsky, and received much applause and praise from the critics of the San Diego papers.

GET ACROSS

Above all things else, get across. An idea in the hand is worth two in the head. The salesman is known by the orders he takes. Artists' dreams are worthless until they are put on canvas.

The only part of the play worth while is what gets over the footlights.

Get across! That's the entire dictionary of human success.

Not all the great thinkers of the world have reached the heights. Ability and worth are the most commendable, but it's the quality of getting over that brings home the bacon.—[Thrift Magazine.

GIANT FOR FAIRY TALE

Jack Earle, Century's seven-footer, will play a "big" part in "Hansel and Gretel," the latest fairy tale to be made into a Century comedy. Even though the part will be a "small" one, Earle will surely make a "big" one out of it.

SCHUMANN-HEINK IS CHAUTAUQUA SOLOIST

Last Tuesday evening marked an event of unusual musical interest in the auditorium of the Pacific Palisades Chautauqua, when Mme. Schumann-Heink sang there to a packed house.

Her renditions of American, French, Italian and German songs were met with enthusiastic applause, and she was called back time and time again. Many who have not heard Schumann-Heink in the past few years remarked upon the wonderful power of her voice, and it was the general consensus of opinion that her voice is as good as ever.

Mme. Schumann-Heink left immediately after her exclusive appearance here for an extended tour in the East.

THE NEW

IN STORES AND HOMES

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

By Olive Gray

Up-to-Datest:

"Here they are wearing them of every length:" Thus writes to me from Paris the proprietor of that Los Angeles store which always carries a unique selection of garments Parisian. Of course he refers to skirts. Well, so are we wearing them of every length. Still, we must own, the tendency is toward elongation. About the time we decide to accept them long, they will again be short; so let's not worry!

The revival of alpaca, for use in fashioning suits, especially those consisting of skirt and cape. Our grandames will recall with pleasure the old alpaca days. A practical material somewhat resembling palm beach, I would call it, alpaca is dust proof and in olden days was considered most practical, but we would consider it lacking in style, save that it now comes in alluring shades of breen and other popular tints, in place of blue or gray.

Electrifying!

In that brotherly store where they are installing a new department of electrical appliances, they are giving away—yes truly presenting—an electrical iron, with the purchase of each electric washer. It is only for a starter, of course; first come first electrocuted—or no! I mean first ironed. Alicia says she would go without her automobile, (almost) rather than relinquish her electric washing-machine. "Every turn of the machinery," she declares," sings out 'leisure,' for it is really no trouble at all to do the entire washing and almost no time is consumed in putting it through. Even blankets—those banes of the housewife, go through the electric washer, without effort, to the "wash-lady." "One may truly be a lady of leisure when using one of these, the most emancipating of all modern household inventions," my friend avers. Of course, the electric iron is first lieutenant to the washer.

New Suits for Fall

It is not exactly like gilding fine gold, but it is truly adding beauty to beauty, to insert metallic warp or woof in those knitted fabrics for suits and wraps. Then, when they are embroidered, over that, they are truly marvelous creations. The newest ones in that sport-store pre-eminent, where one always finds the latest word in country club attire, all of that described and to say that they are fascinating and wantable is to express it with sobriety.

"Wow, Wow!"

With a bushy head of bristling black hair sprouting out from the stopper, a new perfume bottle is as fascinating as its odor is suggestive of the South Sea Islands. The bottle itself is squat and crouching, giving an air of some outlandish native about to hurl some missile—but the missile, in this case, is a haunting flower essence.

That New Game

Of course, though, it is not actually new since it comes from China where—can you imagine anything less than centuries old? But it is new to us. There are quaint, adorable little chests with many drawers and ranged within each are ivory squares, cubes or lozenges, or painted sticks of ivory. This is said to be one of the most fascinating of the oriental gambling games and everyone knows that the Orient excels in games of chance. It is predicted that "bridge" will have to look out for its laurels, the coming season, if this new man's game "takes." Oh, yes, it is a woman's game as well—perhaps more so, although its generic title is man. Anything for a change, even for the change.

Bedecked

The most ordinary and plain of hats, when purchased at a certain popular store, will arive at one's home in a box so attractive as to and value to the article contained. A gayly colored picture, fraught with an air of country life, pasted across the top of the hat-box, seems to lend vivacity to the hat within, even though it be but a plain sailor or a one-color hat. How much the package has to do with every article marketed, nowadays.

Lacey Hats

Black lace did not sound very interesting when predicted, but it has managed to make itself felt in rather a pleasing way. Used as sleeves, themselves very unusual and fascinating this season, this filmy fabric, sometimes not so very filmy, when in the heavier Spanish weaves, has gained unexpected popularity. Its latest appearance is in trimming hats of felt. Sometimes, by way of streamers, black lace takes its place on black felt; again it becomes an eye-concealing veil or fall, set 'round the brim and barely or half-concealing the eyes in a most coquettish way.

American Japped

Oil-painted parasols, in Japanese effects and brilliantly colored, are one of the season's fads. Effective and protective are these 'sols; and especially out-of-doors looking.

In Syllables of Fashion

Larger shaped hats will come in with the fall.

The bell-shaped sleeve on coats is predicted for fall.

Gray and beige tones in laces are very widely worn.

Fur is being used as a trimming for midsummer hats.

Natural-color eponge makes charming beach coats.

The little black velvet coat is still being worn with the knife-plaited skirt.

Long silk fringe is used as trimming for evening gowns.

Black and rose feather tufts are smart on a black straw hat.

One-button black velvet jackets are worn with plaited skirts.

Tiny silver clamps edge a scalloped frock of navy blue gabardine.

Feathers will be used on handbags, vanity cases and garters.

Leo Carrillo, one of the best story tellers of the day, whose Chinese bits are all original, picked up here, and superlative in that art.

Duci de Kerekjarto, violinist, who has been a furore in every sense of the word, and promises to grow with every performance.

Flo Lewis, the artful delineator of woman-types, whose clever ways are making her a big favorite.

Harry Carroll, with his "Varieties of 1922" held for a third week—a rare honor, well earned.

Jack Hoxie appears at the Hippodrome Sunday in his latest production, "A Man from Nowhere," a story of action and thrills, and filled with tense situations. He will have as his leading woman Miss Pansy Porter, who was leading lady for Eddie Polo in "The King of the Circus." "A Man from Nowhere" is a tale of the old West in the days when might made right, and every man was a law unto himself.

The vaudeville program will include "The Foch Four," original dancers from Belgium. The dances which they are featuring are all novelties.

Williams and Culver form an ideal combination of talent for entertaining purposes. George Murphy juggles while telling stories, and is an artist in his line. Sykes and Sykes are an exceptionally clever young pantomime comedian and adept cyclist, with an exceedngly shaply and unusually attractive miss, who sings and performs feats on bicycles and unicycles. Rube Trip, the acrobatic monologist, has an offering that is different, and Ardell and Tracy have a musical novelty.

"The Fool" Appeals Strongly

With its unusual appeal Channing Pollock's "The Fool" continues to be something of a sensation at the Majestic Theater, where it now enters its third week, still playing to capacity houses.

With "what would happen to a man, who, in this day and age, tried to live according to the teachings of Christ?" as its theme, the author has apparently struck a universal chord in the minds of theatergoers. Certainly the reception accorded Pollock's latest achievement bears out the author's contention that the time is ripe for such an appeal.

Mr. Pollock has succeeded in making his characters real human beings who carry his message. Richard Bennett, star in a long series of plays, has achieved another striking success in the role of Daniel Gilchrist, "The Fool." The choice of Mr. Bennett by producer Thomas Wilkes was a most happy one. Perhaps no actor on the stage today could play the role with finer understanding than Bennett.

The visiting star is receiving excellent support, notable work being done by Nana Bryant, Frederick Vogeding, Cliff Thompson, Gus P. Thomas, Henry Hall and Sara Bothern. Others in the cast are Maude Truax, Winona Wilson, Clare Verdera, Norman Feusier, Fred Manley, Franklin Pangborn, Jack Vosburgh, Fred Cummings, E. Forrest Taylor and Julia Adler.

Stage New York Hit

The popular New York success, "Listen, Honey," has been selected for this week's entertainment of Burbank patrons. It is said that the shortened version of this well-known Broadway success loses none of the speed and sparkle of the original, but has gained in tempo because of the elimination of much useless material. The best known and most popular musical numbers have been retained.

"Listen, Honey" will be given a cast of favorites, headed by Lee "Bud" Harrison, who has a minstrel part. There will also be a comedy part for Billie Moody, and Henry Sheer will be given a Hebrew role. Jean Darby, popular juvenile, Viola Teal, Olga Brooks and the Kemball Four are all included in the roster of principals.

Midgets Remain Headliners

For novelty and diversity of entertainment Singer's Midgets, now playing their second week at the Hillstreet, have few equals. Thirty tiny men and women, with their ponies, hunting dogs, elephants, and a lion, stage a performance that is a show in itself. It is produced with the greatest care, and the costuming and scenic effects bring forth applause in themselves.

Another feature of the new bill is the appearance of Wellington Cross, recently of musical comedy and now a vaudeville comedian, who has reached the heights of popularity. Cross is well versed in every branch of the theater, but particularly shines in comedy and travesty. He is assisted by Dean Moore.

Artistic comedy clay modeling will be offered by Yost and Clady, the French comedians. From mass of wet mud these clever artists model as skillfully as a sculptor chiselling from marble, and they do it in the twinkling of an eye.

"Don't Make Me Laugh" is the title of skit offered by Ann Butler and Hal Parker. The title would imply that this act is serious, but it is far from it.

A bright spot on the hill will be the appearance of Bill Robinson, the dark cloud of joy. Bill is a real streak when it comes to dancing, and he sings and tells stories as well as he dances

Humor will also prevail on the screen in "John Smith," the feature photoplay. Eugene O'Brien plays the title role, and is surrounded by an excellent cast.

Letty is Leaving

It will be "So Long Letty" in actuality when Charlotte Greenwood closes her engagement at the Mason Operahouse next Saturday matinee in her new Oliver Morosco success, "Letty Pepper." Saturday night will not only bring the happiest visit of her career to a close but will mark her farewell to Los Angeles for a long, long time. Soon after departing from Los Angeles, Miss Greenwood will go to New York to remain, having reached that eminence in stardom whereby one becomes a Broadway fixture.

It was here seven years ago that the elongated comedienne began her joyous career as Letty. That was in "So Long Letty." And now in "Letty Pepper," Miss Greenwood has achieved her goal.

Miss Greenwood has been one of Los Angeles's first favorites ever since she started toward the top under the Morosco tutelage. And each succeeding engagement has increased her popularity. This is particularly true of her present visit in "Letty Pepper" in which even a funnier Charlotte has been revealed. Not only has she become uniquely adapt in her inimitable clowning, but she has given a striking contrast in serious moments.

"Letty Pepper," with its "typical Morosco cast," has served to establish others here. Ray Raymond, the leading man, who has shown that singing is a returning art, Master Gabriel, Stewart Wilson, Ruth Rickarby, Frances Victory, Mann Holiner, Marie Holly, Thomas Walsh and Wilfred Young all have contributed to the success of the play.

Three Varieties at Pan

This week's show at Pantages falls naturally into three sections, photoplays, vaudeville and musical comedy. Will King has charge of the last named division, and offers his musical version of the Morosco comedy, "Lombardi, Ltd.," appearing himself in the Hebrew role of the proprietor of the Lombardi stores, the role made famous by Leo Carillo. "Lombardi, Ltd." has never been offered here in this form, but received the San Francisco O. K. last winter when the Will King company presented it at the Casino in that city.

At the top of the vaudeville list appears Webber's Juvenile Orchestra, fifteen talented young musicians from Portland, Or., where they enjoy the distinction of being the official orchestra of the Rotary Club. Cloude and Hutchison at the piano; Emil and Wille, sensational aerialists; Callahan and Bliss, with their hilarious comedy, "Atta Boy, Petey," and other vaudeville features are promised.

The screen event will be the comedy photoplay, "Free Air," filmed from Sinclair Lewis's romance of the same name, which recently appeared as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post. It was a garage sign offering compressed atmosphere free and gratis that first brought the principals of "Free Air" together, but the story takes its name and theme rather from the freedom of the great outdoors in which their friendship ripened into intimacy and finally love.

fer," Mr. Walthall continued, "there are certain big advantages in screen work. It allows you to have a home and live in it. The traveling is the part of the theatrical game that's hardest for me.

"Then, as a general thing, the hours around a studio are good, and the atmosphere is very pleasant. But, on the other hand, you sometimes have to work eighteen hours at a stretch, while when, you leave the theater, you're through.

"You see," he concluded, "they both have their good and bad points. Still, I'm distinctly looking forward to this vaudeville engagement."

Touching on the probable reception of his act, Mr. Walthall made one rather good point.

"I'm really quite optimistic about the act," said he. "It was awfully well received here, and I think that's a severe test in a way. Los Angeles audiences are hardened to 'personal appearances' by picture actors. But in the East, Middle West and South they're still a novelty. That's all in our favor."

TAME VAMP IN NEW "FOOL"

miscast as a worthless young son of the rich.

The weakest link in the cast is Wallie Reid, as the clean living lad from the West who brings about the regeneration. By all the gods of the cinema, something ought to be done about Wallie! It upsets us terribly to see this excellent young actor allowed placidly to slip into oblivion. That certainly is his destination unless he pulls himself up. The screen needs you, Wallie.

The Capitol this week is featuring its incidental program with a revival of Chaplin's immortal "Shoulder Arms" as the only film feature. The Rivoli has Jack Holt's "The Man Unconquerable," a pretty poor tale, with the likeable Jack as a pearl fisher in the South Seas. The opus is silly beyond words.

DARKTOWN AGAIN

There was one stage newcomer—the all-negro "Plantation Revue." New York is mad about darkey entertainment just now, what with several theaters and most of the cabarets presenting negro shows. The "Plantation Revue" is not another "Shuffle Along," although it has the star of that show, Florence Mills, as a feature.

If any one can jazz the blues better than Miss Mills we want to know it. We pronounce her our favorite dramatic actress in these parts. One of her new blues is of a particular indigo tinge.

By the way, the California friends of Herb Howe will be glad to know that he is in Paris and may return in September after a trip to Berlin.

Theda Bara is still debating her first Selznick vehicle. Meanwhile Mr. Bara, or rather Charles Brabin, is directing a mountaineer story down in Kentucky. Elinor Fair has the leading feminine role.

George Hackathorne is playing a leading role in a William Nigh production being shot in and about New York. Its temporary title is "Notoriety," which may stick if Nigh can buy the rights. With Hackathorne in the cast are Mary Alden, Rodia Roque, Richard Travers and Mona Lisa.

THE HAYS TRIP

Just about as you read these lines, Will Hays will be alighting from a train in your neighborhood. That is, unless he makes a sudden shift of plans. Hays was visiting at his home in Bayview, Mich., last Sunday when he decided upon a flying trip to the Coast. And he left the old farm Wednesday. He is due in Los Angeles Monday and will remain but six days.

Will he remove the Fatty Arbuckle ban while he is in California? We shall see.

Marcus Loew sailed for Europe Wednesday.

The local film trade weeklies have been passing through a shake-up. Arthur James is succeeded as editor of the Moving Picture Wordl by Robert Welsh. James is joining Will Hays's extensive staff we hear. George Gould is out as editor of the Motion Picture News.

Edmund Goulding has sodl another script to Dick Barthelmess. It is called "The Beautiful City." Goulding supplied Dick with "Fury," his next picture in which Dorothy Gish will appear in the leading feminine role. He also wrote Mae Murray's next two pictures including "Broadway Rose."

Pyramid Pictures are starting again. Ray Smallwood started work last week on Donald McGibney's "When the Desert Calls," with Violet Heming as the Sahara heroine. Sheldon Lewis and Robert Frazer are in the cast.

Pearl White is back from Paris, and has started work on a Pathe serial bearing the temporary title of "Plunder."

We hear Catherine Calvert and Lowell Sherman are to appear in the stage melodrama "Lawful Larceny" in London. Also that Ward Crane is to have the Sherman role in the Chicago production of the same piece. Sherman is playing in the film production of a "A Face in the Fog," right now. The cast is headed by Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen.

treat, a novelty, an extraordinary thing.

My attention has been called to another detail indicating the extraordinary effectiveness of both the acting and the direction.

TOO MANY SUBTITLES

It is said that with both absolutely ideal no "captions" or explanatory "readers" would be needed. That ideal never has been realized. But in American films there is, I am informed by an expert, an average of twenty-five captions to the reel, or 150 to a six-reel film. This Swedish film is of six reels; at no point is there the slightest puzzlement because of lack of explanation; and there are but sixty captions in the whole production! It is an incredible relief to be freed of the constant reading between scenes.

FILMDOM ADVANCES

I do not in the least hesitate to say that in "Love's Crucible" the art of making films has taken a great step in advance.

While I am writing about non-British films shown here in London I may as well speak of "Fredericus Rex," the story of Frederick the Great told in a superfilm. It also is German and has all the German excellencies—and all the German faults. It has not been publicly produced here and may never be, but I am told that it is going promptly to America. It was designed, unquestionably, as a German propaganda film, but I cannot see it as such, for it surely does not propagandize for anything in the present Germany.

GERMAN PROPAGANDA

If it is propaganda for anything it is for the Hohenzollerns; Germany's disturbed condition at this moment does not urge toward a return of Hohenzollernism. I am told this film when shown at home had a mixed reception from the German working classes. An amusing detail of the clever propaganda touch is the hint in the film that at heart Frederick the Great was democratic.

At the moment the film is by far the greatest financial success in Germany, but I doubt if ever it will be shown in England and there is no real certainty that it even will be sent across to the United States. But it is a "superfilm" in every sense of the word—especially in its super-revelations of the supertendency of the super-German mind to regard as utterly superior the supermilitary.

The Times Literary Page Books and Their Makers

THE SPOTLIGHT ON WASHINGTON

Anonymous Author of "Behind Mirrors" Handles Without Gloves Individuals While Analyzing Whole Drift of American Political Life Today

BEHIND THE MIRRORS. THE PSYCHOLOGY OF DISINTEGRATION AT WASHINGTON. By the author of "The Mirrors of Washington." G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

The author of "The Mirrors of Washington" has written in "Behind the Mirrors" a book that is more penetrating though superficially less clever than its predecessor. In the earlier book he gave vivid, often brilliant, pen sketches of fourteen prominent men in public life today, including President Harding, Ambassador George Harvey, Senators Johnson, Borah, Lodge and Penrose, the better-known Cabinet members and others. In this new book the author is more deeply concerned with political tendencies than with political personalities. Although the spotlight is here turned, not very flatteringly, on President Harding and others, it is the whole drift of American political life that is the real subject of the book.

Of course it is vastly amusing to the general public to have their leaders analyzed and taken apart, while the sawdust is seen oozing out of the seams. Since there is neither malice nor anything very acidulous in the author's point of view, the pleasure of reading his shrewd pronouncements is enhanced. He is no sour-tempered misanthrope, distrusting all mankind, but a man of critical judgment bereft of most of the illusions that men find it convenient to wear.

He is, moreover, sincerely concerned with the present reactionary tendencies, the dullness and deadness in national life, and is trying to find a way out. His refreshing freedom from marked political bias, the impartial way in which he probes into the errors of men of both parties, makes his book acceptable to many who could not endure to see their own sacred party lambasted, while the other was left untouched.

His analysis goes deeper than the present-day seeming impasse into which public affairs seem to have fallen. He goes back to the earlier period, when this country was being developed and exploited by those who got themselves into the strategic positions, and shows how the blame for whatever failure has been ours lies with all of us and not with a few befuddled or vicious leaders. If some of his statements seem a little far-fetched, at least they possess the merit of being expressed with sufficient piquancy to give them interest. For instance, in explaining the effect upon our point of view of the substitution of a belief in evolution for the older one of special creation, he says: "Man was no longer the special creation of God. God, instead of making Adam and Eve, his wife, fashioned a grain of star dust and gave it a grain of star dust to wife, leaving the rest to progress. Man, who had been a little lower than the angels, became, by an immense act of faith, a little higher than the earthworm."

Of the inferiority complex that resulted, and of the effect of the war on it and on our life in general, the author dwells at some length in the first chapters of his book, in which the metaphor of the clock is tortured into various shapes.

In the third chapter the author attempts to explain certain changes in our national life that have taken place since what he calls our industrial pioneers lost the power they formerly wielded. It is not long since "it seemed the most natural thing in the world that the men who were making the country rich, making it a nation economically, should work their will freely in Washington . . . Every age has its fetish. The medicine man who could exorcise the evil spirit in stone and bush was not a more privileged character than his successor at whose touch prosperity sprang out of the earth, at whose word the mysterious economic forces which might in their wrath prove so destructive, bowed and became kind."

Of President Roosevelt's treatment of the invisible government representing big business, the author says:

"The kind of revolution which Mr. Roosevelt brought about was the kind which exclaims loudly 'malefactors of great wealth,' while writing to Mr. Harriman 'we are both practical men.' It was the kind of revolution this country desired. The nation wished to eat its cake and have it, to retain government by business and have alongside it another government, as powerful, as interesting, as colorful, as rich in personalities, as the late autumn of pioneering had brought into gorgeous bloom.

"Mr. Roosevelt's method with the new government was this: Senator Aldrich and Speaker Cannon representing the still powerful coexistent government by business in Congress, would call at the White House and tell the President just how far he could go and no further. They would emerge. A moment later the press would arrive. Mr. Roosevelt would say: 'I have just sent for Mr. Aldrich and Mr. Cannon and forced them to accept my policy, etc.' Nobody was deceived. Unlike the philosopher who made all knowledge his province, Mr. Roosevelt made all knowledge his playground, and not only all knowledge but all arts, including the art of government."

It is only by quotation that the flavor of this book can be imparted. In speaking of the tendency, not outworn, to magnify the office of chief executive, he says: "Creating an autocracy is an act of faith; democracy is work. And faith is so much easier than work." Again after showing that not long since the chairmanship of every important committee in the Senate was held by Senators who were either incapacitated for work by ill health or by men in the seventies, and he asks the pertinent question, "Suppose Congress should come to life and represent the real interests of the various classes, sections, and, let us say, kinds of property and business in this country,—how long would the Senate remain such a pleasant place to die in?"

He attributes part of the weakness to Congress to the seniority rule, by which committee chairmanships went not to ability but to long service, "favored mediocrity and second childhood." Under this rule, "all that was required for political preferment within it was political longevity."

Getting down to personalities, here are some of the choice bits: Speaking of Senator Frelinghuysen, he says: "Not a highbrow, he recognizes that literature has its place, on all four walls of a large room, and bought in sets." Of Mr. Hughes, there is a curt summing up: "Remembering what happened on election night in 1916, I think one cannot sum him up better than by saying that he has a habit of always being elected in the early returns." This is called forth by the unequivocal statement that not Mr. Hughes but President Harding conceived the dramatic method of making the proposal at the Washington conference for the scrapping of certain battleships.

Hiram Johnson chose to take offense at what was said of him in "The Mirrors of Washington," or it is so reported. But he is handled no better here. "Hiram Johnson is a declining figure. I see no reason to modify the conclusion reached about him, that he thought more of men than of principles and especially of one man, Johnson."

Senator Watson, one of the men classed as belonging to the "upper house booboisie," draws this tribute: "At the art of emitting a long rumble of speech which is not addressed to the mind he has no equal."

The book is refreshing in that it is entirely free from the usual sickening blurb of the hero worshiper. That most of our national idols have feet of clay is here made clear. It is entirely free from partisan bias and each man and policy dealt with is handled amiably but without gloves.

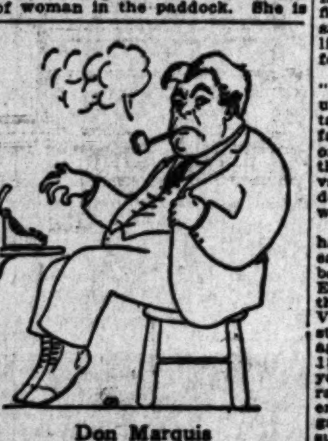
LITERARY GOSSIP

"Through the Shadows" is a first novel that is attracting attention. Its author, Rev. Cyril Alington, was born in 1872, the son of H. G. Alington of Candlesby, Lincolnshire. He was educated at Marlborough and Trinity College, Oxford. He was formerly assistant master at Marlborough and Eton, head master at Shrewsbury School, and for a time select preacher to the University of Oxford. He has been head master at Eton since 1916. Mr. Alington is the author of "A Schoolmaster's Apology" (1914,) and "Shrewsbury Fables" (1917.)

That O. Henry is replacing Scott on many of the high school reading lists while many other classic authors are being shelved for more modern writers in the English courses of the secondary schools is an interesting fact—alarming or encouraging, according to one's point of view, says the Wisconsin Library Bulletin. A study of the required and suggested reading lists for "outside" work in many high schools throughout the country shows that Ivanhoe, the Vicar of Wakefield and Ben Hur are being replaced by O. Henry's stories, the books of Robert Louis Stevenson, John Burroughs and Enos Mills.

Walt Whitman's home in Camden, the modest little frame house on Mickle street, is to be preserved as a shrine by the city of Camden and will be the repository of many Whitman relics.

In a recent dispatch received from Paris, Elinor Glyn, author of "Man and Maid" (J. B. Lippincott Company,) is mentioned as presenting a striking figure amid the world's greatest display of fashion which assembled at the beautiful Chantilly race course, where all society congregated to gossip, to bet, and to watch the traditional Dina stakes. She wore, the dispatch goes on to say, "a magnificent gown of white organdie veiled with Chantilly lace. This, combined with her flaming Titian hair, making her the most talked of woman in the paddock. She is understood to be gathering material for a new series of startling disclosures of the wild night life of young American debutantes in Paris."



Don Marquis

Composing his sonnets to Bluebeard's Titan loves and his history of the famous lovers who have strewn the path of history with the wreckage of hearts. Drawn by Gene Markey.

Although it was announced that Edith Wharton's new novel, "The Glimpses of the Moon," would not be published until July 21, the publishers, D. Appleton & Co., report that a second large edition has gone to press and that the constantly increasing orders for the book would indicate the necessity for a third being required before publication date.

Romain Rolland has left France. He has gone to live at Villeneuve in Switzerland, that country which more than any other he has found to be "above the strife." It was there that Rolland worked during the war repatriating war prisoners, there that he has spent his summers in past years, free of the bitter attacks from his countrymen who could not understand the idealism of the man who addressed his writing to the "great republic of free souls dispersed over the whole world."

Christopher Morley has delivered to his publishers, Doubleday, Page & Co., the manuscript of his new book, "Where the Blue Begins," a book on which he has been working for the past two years. None of it has appeared before in any form and it is said to present a new phase of the Morley philosophy which is unsuspected by even the most inveterate readers of the Bowling Green.

J. B. Lippincott Company publishes a new volume of the Monographs on experimental biology, edited by Jacques Loeb. This is "Smell, Taste and Allied Senses in the Vertebrates," by G. H. Parker, professor of zoology, Harvard University. It will be followed shortly by two others in the same series, viz: "Injury, Recovery and Death," by W. J. B. Osterhout, Harvard University, and "Biology of Death," by Raymond Pearl, Johns Hopkins University.

Houghton Mifflin Company is publishing a special limited edition of "Admirals of the Caribbean," by Francis R. Hart, in which Mr. Hart gives a vivid picture of the vanished buccaneers of the Spanish Main. Mr. Hart has spent much of his life in engineering and business in the West Indies, and is thoroughly acquainted with that part of the world. This edition will be of particular interest to book lovers both because of its beautiful format, and because of Mr. Hart's own literary associations as president of the Club of Odd Volumes in Boston.

Last fall Robert Frost went out to the University of Michigan to accept the new fellowship in creative art. At that time he was probably unknown to a large proportion of the students there. And today, there's a question of who's more popular, Coach of Football Yost or the poet Robert Frost. That was the statement made recently by President Marion L. Burton at an alumni dinner.

The publication of Theodore Maynard's critical work entitled "Best Poets" has been postponed until next fall.

A few people—all too few—have discovered the "Journal of a Lady of Quality," the narrative of a journey from Scotland to the West Indies, North Carolina, and Portugal in the years 1774-1776. Miss Schaw, the author of the journal, was a woman of rare quality, a keen observer of life and customs, much human sympathy and family pride and a delightful sense of humor. Her account of the storm off the Azores when the little ship "broached to" is as thrilling as it is vivid. The journal has been edited by Evangeline Walker Andrews in collaboration with Charles M. Andrews.

"The Psychology of Society," which E. P. Dutton & Co. announce for publication later in the season, is a handbook of sociological science wherein the author, Morris Ginsberg of University College, London, discusses the fundamental problems of the subject, deals with the more important theories which have been worked out in recent times and considers the problems of democratic organizations.

The first printing of Lytton Strachey's new book, "Books and Characters," was exhausted on the day of publication, and Harcourt, Brace & Co. report that the entire second edition was ordered out before they could get it printed and bound.

Will "Young Man, Go West" become "Young Man, Go North?" It is apt to, according to Arctic explorer, Vilhjalmur Stefansson, in his new book, "The Northward Course of Empire," which Harcourt, Brace & Co. have sent to press for publication in August. He shows that since history began, the centers of civilization have been moving north, though the Romans believed that the northern wastes of England and France would be uninhabitable for civilized people. We have, according to Mr. Stefansson, the same wrong notions about the great North of today. The Fourth of July in Fort Yukon, Alaska, north of the Arctic circle, is likely to be hotter than New York or even Miami.

Queen Elizabeth's Spacious Days

In Don Marquis's "Sonnets to a Red Haired Lady and Famous Love Affairs" (Doubleday, Page & Company) Marquis reports an interview with the famous temperamental red-haired English queen. The interviewer found the sovereign in a gracious mood. He reported:

Your representative has seen Miss
  Queen Elizabeth,
And talked with her of Marriage,
  Men and Mary Stuart's Death.
'Twas one of the great Spacious Days; she said her say
At length, with point and heat—as always on a Spacious Day.

"That little red-head Stuart Minx," began the noble Queen,
"The best day's work they ever did was amputate her bean!
The blank-blanked little Green-
  Eyed Cat! By Priam and by Hek,
These royal hands of mine, they ached to nick that woman's neck!
She wasn't moral, Kid! And as Walt Raleigh used to say,
Do what you d—d well please,
  but do it in a moral way!'

She paused and drank a quart of ale, and then Her Majesty—
Without abating jot or tipple of her dignity—
Leaned from her gilded throne and shied the dripping tankard at A lady bishop's embonpoint, and knocked the varlet flat.

OLD LONDON TOWN. Illustrated and decorated by Will Owen. Robert H. McBride & Co., New York.

Mr. Owen is both a humorist and an artist. He refers to Henry VIII as "that worthy churchman," and he has an eye for the unusual and the significant. In fact, the present book is recommended as a handy guide to out-of-the-way parts of London. As a foreword he gives us a tabloid history of London from its dim beginning as a marshland city to the present.

Pencil in hand, Mr. Owen wanders the streets of London, here pausing to ferret out a part of the old Roman wall in some cellar, there turning aside to explore the interior of an old coach inn. His descriptions are always adequate and he has delved deeply into his Dickens. As for his sketches they are good, though not brilliant. One wishes, however, that the American publisher had used better paper for the plates.

TARKINGTON WINS PULITZER PRIZE FOR THE SECOND TIME

"Alice Adams" has been awarded the prize as best novel of 1921

The Pulitzer prize of $1000 for the best American novel of the year—has again been awarded to Booth Tarkington, this year for his "Alice Adams." In the phraseology of the bequest of the great publicist, the prize is awarded each year for the American novel of the preceding year which best represents the wholesome atmosphere of American life and the higher standards of American manners and manhood.

Booth Tarkington

"The Magnificent Ambersons" was adjudged the best novel of 1918

This is the second time that Mr. Tarkington has been so honored. "The Magnificent Ambersons" was the winning novel of 1918, and now "Alice Adams" receives a similar tribute. Both novels are significant interpretations of contemporary American life. "Alice Adams" of the family which is struggling to emerge from middle-class obscurity and "The Magnificent Ambersons" of the prominent family which is losing its ancient prestige.

["Alice Adams," Mr. Tarkington's prize-winning novel, will begin serially in The Times Illustrated Magazine Sunday, August 13, and be continued in The Times daily and Sunday until completed.—Ed.]

TWO IMPORTANT BOOKS

THE OLD STONE AGE. (The Every-day Life Series.) Written and illustrated by Marjorie and C. H. B. Quennell. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

Marjorie and C. H. B. Quennell deserve our thanks. They have taken the findings of the pick and shovel historians, the archaeologists, and impregnated them with life. The result is that the curtains of the past are rolled back like a scroll and we read of the first beginnings of life, of homo sapiens, as he was when he was little better than a beast of the forests and the plains.

Long ago, Walter Bagehot wrote "Physics and Politics," a book that, under an unpromising title, contains a wealth of minted gold of fact and surmise. It still remains one of the best books of its kind, though the present book is to be valued for its twin virtues of being down to the minute and simply written.

Of the part that the geologists have played in fixing the age of the earth and all that is in it, this book bears eloquent testimony. Equally eloquent, by inference, is the praise of Darwin's books, "The Voyage of the Beagle." Darwin started on his epoch-making voyage on the Beagle in December, 1831. He was gone nearly five years and visited many native races. The information is gathered regarding the Tierra del Fuegans and other primitive races, supplemented with the information that H. Ling Roth supplies regarding the Tasmanians, is invaluable. They found races living in the state of the fathers and from this information, supplemented and checked by the remains of early man and his work that the pick and shovel historians have dug up in Europe and elsewhere, it is possible to reconstruct the life of the Piltdown, Neanderthal and La Chapelle aux Saints man.

All of life is flux and reflux. Man has risen and waxed mighty in the interglacial ages, then has come the ice and the terror. We are living in an interglacial age today, and the time will come when pick and shovel historians will debate over our remains and reconstruct the civilization or lack of civilization of the age of the big wind and roughneck headlines.

One cannot leave a discussion of "The Old Stone Age" without reference to the Magdalenian paintings in the cave of Altamira in Spain, those last, sad, thought-compelling remains of a vanished race, limned there in the darknessness, of remembered scenes of the chase by men now lying far under the alluvial drift of another age.

TERRIBLY INTIMATE PORTRAITS. By Noel Coward. With twelve reproductions of the old masters by Lorn MacNaughton. Boni & Liveright, New York.

Blest be the man who first invented the humorous dissertation of the British kind. He is to be praised in the same breath with the man who invented sleep, for they attain the same results by different soporific methods. In other words, when you take up a dissertation of the super-British humorous kind you are about to "knit up the raveled sleave of care."

Now comes Noel Coward with some terribly intimate portraits that the ballyhoo man for Messrs. Boni & Liveright hails—collectively considered—as "one of the funniest books since Thackeray's burlesques." As a lover of Thackeray, I resent the aspersions cast on his name, as a lover of humor I rise to remark in dulcet tones that Mr. Coward has written some intimate portraits that are terrible.

Now I may be too American to appreciate English humor, with the "o" fluid as in ah; I may find most of Punch dreary, but in the name of the elder exponents of the art, I challenge any and all to prove that Mr. Coward is a humorist.

Clever, Mr. Coward is; his prose is limpid; he is a deft painter of portrait after the Max Beerbohm fashion, but his work lacks that Beerbohmish something that has made Max the exemplar of a humorous tradition.

Praise, however, should be given Boni & Liveright for the get-up of this book; it is well printed and well bound and shows the printer connoisseur's reverence for his art.

RECENT FICTION

THE COVERED WAGON. By Emerson Hough. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

A story of the emigration from the Middle West to Oregon in 1848, aptly named "The Covered Wagon." The tale opens with the spring encampment of the westbound wagon trains, stretching from old Independence to Westport Landing, as Kansas City was then called. Here had gathered families with their covered wagons, their live stock and implements, such household furniture as they deemed essential, and, in some cases, goods to trade on the way.

Those assembled here were joined after some delay by forty or fifty teams from Missouri and Illinois. Then they all proceeded to elect a captain for the train. Their choice was Jesse Wingate, an honest, well intentioned man, with the blood of the pioneers in his veins, but lacking in the gift of leadership. Dissension began almost immediately and before long the two rivals for the hand of Jesse's daughter, Molly, were in open conflict.

All this may be necessary to the plot, but, unfortunately, Mr. Hough falls into the time-worn error of making one of these rivals a cardboard hero with all the virtues, and the other, a dyed-in-the-wool villain. Through a misunderstanding that she could have avoided had she been possessed of the common sense she was supposed to have, Molly snubs the noble hero and promises herself in marriage to his hated rival. Much that is cheap and piffling thus creeps into the book, the purpose being to give it the heart interest deemed requisite.

But it is not in the thin love story, nor in the weird adventures of the hero, but in the stirring account of the difficulties encountered by the pioneer band in the 2000-mile journey to Oregon that makes the book one of more than passing interest. Mr. Hough has studied his period. He knows how the emigrants made ready for their long journey, how they camped at night, what means were provided for the protection of the women and children and all such details. And things of a more stirring nature he knows, too. Difficulties with Indians, with floods and freshets, with panthers and wolves and with the elements are all recorded in a way to bring back clearly a past epoch in our national life.

The story should be of especial interest to those elderly people who have stored in the memory the events of some similar trekking and to the children and grandchildren of such pioneers, to be found in every State of the Pacific Coast. It is as a contribution to American history rather than as a novel that the book owes its unusual interest.

With the cigar that worked his transformation, as he appears in a French translation of "Sixes and Sevens."

Q. E. D. By Lee Thayer. Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y.

A light snow on an early April night, the body of a man with a broken neck at the end of a terrace that leads to a country house, foot tracks in the snow, but none other than the dead man's; this is the gruesome find of Harrison Carlisle, Robert Hunt and Peter Clancy when they call to pick up Louis Hood for a fishing trip. The blundering police officer suspects Hood because he is evasive about the dead man's identity, but Clancy, the shrewd young detective, believes that Hood is the victim of circumstances and determines to clear him even if he must spend his whole vacation doing it. Why would Hood tell nothing about the murdered man? It was strange that the caretaker and his wife had both been called away on that particular night. It seemed impossible that Hood did not hear the cry, a terrified prolonged shriek of a woman that a man going through the woods at some distance from the house heard clearly. These were the first things which confronted Clancy, and his investigation led him into the heart of the thrilling mystery.

Mrs. Thayer has achieved success in two professions, decorative art and mystery-story writing. The head of the art department of the Decorative Designers, she is widely known as an authority on ornament and design. Mrs. Thayer is also the author of four successful mystery stories, "The Mystery of the 13th Floor," "The Unlatched Door," "That Affair at the Cedars" and her new book "Q.E.D." But when asked what is her greatest accomplishment, Mrs. Thayer speaks not of her eight thousand designs for book covers or her four successful novels but of the bumper crop of potatoes which she has raised in her own garden.

THE MOTHERING INSTINCT

In "The Eyes of Love" Corra Harris Attempts to [illegible] That Though Men May be Sons of God They [illegible] Children of Women Forever

THE EYES OF LOVE. By Corra Harris. The Doran Company.

Wyndham Cutmore was the offspring of two fine old Southern families. If he wished to be the hero of a Corra Harris story this line of descent was obligatory. If Wyndham Cutmore had lived in the days of King Arthur he might have been a knight of the Round Table, not only because he was chock-full of fine sentiments, but also because he believed in settling all temperamental scores without reference to the law courts and also with or without the approval of society. We are told that "he had a puissant heart and the mind of a dagger." Although he had most exalted ideas of the honor of a gentleman he did not trouble to live within his income, nor to pay his honest debts until he found it quite convenient to do so.

Cutmore returned from his military service as a private soldier in the A.E.F., with a wound-stripe, a limp and a fierce grudge against a scoundrelly officer under whom he had served. This man he later met in the company of one of his own friends, and without a word of explanation or justification to the onlookers, proceeded to give the miscreant a sound thrashing. Only to his law-partner did he ever attempt to justify himself and this under a pledge of secrecy.

Cutmore later married a sweet and sensible girl, who attempted with some success to teach him conformity to twentieth-century standards. His beloved Betty had not married him with the approval of her family or friends, for these had warned her of Cutmore's peculiarities and hinted that love is blind. To this she had retorted that "The eyes of love are the only eyes that see." The author tells us that "Betty regarded her husband as a sort of grant, which she had received from a singularly beneficent Providence. She was herself a pioneer, determined to develop this grant at any cost. . . . . Now the life of a pioneer, however adventurous and thrilling, is bound to be arduous. . . . Everything is to be done, and you are to do it."

Betty was brave and loving, but she could not have ever measurably succeeded in keeping her husband on the highway of life had she not been constantly assisted by Cutmore's partner, who was devoted to her, and for her sake, to her husband. Betty had once, admitted to him that although Cutmore was always ideally right, he was not invariably practical, and had added that it was the duty of better-balanced people like themselves to take care of "God's fools," such as he was, and see that they came to no harm.

That such care was needed was soon tragically demonstrated, for the officer whom Cutmore had once beaten was murdered a few years later, and Cutmore was accused of committing the crime. Through the efforts of his partner the real culprit was discovered, and proved to be a poor fellow whose wounds and mental sufferings had driven him to madness. But the temperamental Cutmore's spirit had by this time burned out his body and he died, after having received his partner's promise to "always take care of eBtty and the baby."

The author's idea is that men need to be watched and tended by women, and cannot prosper otherwise. "They may be the sons of God, but they are the children of women forever." But she is illogical in creating a character like Puckle, the partner of Cutmore, who not only looked after himself, but also materially aided Betty in her self-appointed task. This her argument falls to the ground. The truth is, that there are greatly gifted but ill-balanced individuals of both sexes [illegible] all their genius are bound [illegible] shipwreck of their lives [illegible] they are constantly [illegible] sustained by sane and [illegible] ly-wise friends, who are [illegible] lend themselves to such [illegible] love's sweet sake. People and Their Troubles

DOROTHY DIX TALKS

Are You a Bore?

BY DOROTHY DIX

Do you sometimes wonder if you bore other people as much as certain people bore you?

There is nothing else that gives one such a horrible, cold, sinking feeling as to vision oneself as one of those individuals whose friends and family endure them with what fortitude they may and whom strangers flee from as they would from the wrath of God. To be dull, heavy, stupid, tiresome; to have people yawn in your face; to catch the look of dismay at your coming, and glad relief at your going; to know that even your nearest and dearest bear with you instead of enjoying you—could any fate be worse than that of the bore?

And the difficulty is that we never really know whether we are bores or not, as we know for certain whether we are blondes or brunettes or short or tall. We may be bores without knowledge or intention, and spread a deathly weariness wherever we go, as some people are unconscious carriers of the typhoid germ.

It behooves us all, therefore, to look with suspicion upon ourselves and to try to find out how we react upon our fellow-creatures. Above all, it is up to us to take stock of our conversation, and while there is no one acid test that will absolutely determine our status as a joy-maker or a gloom-compeller, there are a number of things which we may be very sure that we cannot do without putting ourselves in the bore class.

The chief of these is to talk about oneself. No egotist need waste a second wondering if he or she is a bore. He or she is it. Our own affairs are so thrillingly interesting to us that it takes more intelligence than most people possess to make us realize that they are matters of profound indifference to the balance of the world, and that with the possible exception of our mothers, not a human being in its wants to hear a single detail about what we did, or thought, or felt.

Nobody wants to listen to the saga of our adventures, or to hear about our triumphs, or our failures, because everybody's interest is centered on their own affairs. John Brown could sit up all night telling you about all the interesting things that happened when he took a trip to the city twenty miles away, but he will find that he has a pressing engagement if you attempt to tell him about how you penetrated into the forbidden land of Tibet, or the heart of darkest Africa.

If you make yourself the theme of your conversation you may be sure that you are a bore. If you talk about your children all the time you are a double and triple bore.

If you doubt this, watch the next person you attempt to tell about the cute thing your little Mamie did, or the witty remark hat your little Johnny made. Note ow people writhe and squirm in hair chairs as you recount the tory of Ethelinda's beaux, and om's having made the football am at college. Nothing short of xing them with a glittering and ypnotic eye keeps your audience om beating it away from your resence.

No parent can recall ever havg been asked to repeat a story out the prowess of his infant odigies, or requested for further tails about the affairs of her flapr daughter and jellybean son, d that should be a tip that they e subjects in which the public not vitally interested.

Another bore of truly gigantic liber is the repeater. Every mily is called upon to endure this fliction, for no household is so cky as not to have at least one ember who tells over and over e same stories and the same kes and the same reminiscences til everybody else feels like eaming when he or she launches upon the familiar theme.

Perhaps when people get old and ile they cannot prevent themlves from inflicting their oft-told upon a defenseless public, but ly as long as we have even a derate use of our intelligence might keep tab on ourselves and refrain from telling a story but once.

A third bore who does much to reconcile us to the shortness of life is the one who has a mania for reading aloud snatches of the paper, or who reads a paper and tells you everything in it, just after you have read it yourself. Apparently these bores consider you mentally defective, incapable of understanding the purport of what you have read, or else each one imagines that he is the only individual who was privileged to see that particular issue of a publication.

Anyway, they recount to you the news of the day and expect you to be startled by it. They rehash the scandals and repeat the jokes, of which they invariably lose the point. In vain you try to stave them off by telling them that you have read half a dozen papers before breakfast, and that you subscribe to the funny papers. They go right along and repeat it all over again, for the bore has no bowels of compassion that make him stop talking about the thing he is interested in because it is wearisome to you.

Twin brother to the reading-aloud bore is the bore who explains the plot of the play at the theater, and tells you which is the villain and which is the hero, and assures you that it will all come out right in the end, under the impression that you are feeble-minded and couldn't figure it out for yourself. People round about hiss him, but without avail, for nothing stops a bore until he is run down.

Of course there are many other qualities that make us difficult to live with, but these that I have mentioned constitute the common or garden variety of bores, and we can all avoid being one of these if we will.

Question: When was the longest game played in big league baseball? J. B. W.

Answer: The longest game in the major leagues was played on May 1, 1920. This was a National League game between Brooklyn and Boston, which lasted twenty-six innings and ended in a tie, 1-1.

Q.: Why is the raven regarded as a bird of ill omen? K. R.

A.: The black color, mournful croak, charnel-house habits, together with the boldness, sagacity and wariness of the bird, have combined to make the raven an object of superstitious fear and hate.

Q.: How can a pipe organ be kept clean? E. S. J.

A.: Usually pipe organs are kept in proper condition by using a vacuum cleaner.

Q.: In England do women lawyers have to wear a uniform? L. B. C.

A.: Women must wear ordinary barristers wigs, completely covering and concealing the hair, and the regulation barristers gowns. Dresses underneath must be dark, high-necked and long-sleeved.

Q.: What is the chemical composition of the onion? V. H. M. O.

A.: The composition of this vegetable as far as mineral content is concerned is: .06 calcium, .03 magnesium, .23 potassium, .02 sodium, .12 phosphorus, .02 chlorine, .06 sulphur, .0005 iron.

Q.: What is derivation of the word fortnight? O. B.

Q.: What should be done for a dog if a snake bites it? H. J.

A.: The Public Health Service says that a solution of permanganate of potash should be applied to the wound as soon as possible. Painting a freshly enlarged wound with iodine may also serve the purpose. In any case tie a bandage tightly around the limb between the bite and the body and consult a veterinarian as soon as possible.

Q.: Is water fattening? L. B. C.

A.: Dr. Harvey Wiley says that water is not fattening.

Q.: Did the Indians understand fertilizing of land? P. H. S.

A.: They found from experience that placing small fish in the hill with corn made the stalk grow longer and greener. They thought the fish fed the corn. They were right as the decayed fish furnished nitrogen which the plant needed. They also found that ashes scattered on the land where corn was to be planted improved the yield. It is now known that ashes contain potassium and phosphorus and improve the plants.

LETTERS TO THE TIMES.

Mr. Citizen Pays

SAN BERNARDINO, July 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The Railroad Commission fixes the fares and freights on the railroads for business within the State. One of the items of expense allowed in fixing such rates is taxes paid by the railroads for State purposes; if the taxes are low the rate is correspondingly low; if the taxes are high the rates are correspondingly high and the people pay the "freight" and they pay the taxes of the railroads by paying higher fares and freights.

Gov. Stephens, candidate for reelection in the coming primary, is quoted as saying, "in accents childlike and bland:"

"The Los Angeles Times is seeking to foist 'bunk' upon the people of California. It tried to make you think it wants your taxes reduced. That is 'bunk,' pure and simple, for its publishers know that the people do not pay. State taxes. You pay county and municipal taxes and the corporations pay State taxes. (Quotation from Venice speech of July 18, 1922.)

The Governor's mind is certainly "peculiar" when he is able to assert that the people do not ultimately pay all State taxes. Electric, gas and all other public service corporations are allowed taxes as a necessary running expense by the commission in fixing the rates to be charged for their commodities. It is not "bunk" when the people pay such rates. The people pay the rates including enough to enable the corporations to pay State taxes. Who hands it over to the tax collector is but a play upon words, and the Governor is the one who is dealing out "bunk" in his primary campaign.

Gov. Stephens promised, when he went into office, economy and efficiency. He has given economy to the people by raising State taxes. Friend W. Richardson, also seeking the nomination for Governor, is quoted as saying:

"'Reckless extravagance' in the present administration, shows that government expenses had increased from $35,000,000 in the year 1915-16 to $91,000,000 in 1921-22."

Such statement shows that State taxes have been raised $56,000,000 within the last six years. If Stephens be re-elected for another term he may add another $56,000,000 to State taxes and claim it is "bunk" to say that the people pay State taxes after it is provided for and allowed in the rates fixed for public service corporations. How long is this show to last?

Overlooked Short Cut

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Jailer Bob Cronin believes that it would take some heavy blow to bring Clara Phillips to the knowledge of the fact that she murdered poor Mrs. Meadows in a most horrible, cold-blooded manner.

Well, it seems to me that the authorities had plenty of opportunity to provide that heavy blow by simply confronting the murderess with her victim. It seems unbelievable that this was not done, as the murderess would probably have broken down in the presence of her victim and confessed her crime, which would have done away with the possibility of seeing her escape her punishment and drag her trial along until we are tired and sick of it.

As things stand now, we all know that Clara Phillips will be treated in such a way that prospective murders and murderesses shall not be discouraged.

Verily, there is something rotten in this, our Denmark.

MRS. M. SCHELLEN.

Ultimate Prohibition

LOS ANGELES, July 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] So much sense and rot has been said and written about the topic of censorship that a little bit more of the same can do no harm. You see, I throw myself on the mercy of the reader.

The fundamental point I wish to make is this: By law, you can no more regulate the picture business than you did rum, slavery, autocracy in home and nation, etc., etc. The real fight for censorship is for prohibition, local and Sabbatical, at first, but ever with national prohibition in the offing. The extremists in the struggle for censorship are opposed to the theater per se, always have been, and always will be. They want to close the movie houses altogether, and, in the meantime, will join any movement calculated to weaken the industry's resistance to what they have set as its ultimate fate.

One may readily employ their arguments against the moving pictures to the average newspaper. By turning the leaves of a Sunday paper you can get more horror and other thrills than you may hope to achieve at the motion-picure house. And you need not read much to get your thrill, either. Close-ups of the latest murder heroine and the other principals in the tragedy abound, each adorned with subtitles written by a genius in that line. In the comic strip the children see more calculated to impair their respect for their elders and other supposedly sacred things than they can see in any movie farce produced. The press does not hesitate to attack any member of the clergy, when, in its opinion, the attack is justified. In short, the same arguments used against the screen apply against the newspaper, which no reasonable man or woman refuses to receive in the home and permit the children to peruse.

All the restraint imposed on the newspaper is its own sense of decency, and the usual elastic police regulations against obscene or objectionable published matter. Why not be as fair to the screen?

And what is the matter with that delicious nuisance, H. L. Mencken, who says that he is a "bachelor of 42 and his three joys of life are women, alcohol and ideas. (Mencken ideas.) Why does not some czar of journalism order Mencken off the printed pages of the country's publications? Why not be as fair to the screen?

FRATERNAL AFFAIRS

The decision of the grand lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Atlantic City last Wednesday to hold its next convention in Atlanta during July, 1923, is an event of unusual significance to that city and of genuine interest to every Atlantan.

The convention of the Elks promises to outrank in point of general importance any other convention scheduled to be held in Atlanta during the next year.

The order of Elks is one of the largest and one of the most conspicuous organizations of its kind in the United States, and the holding of its grand lodge annual session in Atlanta in 1923, will bring to that city many thousands of visitors, men and women, among whom will be some of the most prominent, most patrotic and most philanthropic citizens of the whole country.

It has 1500 lodges scattered over the United States, Canada and Mexico, and among its active members in this country are some of the most prominent men of the nation, including President Harding and General Pershing.

The order owns home club property valued at approximately $60,000,000. It dispenses charity with a liberal hand, and it does, perhaps, as much benevolent and welfare work year in an year out as is done by any other similar organization in existence.

ODD FELLOWS

Golden Rule Lodge conferred the second degree last Monday evening. The business meeting was of interest to the members, Past Grand Master W. L. The new Belvedere Gardens Lodge will be instituted next Thursday in Brown's Hall, on Whittier Boulevard, at 2:30 p.m. The degree staff of Ramona Lodge of Monterey Park will confer the initiatory degree on a class of candidates, and the team from Whittier Lodge will exemplify the first degree.

Doings Among Artists in the Southland

OF ART AND ARTISTS

BY ANTONY ANDERSON

From "Art Victrix"

All passes. Art alone
 Enduring stays to us;
The bust outlasts the throne—
 The coin, Tiberius.

Even the gods must go;
 Only the lofty rhyme
Not countless years o'erthrow,—
 Not long array of time.

Paint, chisel, then, or write;
 But, that the work surpass,
With the hard fashion fight—
 With the resisting mass.
 —[Austin Dobson.

The Art of Joseph Kleitsch

Curiously enough, the one artist in Southern California who may be considered the most cosmopolitan, if wide and extensive travel and study make for cosmopolitanism—as they undoubtedly do—has seen fit to keep on painting in a small village of 400 souls for two busy years, with no need or intention of seeking greener fields or newer pastures. This artist is Joseph Kleitsch, and the favored spot is Laguna Beach.

Fellow painters in Chicago, where Kleitsch had already made a name for himself as a portrait painter when he came West, have been trying hard to pull him back to his allegiance, assuring him—with the usual eastern contempt for things western, especially in matters of art—that Southern California is the worst possible field for him. And why, oh why, need he bury himself in a village on the continent's terminal point?

But Kleitsch only laughs at these well-meant but futile efforts. He knows that he is not buried. He knows, indeed, that he breathes freer, paints freer and lives more buoyantly than he ever did before, though he has traveled all the way from Hungary to Mexico, not once but several times, stopping on the way, each trip, at such important centers of art and culture as New York and Chicago.

This magnificent freedom of outlook on life and nature as well as art, is made so evident that he who runs may read it with ease in the exhibition of thirty-eight canvases that he is holding for about three weeks at the Stendahl galleries, Ambassador Hotel—Joseph Kleitsch's first one-man show in the West, as the exhibition just closed was William Wendt's. The strongest of our painters, you see, are no longer unhonored in their own country, and consequently, they are beginning to believe in us quite as firmly as we have believed in them for some time. With mutual confidence so well established, what can we not do together for the cause of western are—and particularly for the western artists themselves? Anything and everything.

Curiously enough, again, though Joseph Kleitsch was a portrait painter when he arrived, he is that no longer. At any rate, he now paints quite as many landscapes as portraits, perhaps more, though often it is landscape enlivened with figures, a delightfully intimate branch of art that is peculiarly fit and right out here, where golden sun and purple shade are always with us, and that Kleitsch hopes and intends to make his own. He is already planning important outdoor canvases with figures, and they shall be of California and no other place in the world. He'll do it, too—just watch him!

We know he can and will do it when we study the canases at Stendahl's, canvases at once virile, colorful and beautiful at one and the same time imbued with the idealism of the artist and the realism of the painter—the work of a man who is a dreamer and a seer. And almost everyone of these thirty-eight pictures comes from Laguna Beach, a sufficient commentary on the farsightedness of our artists when they made the place an "art colony." Indeed, I have heard one painter assert that he could paint here for a lifetime, and still find that he hadn't covered the rocks, the sea and the hills, and the magnificent canyons behind the hills. This painter was not Kleitsch, to be sure, but I'm sure he has thought so often.

For Kleitsch has discovered "infinite variety in a little room," every square inch of it instinct with beauty. From gray to gold, from gold to vermilion, from these to green and blue, and then back to gray again, sometimes suddenly, but more often in delicate graduations—here is the gamut of color that Laguna Beach offers to the man who sees and feels it. Joseph Kleitsch is such a man. There are others, but it is of him and his exemplification of it that we will speak farther in next week's Art and Artists.

The Summer Show

Going to the summer exhibition at Exposition Park seems very much like attending a very exclusive social affair. One knows that those present are the select of the select, the very elite of the elite, all worth knowing. But as one meets them all, among the many now one and now another in some way attracts more than the rest. One knows not why. But it is certain that with these one will spend most of the time, learn more about them, and when reluctantly parting exclaim, "I've had a wonderful time, with all." And one did. One liked them all, only a few better.

Great is one's surprise if a friend also present asks, "What could you have seen in that old historian with his boresome pedantry, or that wild, though I admit capricious, young thing dressed in outrageous colors?" Now, the friend's dislike does not lessen one's appreciation in the persons any more than it is intrinsically affected by it. How much richer would the friend be were he able to recognize the fine qualities in their superficially criticised ones!

But to the exhibition. There are on display works from the masters of realism and impressionism—which all but meet. So all visitors to the gallery will see something to their liking, something that will captivate them and perhaps attract them back again on another day. The subjects are varied, and the manner is indeed so. All will be satisfied except the out-and-out futurists—but let there be hope.

On entering the gallery, if one turns about face, one will see on either side of the door best examples of realism and impressionism, the former at the left and the latter at the right. There is a symbolical significance in this. The painting to the left, let us say, from day before yesterday, and that at the right of today, between these two is the open door—open to the paintings of tomorrow—the future. And the paintings around on the walls seem to form a cycle in the development of art, the gradual change in ideals of esthetic conceptions and expressions.

A sketch of this general change may be traced in the portraits. Lenbach's self-portrait is from what may be called the apex of the realistic school, and is a tinted drawing in the fullest sense, though oil colors were used to tint with. His careful pencil drawing can be traced and seen under the "washes" of color. Then drawing was the main consideration, and the color merely to give it a bit more life. Ufer's "Italian Peasant" is illustrative of the next stage, where the color was considered more and the brilliance of brush-drawing, brush technique. Each stroke deliberate and definite. With Chase the color is richer (note how the color increased in key,) and while his brush work is not so definable, yet it is nevertheless definite, the true, more free, modest, as if aiming to eliminate himself. Henri again is still freer in his brush work, very sketchy, yet how comprehensive in delineation. Cahill sought to depict more life and light, and to this end discarded the dexterous and brilliant brush work and applied spots of pure color, and succeeded in creating a very vibrant work. With his work the drawing is intrinsic, but color was the main consideration; the reverse of Lenbach's ideal. Raphael, painting in a still higher key, with light and life as his ideal, aims at direct, freer painting and to suggest form and life and light with an economy of slashing brush strokes. The aim of the modern men seems to be more light, more color, freer executions—spontaniety and a vivid sensation—impression of realism.

Few will know as they look at Raphael's vivid canvas that in his early youth he worshipped Velasquez, sought out his works, made small oil sketches of them, and painted in a manner like his, very conservatively, with much dark backgrounds.

The artists, aside from their painting abilities, reveal themselves in their paintings as being historians (all are that unwittingly, for each painter reflects his time,) dramatists, novelists, poets, musicians and phophets. Leloir's "The Trumpeteer," Piloty's "Wallenstein on the Road to Egger," Page's "The Model," are essentially dramatic, and also have an abundance of detail such as novelists delight in describing. Much of the poet is revealed by Mathews in his "Discovery of San Francisco Bay," and especially in "San Francisco Coast Landscape;" in Carles's "Torso," with its wonderful flow of rhythm; in Hansen's "Boy With Cod," in Rozaire's "Fishing Boats in Fog," Sandzen's "Cathedral Spires" and Wendt's landscapes. There is much music in Hassam's "Yacht Harbor," Cahill's "Thoughts of the Sea," Stuck's "Evening," Davies's "Of Attican Hills."

Rockwell Kent is the prophet, the seer. And I wonder if he meant in his "Monhegan Island" what I read, or did I read all? He is essentially a symbolist.

His painting seems to be an exposition of the relativity of existence; how one form of life blends into that of another, much as his colors in the sky run the gamut and blend from orange to blue; on the comparative permanency of things, and the comparative freedom; the stableness of concrete materiality with that of the freedom of ethereal spirituality.

The picture, painted with sureness, boldness and strength, is a view from a mountain looking out to sea. There is a fringe of rocks jutting into the canvas, on this fringe is a fringe of pines; next a strip of shore land. On the shore are a row of wooden buildings of various sizes. A stretch of intense blue water, that extends back miles and miles, above this a streak of clouds, and next the sky, which rises in spectrum hues into an intense blue. This gradual ascension from the grossly material, solid, stable rock, through the rooted, though with more movement of the pines; the pliant land, with the abodes of beings more or less free and moving and active; the water, less solid, liquid, still more free; the clouds, vaporish with less substance, still greater freedom; then the sky, air, ether, the unseen, yet seen,—and ever-present substance, with the greatest freedom, and for all its ethereal quality more eternal than the rocks,—evoke a sense of infinity in the picture.

COUNTERFEIT Presentments IV

These Scandinavians are generaly so tragically solemn.

Take this tall, grave young Swedish painter, for instance, who has a tremendous capacity for work, an overpowering ambition—how totally lacking in any sense of humor!

He's far from sour, or bitter, or harsh, but he simply won't be bothered with joy—it's to distracting, too disturbing, and what has it got to do with painting portraits anyway?

There are so many, many people in the world to paint. They simply can't all be done by one painter, be he ever so industrious and ambitious. Very well, he'll paint those already in the limelight—in other words, the highlights!—and there you have the keynote of the man. Highlights!

Stand before one of his portraits and note the lights. Wonderfull wonderful! how many places a serious, observing, industrious painter can find to put highlights on one small person. Each hair, each brow, each eye—we'll go right on down, and no feature or section of feature but has its own little private highlight. Surround your sitter with intricate accessories, and you have a million more highlights.

It must have been one of his paintaings of which I heard this story last year. A visitor at an exhibit handed the attendant a hard white disk, saying it was a loose highlight on one of the paintings—it had fallen off when she touched it.

Jewels are wonderful chances for highlights, and perhaps his mammoth painting of a jewelled lady, shown last year, where jewels were strung on lines and in bunches, each gem modeled to its white highlight with a brilliancy most realistic—perhaps this painting caused him to shed crystal tears of satisfaction.

And bing!—the man has a temper. When he came here, some six years ago, with a fresh green laurel pinned securely to his highlit brow, he gravely measured the walls of the one and only exhibition room at Exposition Park, rolled up his sleeves, and worked tirelessly to paint a picture for each wall. And when the jury of artists, ordinarily so gracious to newcomers, kindly but firmly refused to give all the wall space to this young monopolist, he straightway threw a temperamental tantrum that was worthy of Mary Garden.

Sparkling of Mary reminds me that our hero is being heralded as "the greatest Scandinavian artist in America." A newspaper story affiliates him with the "world's sweetheart" in the production of a "Mary Pickford Doll." Fancy this terrible Swede making dolls! The article further stated that Mary had first employed "eight internationally famous artists and sculptors," but not until this "most famous Scandinavian artist in America" was commissioned was the doll accomplished.

I picture his six-foot-something solemnly fastening highlights on the dollies, after the eight artists and scuptors have laboriously concocted the foundation and structure.

It's funny how people who lack a sense of humor can do such funny, funny things, and get away with it.

Denies Authorship

Editor Art and Artists: Please make it plain that I am not the author of the series of "Counterfeit Presentments" signed Benjamin Blue, now appearing in your department of The Times. Owing to the unfortunate similarity of names, several persons have intimated that I was the writer, and I wish to emphatically deny the accusation. Yours very truly,

BENJAMIN C. BROWN.

Roi Partridge Here

Roi Partridge, the well-known etcher, and his wife drove down from Oakland and San Francisco and have been the house guests of Edward Weston, in Glendale. They are now on their way to San Diego and perhaps a run across the border. On their return from the south they will stop for another day in Los Angeles.

Mr. Partridge spoke warmly of the artists of the South, for he is a great appreciator of their efforts. He spoke with reluctance of what he termed the injustice of the northern jury while passing on works from here. Many things, he said, were submitted from the southern men which he sought to have hung, but which were voted out.

He considers Loren Barton the strongest and ablest woman etcher in the United States. He may even have said the world—that is not quite clear—and if he had said it, there would not be many objectors.

Admits Authorship

Frank Geritz, painter and designer of wood-block prints, contributes "The Summer Show" to Art and Artists. The editor of this department has always aimed to present various points of view on all questions pertaining to art, and when a painter can also write, and is anxious to write he is always made welcome. Mr. Geritz by the way, is to have an exhibition of his portraits on wood blocks next week in the Print Room of the Los Angeles Museum. Some remarkably good and original work will be shown. The exhibit opens tomorrow.

IT WAS EASY

A gracious Southern lady was entertaining guests at dinner. Each dish outshone the preceding one in exquisite taste and appearance. At last a wonderful lemon pie was served, heaped with golden meringue, beautifully decorated with dainty scallops, row upon row. The guests were lavish in their praises and finally the hostess called for the colored Mammy cook, who appeared, round, black and glistening.

"How did you ever scallop that wonderful lemon pie so beautifully, Mammy?" asked one enthusiastic lady.

"Law, honey, dat's easy," beamed Mammy, "I done it wif ma falseteef!—[Judge.

Second Selection

Ted: Have you selected the things you're going to take on your motor camping trip?

Ned: Yes, and now I have to pick out the ones I must leave behind.—[Judge.

AN INTERVIEW IN VERSE

With Charles Ray

BY HALLETT ABEND

'Twas far out Wilshire that we drove that day.
 Beverly Hills was passed—the Country Club—
And then we left the highway and turned down
 A winding side road, dust-deep to the hub.

Turn followed turn, and then an old rail fence
 Zigzagged across a meadow, up a hill,
And we slowed down and gazed round-eyed upon
 A perfect, peaceful Indiana "still."

No hint of California was there here.
 A weather-beaten farmhouse of old days
Stood in the shelter of giant sycamores
 And near by an old garden in the haze

Of sultry noon showed purple hollyhocks,
 Pink climbing roses and the drooping flowers
Of morning-glories closed against the glare
 Of golden sunlight and the daytime hours.

But ringed around this homely Hoosier place
 Were modern autos and a truck or two,
While here and there giant mirrors stood in pairs
 And cameras were placed to catch each view.

"The house is just a shell," some one declared.
 "It's built around an old shack, and inside
The farmer's family lives on undisturbed
 At this invasion of the great world's tide."

And then there came striding across the grass
 A youth both tall and slender—thatch of straw
That was not quite a hat perched on his head—
 Old homespun pants with bottoms frayed and raw.

He wore no socks. His skimpy cotton shirt
 Revealed the graceful column of his neck.
His arms, not brown, were sinewy and strong;
 His wrists large-boned, his skin without a fleck

Of dust or freckle. "This is Ray," I heard
 And grasped a friendly hand, met dark brown eyes
That looked a welcome and a scrutiny
 And danced a little at my quick surprise.

Here was no stripling, but a well-poised man,
 Near thirty, as I guessed, but with that youth
Of face and spirit which, in boyish roles,
 Makes all his acting have a sense of truth.

And there are boyish traits left in the man.
 I sensed an honest eagerness to please,
To talk, to mix, and an embarrassment
 Which foils his wish, denies him perfect ease.

"This setting? Oh, it's for a Riley poem—
 'The Girl I Loved.' I bought it long ago
With 'The Old Swimmin' Hole.' It's hard to get.
 I daresay half the public doesn't know

"It's Riley's own romance, which he suppressed."
 The brown eyes wandered, and the mobile face
Took on a dreamy look while I forgot
 The yokel make-up, and beheld in place

The earnest artist. "Now this poem," he said,
 "Is not so long; it's slender as to plot.
But as I read it over month by month,
 And dreamed about it, one by one there shot

"Into the fabric of each silken verse
 A golden thread of romance, and at last
I saw the play, a live and moving thing,
 A living love tale of the distant past—

"The early sixties. Inspiration? Yes—
 Perhaps that's it." And here a boyish smile,
In deprecation of the stilted word,
 Lighted his face. We chatted on a while

Of this and that, of unjust "smart" reviews
 Of motion pictures—those that pick small flaws
Concerning backgrounds or a misplaced chair—
 Picayune pecks by men who cannot pause

To view a plan, an effort, as a whole,
 And measure excellence upon that scale
Which sees the end first aimed at and allows
 Credit for what's been done, but who just wail

About the things omitted, overlooked.
 And then we talked of money. "Why, I know
We measure plays by what they bring in cash,
 But dollars don't mean dollars, even so,

"For ours is not the mercenary view.
 We say a picture played to such a sum—
By this we mean it drew the public, held
 Attention, interest, made the people come

"In eager throngs and held them. We must pay
 Production costs to keep the art alive,
And must make profits or else capital
 Will quit the game. Now, anyone to thrive

"In motion pictures must be practical.
 The so-called highbrow stuff will rarely pay,
So we must weigh the popular appeal
 Or capital and public stay away."

'Twas then I switched the talk by asking why
 Those rural plays in which he acts the hick
Attract the flapper type who wait in lines
 Before the theaters wielding red lipstick

And powder puff before they get indoors.
 He smiled. "The flappers? Oh, they're sound, you know.
They're right at heart. It's not that opposites
 Attract that makes the flippant flapper go

"To plays of country life or simple tales
 With clean love stories. In these restless days
They want a contrast to the hectic rush
 Of modern life—find it in rural plays."

And then I tried, but failed, to make him say
 Which type of role he actually prefers;
Whether by preference he so often acts
 The country lad, or in so doing defers

To what the film fans want. 'Twas ticklish ground,
 And he might easily have hinted, said
Something the public wouldn't care to hear.
 But not Charles Ray! Smiling a bit, he led

The talk around to his next week's release—
 A play built on the Cinderella theme
In which the clothes are said to make the man.
 "I'm presser in a tailor shop where steam

"And heat and labor fill my working hours.
 But still I nourish close a skillful plan
To end a strike. All that I lack's the duds
 To make a front so I can see the man

"(As unapproachable as any king)
 Who has the final say in the dispute.
I'm pressing costly evening clothes one day
 When suddenly a bold idea takes root.

"That night I don the customer's glad rags,
 Meet the great man, and put up such a front
I gain his ear. There's comedy, a lot,
 And melodrama, too, and quite a stunt

"Whereby I gain the great man's gratitude
 By saving him from a tremendous loss.
Then, at the end, I get a fine new job
 And wed the daughter of my erstwhile boss.

"There's nothing rural in that play, you see.
 I wear top hats; I sport a swagger stick,
A swallow tail, a well-cut morning coat.
 You'd never think I'd ever played the hick."

I turned to go and stooped to pluck a flower
 In the old garden, but my fingers met
An odd resistance, for the posies were Made of dyed cloth—just adjuncts to the set.

With a quick glance I swept the quiet scene—
 A world of sham and tawdry make-believe;
The house a shell, "old" fences just put up,
 Even fake flowers of modern dye and weave.

But as we drove away I looked back once
 And there against the skyline, straight and tall,
The young star stood. His frank sincerity
 And earnestness somehow redeemed it all.

How to Make the Most Delicious Raspberry Jam You Ever Tasted

New Certo Process Astonishes Housewives

Never Fails, Requires Only One Minute's Boiling, Retains all the Flavor and Color of Ripe Raspberries, and Makes Two-Thirds More Jam from Same Amount of Fruit

For a spread on hot biscuits or toast raspberry jam has few equals. Its sweet, delicious flavor makes children of us all.

A new and very revolutionary method has now been discovered by which anyone can make a far better quality quickly and very economically. With the Certo Process full-ripe raspberries are used, and only one minute's boiling is required—not the 30 or more minutes so necessary by the old method. The result is a far superior fruity flavor and two-thirds more product from the same amount of fruit, because no juice is boiled away. Best of all the taste of fresh raspberry—the kind you picked in childhood in the old berry patch down by the woods—is now actually preserved for the dead of winter. The Certo Process banishes all guesswork or worry, as perfect results are certain.

To make Raspberry Jam is very simple: Crush well about 2 quarts of ripe berries, using wooden masher. Add juice of 1 lemon. Measure 4 level cups (2 lbs.) crushed berries, including lemon juice, into large kettle. Add 7½ leveled cups (3 1-4 lbs.) sugar and mix well. Stir hard and constantly and bring to a vigorous boil over the hottest fire. Boil hard for one full minute with continual stirring. Remove from fire and add ½ bottle (scant half cup) Certo, stirring it in well. From the time jam is taken off fire let stand 5 minutes only, by the clock, before pouring. In the meantime skim. Then pour quickly. Makes 3 1-4 pints or ten half-pound glasses. For Certo Raspberry Jelly see Certo Recipe Book.

The former guesswork or worry of making jam or jelly is now past. The Certo process is endorsed by government authorities and cooking experts; it insures perfect results with every batch. Jellies and jams keep perfectly. It is also very economical, never requiring more than one minute's boiling and thereby making two-thirds more jam or jelly than the old method. It also makes all kinds of jam or jelly, some you have never tasted before, like cherry jelly and rhubarb jam, or unusual combinations like strawberry and pineapple, etc. Many housewives are exhibiting with no little pride the new flavors and better quality of jams and jellies made with Certo. These keep perfectly.

Certo is absolutely pure—contains no gelatine or preservative. It is Mother Nature's "jell-maker." Housewives particularly have received it with open arms because it is so certain, so economical, so simple and so useful. They are recomending it to all their friends. Ask some of your neighbors about it. Then get a bottle of Certo with recipe book from your grocer or druggist at once. Try it right away with fresh fruit like cherries, currants or raspberries. Then you will do all your preserving the new and modern way, the easy economical and better Certo process. For extra copies of Certo Book of Recipes write Pectin Sales Co., Inc., Rochester, N. Y. If your grocer or druggist does not have Certo, please telephone Miss Keller at Pico 700 to learn where to obtain it.

volumns of Shelly to read on my vacation. When Bill saw them he said: "Good! Glad you are getting those cook books. I'm hungry most of the time down here."

I replied, "those are books of a great poet and that is ink spilled on there by the poet. It isn't blackberry juice dropped by the pie-maker. Did you ever read Shelley?"

"Only as much as I had too in high school and even then the teachers said: 'Thou shalt not pass' on Shelley and I have never passed on him since and don't intend to now."

The poet and I exchanged mournful glances of hopelessness over the mixture of Bill Nye and Shelley.

But Bill, being my husband, was man of the tent where we lived while we were at Laguna, and when a dripping-wet batheress—one of those inveterate early dippers in the surf — came to our locked door and softly said "Charles, Charles, let me in. Why do you lock the door?" Bill murmured from behind the sleeping curtain, "Pardon me, I'm not Charles."

But the dripping bather insisted, "Now don't try to fool me, Charles. Let me in, I'm cold."

Then Bill in mock solemnity said "Madame, you are mistaken in your premises. I refuse to argue with you."

"Oh, pardon ME," said the dripping one—very embarrassed, as she hurried to a tent two doors away. She was catching cold and her husband was catching fish.

I hope the joys of a swim every day brought the sweet-voiced intruder the same re-creation as mine brought me.

Culver City Women's Club

Overalls, middies, rompers, khakies and bloomers will be the order for all the members of the Culver City Women's Club and their children Wednesday, when they hold their great civic day of red geranium planting. Mrs. Paul H. MacKeeby, chairman of the program for the coming year, newly appointed by the president, Mrs. Harry Culver, has made arrangements for this gala day.

The women with their children aided by the Chamber of Commerce, are going to plant in one day masses of red geraniums already large enough to blossom along the entire length, and on both sides of the Pacic Electric Railways from one end of the town to the other. At noon a box luncheon will be enjoyed on the beautiful lawns of the Harry H. Culver home. There will be band music and a playtime for the children, but the chief event is the geranium planting itself. Moving pictures will be taken and it is expected that the little city will lend its support 100 per cent to this initial effort in civic work of the club.

Among other civic activities that Mrs. MacKeeby is planning, is a series of talks at the regular club meetings. A representative of the Better America Federation will be asked to give a resume of the purposes of that organization and two speakers—one for the Water Power Act, and the other against it—will be invited to speak at the earliest meetings possible.

The Soroptimists

The newly-formed Soroptimists, Club which has taken the men's Rotary Club for its model, held its installation banquet at the Los Angeles Athletic Club on June 19. The speakers included Gov. Stephens and Mayor Cryer and greetings were presented by Dr. Fannie Williams, president of the San Francisco branch of the young organization.

A particularly god musical program enhanced the occasion at which Mme. Constance Balfour sang, Marion Warde gave dramalogues and Miss Edith Lillian Clark provided a piano solo.

Miss Oda Faulconer has been elected president of the Los Angeles Soroptimists, regarded as most happy choices which will go far to establish the young club on a firm basis.

Watch Your Weight

Dr. Lulu Hunt Peters has written a merry letter to a Los Angeles friend in which she tells of the many thousands of letters that are reaching her from all over the country in responses to her clever articles. And the admits that in the triumph of her success, she is highly liable to become a shade too plump herself, and is sternly disciplining herself down to a rigid 700 calories a day to shed an extra five pounds which somehow in a single week. Here is one attached itself to her person woman who positively may never grow fat if she would maintain her own lofty creed.

And Dr. Peters receives a great many letters from Los Angeles women, she declares—and these she loves best of all. She evidently reads all the club news about us too, for she is quite alarmingly well informed upon our local doings.

Her publishers place her book at the head of their "best seller" list and prophesy that this will also be true for the coming month. Dr. Peters is also writing another Baby book to be published in the near future.

Philanthprophy and Civics Club

The Philanthrophy and Civics Club will hold its last meeting of the season next Thursday and will enjoy a well earned vacation until September. Mrs. Nellie Graham, the club's vice-president will return from Alaska in time for this meeting and preside in the absence of Mrs. Lillian Burkhardt Goldsmith, who will be entering upon her Pantages engagement this week.

A birthday luncheon will be held this Thursday when Judge Thomas O. Toland will discuss "Corporation Law." An old-fashioned spelling bee with all the members in costume will be a diversion for the afternoon. Hostesses for this occasion will be Mesdames John Ray, J. D. Taylor, J. H. Shortell, H. B. Wheaton, George H. Wright, Charles Sproule, George Beebe, J. E. Mendelson and Ernest Child.

At Home

Three charming clubwomen will be hostesses at an At Home reception on Thursday, the 27th inst. when Mrs. Enoch Pepper, Mrs. Leonadis Hamlin Hurtt and Miss Elizabeth Pepper will receive from 4 to 6 p.m. at 3816 Ingraham street.

Mrs. Hilda Ringstrom added another one to the rapidly growing list of successful parties given for the benefit of the Elysian Heights Civic clubhouse found when she entertained the club and friends last Saturday at her home 1558 Curran street. The proceeds amounted to $21.00.

Dancing on the porch to the music of a phonograph attracted many while groups of young people indulged in games on the well-lighted lawn. Others played cards under the eyes of interested spectators who found pleasure in bantering the losers. Mrs. H. E. Wilkinson executed the poinsetta dance in costume and also read an original poem about the gaining of the proposed new clubhouse. Miss Mildred Burstein gave several selections on the piano. Mr. Leslie Mead won the two pound box of candy which was raffled off. Punch and wafers were served.

Ideas for speeding up the acquiring of more money for the building fund were rampant. Two of the more popular ones appearing to be the selling of stock among members and friends; the other being the advancing of the money by a few and then making the clubhouse pay for itself by renting it for social purposes. One small club in another part of the city has done this and now the building is bringing in $100 per month to the club.

Legal Status of Women

A highly interesting booklet has been compiled through the inspiration of the National League of Women Voters setting for the legal status of women in every State in the Union. The California data were compiled and edited by F Josephine Stevenson of Pasadena, and contains information regarding marriage laws, property laws, divorce laws, industrial laws, family support, contracts and education, everything, in fact, pertaining to the legal status of women.

These booklets can be bought in the Women's University Club rooms in the Brack Shops for 10 cents.

The Woman's City Club

Charles C. Moore, Republican candidate for Senator from California, will be the speaker at the Woman's City Club Monday, so that the club, which was highly disappointed last week on account of Mr. Moore's numerous conflicting dates, will have the pleasure of hearing him after all.

Candidates for police judgeships will also be heard.

The club meets at Walker auditorium at 1 p.m. The regular Tuesday membership meeting will be held at the Apollo Cafe at noon, when luncheon will be enjoyed.

CHILE HOLDS OUR CLOTHES TOO "LOUD"

American wearing apparel for either men or women is not favorably regarded in the section of Chili which lies around Concepcion, says a consular report received by the Department of Commerce. For men's wear the local dealers look to London. Suits for men in Concepcion are nearly all made to measure from British cloth, which is said to be good, but does not hold its shape because of the damp climate. Coats are made in American style, but trousers are on British lines, with trouser tops which range from the waist to the armpits, with the tendency toward the higher extreme. Belts are never worn, except very wide ones, in connection with suspenders.

Local merchants regard all American wearing apparel for men as garish, loud and of poor quality. Shirts are principally made in Chili and have to be put on over the head. Union suits for men have no sale, as everyone wants two-piece garments. Only a few American collars are on the market, and all are rather low in height, some dealers professing to believe that all American collars are made very low for men with very short necks. English collars of nondescript appearance, Chilian collars which are somewhat better looking and some French collars complete the stock. Italian hats of very light weight are the favorites in this market, their lightweight being a factor in the computation of import duties.—[Exchange.

Want Kiss Regulations

Certain Texas professors want a law to regulate kissing. If that is impracticable they will compromise by giving educational heads power to censor osculation in colleges. "If young people feel that life isn't worth while unless they kiss," says Dr. J. M. Frazier of Belton college, Fort Worth, "let them at least protect themselves by the certificate plan." According to this regulation when two young people want to kiss they must mutually exhibit certificates showing themselves capable of making osculatory salutes without dire results.—[Pathfinder.

Not a Perfect Model

"John, when you were lecturing Willie just now you held the postage stamp up as a model, telling him that by sticking to one thing it always got there."

"Yes, what of it?"

"Nothing, only I noticed that the postage stamp has to get a licking before it will stay on the job."—[Boston Transcript.

ADVENTURERS FORM CLUBS

ing to be shot by bandits who had captured him, he saved his own life by removing and replacing an artificial eye whose predecessor was lost in an earlier misadventure. This won him celestial homage and an escort to freedom and safety.

Here are others of Mr. Woods's qualifications as an adventurer: He tramped from Sheridan, Wyo., to Billings, Mont.; he shipped out of Victoria, B. C., on a long sealing cruise; stowed away on a windjammer for a long voyage to San Francisco; spent three years in the north of Luzon, P. I., and took the first detachment of American troops into the Igorrote country and garrisoned a town there for a year, cut off from all outside supplies and living only on what the district could supply.

F. Marshall Sanderson, now a resident of Long Beach, began his adventurous career in foreign service as a correspondent of the London Times and a number of British periodicals. He was an eyewitness of the Kimberly (South Africa) diamond riots in 1902 and then went to the Fiji Islands, where he learned the language of the natives and gathered much authentic data of the South Sea tribesmen.

It was in China, however, that Mr. Sanderson had his greatest adventure. There he was captured and held for ransom by Chinese bandits and was made free again only after a battle between the bandits and a relief expedition which was sent by the British government to his rescue.

J. S. Edwards, another of our adventurers, was born in Canada, but became an American citizen at Saginaw, Mich., when a youth. For more than thirty years he has been a trainer of wild animals and is a veritable encyclopedia of knowledge regarding monkeys and apes. He brought the first live gorilla to America twenty-one years ago and has trained many of the remarkable chimpanzees familiar to all of us through the motion-picture screen.

COILS OF CONSTRICTOR

Mr. Edwards has had many thrilling experiences and narrow escapes in his years of close association with wild animals, but he thinks his most exciting times were had with reptiles, especially the large species, which, when hungry and being fed small food will strike at any larger moving object in sight. On one occasion it took several of Mr. Edwards's helpers more than two hours to release him from the coils of a monster boa constrictor

"One Shot Grizzly King is the sobriquet given Chester Ellsworth, who has a wide reputation as a big bear hunter. His collection of trophies is the most extensive in the West. Mr. Ellsworth has killed thirty bears with his single-shot Winchester 405.

On one occasion he came face to face with a giant grizzly at a sharp turn in the trail. The wind was blowing toward the hunter and Bruin was as completely surprised as was Ellsworth, who says:

"I saw at once by the shaking of his sides that he was getting ready either to wheel and run, or to charge me with that peculiar ferocity and swiftness that marks our American Grizzly. I concluded the latter was more probable, so I plugged him with one shot that did the business."

It is easy to tell the difference between grizzlies and large black and brown bears, Mr. Ellsworth says. The Grizzlies have long claws, the others, short, marking them as tree-climbers.

Edward E. Kellogg's bid for adventurous fame rests in the far north. He went to Dawson, Alaska, in 1897, and traversed the Chilkoot Pass with the first Argonauts. He has run all sorts of craft from the Yukon and Tanana Rivers and has spent many years in exploring the far Alaskan reaches and the coast of Siberia, whence he returned recently. Again he has heard the call of the wanderlust and next spring he will head an expedition to Siberia as far north as Petropavlosk on the Kamchatkan peninsula.

CHASING CRIMINALS

John H. Robinson is another of those stalwart Alaskan pioneers. His long duties in the government service as Deputy United States Marshal in various parts of Alaska served a most useful purpose in the building and operation of the railroad at Anchorage. Mr. Robinson has seen some of the worst sides of life as it was in the early days in that northern No-Man's Land. He has done much prospecting, exploring, big game hunting as well as chasing criminals in Alaska and the great Northwest, where was an officer for a time in the famous Northwest Mounted Police.

Dr. Lennox Fraser is a native of Elgin, Scotland, and he comes of a family of five brothers, each of whom was, or is, a famous adventurer. The years 1884, 1885 and 1886 were spent by Dr. Fraser on the battlefields of the Egyptian Soudan, toiling up the ancient Nile, marching on the Nubian desert, as a member of the rescue party searching for Gen. "Chinese" Gordon, who died as the gates of Khartoum were traitorously opened to the fierce soldiers of the Mahdi, and the British expedition arrived too late!

Lennox Fraser and his brothers, two of whom occupy soldiers' graves, are entitled to wear nineteen war decorations won in three of Britain's wars, including the World War.

OFFICERS OF THE CLUB

And so one might wander on down the complete roster of Adventurers' Club No. III, finding each of the sixty members' experiences material fit to form the climax of a thrilling story. Their temporary quarters have been established in the studio in Los Angeles of Frank S. Wilton, veteran of the African jungles. Plans are now on foot for a suitable clubhouse, centrally located "for the promotion of the assemblage and cordial friendship of adventurers."

The officers of the club are:

President, Dr. Edward Douglas Jones of Los Angeles; Yukon explorer; big-game hunter and habitgroup collector for museums.

First Vice-president, Clair Avery Orr, of Avalon, Catalina Island, who hoisted the Union Jack in Rhodesia when the British entered; big game hunter; traveler in Canada and Africa, and former American consul at Carthagena, Columbia.

Secretary, Dr. Edward P. Bailey.

Treasurer, Capt. Charles A. Meyers, of Los Angeles, who has spent years at research work in Germany, France, Russia, Italy, Switzerland, Holland and Belgium.

VAST CHORUS TO SING AT PROGRESS PAGEANT

Picked Industrial Vocalists Will Render Classic and Popular Music at Festival

"Music of the people, for the people and by the people" will come into its own at the Industrial Musical Festival to be celebrated in connection with the Los Angeles Industrial Exposition and Pageant of Progress, August 25 to September 9, next, inclusive.

Under the general direction of Miss Antonette Ruth Sabel, director of the Chamber of Commerce Bureau of Industrial Music, a chorus of 750 splendid singers and several instrumental bands, organized and trained within the last year will present programs of popular and classical music at Exposition Park.

A stadium, with a seating capacity of 6000, is being constructed for visitors. A special stage is being built for the singers and musicians and a scientific and adequate sounding-board is being erected. No pains or expense are being spared in order to carry out the highest ideals of those sponsoring the musical festival which will be the first of its kind ever given in the United States.

A feature of the entertainments will be the great pipe organ which will be taken to the grounds and used for chorus accompaniment as well as for daily recitals to be given by noted organists of the Southland.

SING TWO NIGHTS

During the two weeks of the festival, the great chorus will sing two nights, one evening of each week, the other nights being given over to the bands and orchestras from Bullock's, the Pacific Electric Company, Southern Pacific and other companies. Two evenings of each week the various bands and orchestras will be massed into one huge band of 500 pieces, the leader of each organization being given an opportunity to lead the massed band. It was announced yesterday that no outside soloists or musicians will be secured for the evening entertainments, which will be entirely in the hands of the industrial musicians. In the afternoons the musical programs will be rendered by professional musicians engaged by the Chamber of Commerce through Miss Sabel.

The musical material to be presented by the chorus will be from the best musical literature, including such numbers as "The Heavens Resound," by Beethoven; Gunoud's "Praise Ye The Father" and Henry Hadley's "New Earth," the latter composition to be presented for the first time on the Pacific Coast. The members of the chorus consist of all the units which have been organized in Los Angeles since last October, including choruses from Bullock's, the Broadway Department Store, Hamburger's, California Walnut Growers, Mullen and Bluett, City Dye Works, Silverwood's and others.

TO SING DARKY SONGS

Pullman porters of trains running into Los Angeles have been organized to provide a special program of folk music and it is expected that their contribution to the entertainment will comprise one of the most interesting features of the festival.

The theme of the entire festival is to be "God, Home and Country" and the slogan will be "Music touches the lips of toil and makes them vibrant with melody." Between numbers, sentiments expressive of the occasion, written by E. E. Hollingworth, will be recited by noted actors and professional readers of Southern California.

Among the popular songs to be sung will be "Stars of the Summer Night," "When You and I Were Young," "The Old Road," "Columbia, Gem of the Ocean" and "The Star Spangled Banner," which will be rendered as an anthem.

A huge fireworks flag, extending across the stage, will be the climax of the festival. The dates on which the chorus is to appear have not

SEEKS AID FOR INDIANS

Retired Shoe Merchant Believes Redskins Have Been Mistreated; Wants Bill Hart's Help

Myer H. Moss, retired shoe merchant of Chicago, is in Los Angeles to confer with Bill Hart and others on ways and means of aiding the redskin.

"It's a damnable outrage the way they've been treated," he declared. "No less than 15,000 Indians volunteered to fight during the World War. Ten thousand members of this race are professional men, yet the Indian is denied the privilege of citizenship. Something has got to be done about this shame, and that's what I'm giving my time to now."

HE HELPS OTHERS

Helping others has been a sort of hobby with Mr. Moss since he gave up active business. In 1916 he was associated with B. J. Rosenthal in forming the committee on unemployment for men past 45 years of age. This was at the time when the United States Express Company went out of existence and a large number of middle-aged men were thrown out of work.

"We got jobs for more than 25,000 old fellows in less than a year, even placing one man who was 93," said Mr. Moss. "The idea spread to Los Angeles and other big cities throughout the country. Then the government took over the work itself."

IS PHILANTHROPIC

In 1918 Messrs. Rosenthal and Moss, still feeling the philanthropic urge, organized the Committee for Employment of Handicapped People, but Uncle Sam eventually adopted that bureau, too.

And now it's the Indians! Mr. Moss and his wife will be here for a month as the guests of Mrs. Joe Goldsmith, 1808 North Whitley avenue. Years ago the former was in the real estate business in Los Angeles.

"I remember laying out the Meadow Park subdivision back in '87," he said. "And then I promoted Aldine Square. But isn't it a shame about those poor Indians? Do you realize that they're about the only slave class left in this world?"

BREAKERS AHEAD!

Functions of State Officials as Well as County Heads Duplicated, is Charge Made

BY NELLIE BREWER PIERCE

[Mrs. Pierce is a Los Angeles attorney who spent more than four years in an exhaustive investigation of the reasons for the high cost of government in California. This is the eighth of a series of articles by her. The ninth will appear next Sunday. They will be of vital interest to every taxpayer in this State.—Ed.]

Included in the $5.50 per capita expended for "humitarian" functions, out of the total $11.33 (California's governmental cost payments) is the much-heralded orphan aid expense.

The manner of its distribution forms an illuminating chapter in the history of the duplication of the functions of State officers in California, and of the county and municipal agencies as well.

The orphan aid is administered by the "Child Agents" of the Board of Control. The Board of Control is the agency charged with the administration of the State's financial affairs. In 1913 the board was authorized to employ three child agents to investigate application for the aid of orphaned or abandoned children.

In 1917 the Legislature provided for four child agents, but in actual practice in the fiscal year 1918-1919 there were four child agents, three visiting nurses, two clerks and three stenographers on the pay roll. In addition a psychologist was employed for six months and a physician for one month during that period.

AMENDED STATUTE

The Legislature in 1919 amended the statute to conform to the facts, and the Board of Control is now permitted to appoint as many employees as it sees fit.

The most important amendment in 1919, from a humanitarian point of view, however, was that which provided that if the appropriation for salaries, support and expenses of the child agents was insufficient, additional amounts for salary, support and expenses might be paid from the orphan aid appropriation. Thereby transferring the aid to orphans to the aid to employees.

In 1917 there was appropriated $44,400 for salaries, support and expenses of the child agents, or $22,200 for the years of 1917-1918 and 1918-1919, respectively.

In 1919 the salaries, support and expenses of these employees amounted to $25,262.60. In addition to this amount the salary and expenses of the auditor employed by the Board of Control to visit and audit the books of orphan homes receiving State aid amounted to $759.89. The aid extended in that period was $557,951.84, according to the statement of the Board of Control.

THEORY OF AID

The theory of the orphan aid is that the State shall pay one-half the expense, and the county the other half. The present law requires the payment of $10 a month by the State.

Before the initial application is made to the Board of Control child agents for orphan aid, the case is investigated by local agencies, as the county officials must be assured that the claim is just before obligating the county. The county then advances the money for State aid and makes a claim upon the State semiannually for such advances.

To the cost of the administration of State aid, therefore, must be added the cost of county investigation of each case.

MAIN COUNTIES

According to the best statistics available in 1919, 70 per cent of the cases receiving State aid were in the counties of San Francisco, Alameda and Los Angeles. In these counties, before application was made to the Board of Control, the case was thoroughly investigated and references examined by at least one of the following agencies:

San Francisco county—Widows' Pension Bureau, San Francisco Associated Charities Children's Agency, San Francisco Juvenile Probation Office, Little Children's Aid, Native Sons and Daughters.

Alameda—Oakland Associated Charities, Berkeley Charity Organi-

UTILITIES BOARD TO HEAR SANTA FE PLAN AGAIN

Spokesman of Chamber and Jobbers Strongly Urges Grasping of Industrial Opportunity

The City Council's Public Utilities Committee will give another hearing tomorrow afternoon on the application of the Santa Fe Railroad for a franchise to extend its lines twelve miles into the Los Angeles Harbor district. This application has been indorsed by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Fourth Supervisorial District, the Wilmington and Los Angeles Harbor chambers of commerce, the Associated Jobbers and other organizations, and the Board of Public Utilities and the Board of Harbor Commissioners have likewise given their approval to the road's plans to serve the harbor district.

The arguments for the approval of the Santa Fe's application were strongly set forth in the following statement made to the Council's Public Utilities Committee by F. P. Gregson, representing the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the Associated Jobbers:

BY F. P. GREGSON
Traffic Manager, Associated Jobbers.

The Santa Fe Railroad system is the only continuous line under one management from Chicago to the Pacific Coast, serving the ports of San Diego, Redondo and San Francisco. It is the shortest line from the cotton belt of Oklahoma and the central and westerly part of Texas, and serves the agricultural States of Kansas, Missouri and Iowa. On the north its lines extend from Denver, Colo., to Pecos and El Paso, Tex., serving on the south the ports of Houston and Galveston, and other Gulf ports of Texas. It is one of the country's strongest lines financially, and the heaviest creator of tonnage of the Western lines, and the latter is most essential when we consider that at the present time the Pacific Coast originates less than 30 per cent of its export trade, and therefore must depend upon the rail carriers for export tonnage in building up the ports of the Southern Pacific Coast.

RATE ADVANTAGE TOLD

The rail carriers as a whole have it in their power to make lower rates to promote export tonnage than obtain upon domestic tonnage, and it follows that the Santa Fe system has a strong voice in rate making. Steamship companies operating in foreign trade seek the ports which are served by the strongest rail carriers and those serving the most widely diffused territory. San Francisco and other Pacific ports advertise this feature very extensively.

There appears to be certain objections to the entry of the Santa Fe to the port as planned, by persons not fully informed or actuated by private interests.

The Santa Fe line serving the port can only be a branch line and cannot be a through transcontinental line as stated by the Municipal League in the interest of the Slauson avenue objectors. All transcontinental trains are broken up and tonnage divided into territorial districts outside of the City of Los Angeles.

TRAFFIC ONLY LOCAL

The local trains are broken up and distributed into local districts in the Los Angeles yards, and only such tonnage as is destined to and from and through the port would be handled over the branch line, and this tonnage cannot be in any way comparable with the main line or transcontinental tonnage as a whole.

As to alleged interference with proposed development in connection with the Bixby Slough property, the late Mr. Epes Randolph, of the Southern Pacific, stated a number of years ago when the city was about one-half the population of today that it would cost any transcontinental line seeking entry to Los Angeles and the port $20,000,000, and it is conceded Mr. Randolph was an authority on railroad construction and organization. We have now the greatest transcontinental line in the United States which can reach our port at a nominal cost, and we would ask that this question be considered from the standpoint of the greatest benefit to the port of Los Angeles.

INTERESTS CONFLICT

While to our mind the development of Bixby Slough would be a desirable addition from a commercial standpoint, it has been shown that it is controlled by private interests and in order to have government aid in its improvement the City of Los Angeles would have to acquire this property, as the United States government is on record against contributing for the improvement of private interests. This is illustrated by the efforts of Long Beach to secure government aid in its harbor improvements and the refusal of the government to compensate the Consolidated Lumber Company for certain improvements made in the Inner Harbor on the grounds that it was for the benefit of private interests.

Mr. Kennedy, of the Board of Public Utilities, stated that the government had made a survey from the West Basin to Bixby Slough, but I have satisfied myself Mr. Kennedy was not correctly informed. The United States Engineer's office has advised that no survey has been made by them.

NO SPECIAL SURVEY

There has been, of course, a general topographical survey by the United States Geological Survey and the Bixby Slough is included in what is known as the Redondo Quadrant. This survey gives a part of the Bixby Slough and adjoining property an elevation of fifty-eight feet above sea level.

It requires only a birdseye view of this situation to get at something like a fair cost of construction from the northerly part of the West Basin to and covering the entire slough. But it is not for the city of Los Angeles to expend any of its harbor appropriation to survey and arrive at cost estimates, since the city of Los Angeles cannot participate in its development without acquiring the property. The same is true as to the Federal government. We do know, however, that the matter has been under continuous consideration by the private owners of this property for a number of years past without any tangible results. Therefore, the Board of Public Utilities were correct in stating that the proposition was still a visionary one and can only be classified as a potentiality, and so we ask if consideration should not be given an actuality—the Santa Fe extension as against this potential improvement, especially as the city is amply protected by the proposed conditions of the franchise as recommended by the Board of Public Utilities.

FACILITIES OFFERED

As regards E street franchise, where it is proposed to establish a local freight depot and team tracks:

This was ridiculed by Commissioner Kennedy of the Board of Public Utilities, on the ground that no less-than-carload tonnage was created at Wilmington. Under the law, carriers must provide facilities for handling freight, regardless of quantity. I would like to remind you that when the Santa Fe entered Los Angeles in 1887 there was only a small frame building utilized as a depot, which was later destroyed by fire, and business was conducted in ordinary coaches. There was no transportation from the depot to the heart of the city, but if you view the premises today you will find modern concrete depots, innumerable team tracks and the entire territory surrounded by substantial business houses, wholesale houses, warehouses, etc., and unless we have similar facilities at the port district we cannot expect to have similar development there.

WEDS ONE GIRL THREE TIMES

War Veteran Has Trouble Making Marriage Permanent

For a young man, Walter O. Hackett has done very well in the marriage mart. He has a record of four marriages, three being to the same woman, but his ventures were due to circumstances. He was divorced from a former wife and before the final decree was filed, he married Marion C. Pendergraft. He was granted an annulment of the marriage by Judge Willis; remarried Marion and the marriage annulled by Judge Summerfield.

Yesterday Judge Summerfield made Marion his wife, all issues being settled. Mr. Hackett was a soldier of the World War. His second annulment of his marriage to Marion was due to governmental objections.

SONG AND WORK AN OLD CUSTOM

way for a unified scheme of music study for the industrial workers.

Los Angeles has, as far as it has been determined, been the first city to organize a bureau which embodies in itself the chief aims of the individual industrial music projects. The systematic methods of this bureau have opened a vast new horizon for the movement. It has shown that business institutions are not only capable of developing their own choruses, but can attain the goal of a separate band or orchestra, give their own concerts and even seek the approval eventually of the artistic audience.

To show the significance of the movement, a chorus of some 500 voices has been assembled under the direction of Ruth Antoinette Sabel, who is in charge of the Bureau of Industrial Music. She herself has undertaken to train this body, and rehearsals are being held weekly in the auditorium of the Music and Art Building.

OLD SONGS STUDIED

Music that is familiar and simple is being studied by this body. They are first learning patriotic songs and anthems, and folk songs. Many of these they give a capella, that is without accompaniment by piano or other instrument. In the course of the rehearsals they are to essay "The Heavens Resound," by Beethoven, "Praise Ye the Father," by Gounod, and "Marching Men," from Henry Hadley's, "New Earth." These are compositions of more difficult character.

It is not, however, so much what this chorus is singing, as the method of study. Here the greatest care and attention to detail are disclosed. Nothing is slipshod. The choruses are so perfected that the full revelation of its harmony is apparent to the listener. The parts are rehearsed by sopranos, altos, tenors and basses separately until this is accomplished.

The result is that the industrial music is really music. It is a vigorous effort toward technical perfection, in which it differs materially from community singing, which lays stress more especially on mass and volume, and the joy of the singer himself in singing. Community singing is securely established on this basis, and has won a large popularity because it is Democratic in the opportunity it affords for everybody to take part in song. It is not designed however, to give special training to voices, whereas industrial music as now carried on, is. Also it develops with this the knowledge of music itself.

TO FEATURE CONCERT

The industrial concert is to be a feature of the Industrial Exposition opening August 26 at Exposition Park. Throughout the period of the exposition the program will be given. And in addition to the chorus there will be a band festival, in which the players of the various industrial bands will probably take part. There are nearly 400 of these players in the various industrial institutions, who have been studying since October.

The keynote of all the musical endeavor is God, country and home. Nearly all the choral songs embody one of these ideas. They give a strength to the movement which is deep-rooted and whose appeal is far-reaching.

Untrained singers are fast developing voices and a taste for music with the progress of the rehearsals. These they attend with strict regularily in practically every instance. Day by day the interest is growing in the new movement which is a source of enthusiasm to those who take part, and which is a potent step in the direction of a higher culture.

PLASTER CONTRACTOR ASSOCIATION MEETS

More than fifty members of the Contracting Plasterers' Association attended a "get-acquainted" banquet at the Los Angeles Athletic Club Friday night. Mayor Cryer, Supervisor J. H. Bean, W. R. Kilgore and Lyle Eveland were guests of honor. The Mayor was introduced by George Pedgrift, president of the association.

"Government is only as good or as bad as you, the people, make it," he told his hearers. "At election time only a small minority of the citizens take the trouble to vote, and the remainder criticise the officeholders and the laws they pass. The election of good or bad officeholders and the enactment of beneficial or malicious laws is a problem over which you have absolute control by exercising your privilege of the ballot."

The Mayor also spoke of the necessity of creating a new charter for the city.

BREAKERS AHEAD!

Functions of State Officials, as Well as County Heads, Duplicated, is Charge

zation, Alameda Juvenile Probation Office, Catholic Ladies' Aid Society, Eureka Benevolent Society.

Los Angeles—Los Angeles County Outdoor Relief Division, Los Angeles Juvenile Probation Office.

Each one of these agencies has a visitor or nurse, or both, who visits the homes where the children are located and investigates references.

DUPLICATION SHOWN

The duplication of effort does not end here, however. In the supervision of orphan asylums receiving State aid and foster homes caring for children receiving State aid the activities of the child agents exactly duplicate those of the State Board of Charities and Corrections.

There were thirty-three orphanages, four maternity homes and three child-placing agencies in 1919 receiving State aid. These agencies are subject to the inspection, rules and regulations of both the child agents of the Board of Control and the State Board of Charities and Corrections. Both boards require these agencies to make financial statements on forms prescribed by them semiannually.

In 1919 a social survey was made of all such agencies in the counties of Los Angeles, San Francisco and Alameda. Each orphanage, maternity home and child-placing agency reported that both State agencies inspected them; some agencies reported as many as ten visits from a single State board in that year.

EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

That a considerable portion of the time of the Board of Control child agents is spent in the inspection of institutions is indicated by the following detail of traveling expense accounts of one of their nurses for visits to McKinley Home, an orphanage located at Gardena, a suburb of Los Angeles.

1918—October 18-19, Orcutt, Los Angeles, visiting McKinley Industrial Home, etc., $30.54; October 20, Orcutt, Gardena and vicinity, $28.89; October 27-29, Orcutt, Los Angeles, visiting McKinley and others, $8.80; November 1-December 7, Dr. Gordon, psychologist, McKinley, $58.18.

1919—March 3-10, Orcutt, McKinley Home, etc., $53.76; March 11-22, Orcutt, Los Angeles, to McKinley Home, four trips, $35.24; March 23, Orcutt, McKinley Home, $26.40; March 30, Orcutt, McKinley Home, etc., $27.35; April 6-12, Orcutt, McKinley Home, two trips, $25.65; April 13, Orcutt, McKinley Home, $24.15; April 27, Orcutt, McKinley Home, $23.50; May 4, Orcutt, McKinley Home, $22.65; May 11-17, Orcutt, McKinley Home, etc., $24.58; May 25, Orcutt, Los Angeles, visiting orphanages (no names,) $22.10; June 1, Orcutt, McKinley Home, etc., $24.09; June 15-28, Orcutt, McKinley Home, etc., $52.94.

HOME QUITS STATE

This schedule shows nineteen visits in nine months, and the McKinley Home officials reported that the chief child agent also two or three visits in the same year and several visits from the State Board of Charities and Corrections. The home decided not to apply for State aid in the future and relieve itself of duplicating inspection service.

ADDITIONAL EXPENSE

In addition to the $25,262.60 expended by the child agents of the Board of Control, there was expended by the State Board of Charities and Corrections for the supervision of dependents $32,... for delinquent supervision and $500 for the supervision of hos-pitals, making a total of $32,349.52.

These figures were obtained from the original vouchers in the Controller's office and analyzed to determine these facts, as the records of the Board of Control do not segregate the cost of dependent and delinquent supervision. The cost of insane hospital inspection is an estimate furnished by the State Board of Charities and Corrections, as the vouchers did not disclose this information.

In 1915 there were sixty-one institutions caring for children subject to inspection by the State Board of Charities, and eight of this number were receiving State aid and also were inspected by the child agents of the Board of Control. In 1919 the number decreased to fifty-four, only thirty-three of which received aid.

The following table shows the appropriations made for the salaries, support and expenses of these agencies for the bienniums 1915-1917 and 1921-1923, respectively:

FIRST DEPARTMENT STORE

How the telephone dawned on the shopping public, way back in 1879, is described in the story of R. H. Macy's department store in New York City, which has just been published, Edward Hungerford's "The Romance of a Great Store."

"Soon after the first electric lamps, the store's first telephone was installed. It, too, was a great novelty, and the customers of the establishment developed a habit of calling up their friends just so they could say they had used it. Eventually the convenience of the device became so apparent that folk stood in queues awaiting their turn to use it and the telephone company requested Macy's to take it out or at least to discontinue the practice of using it so freely."—[Telephone Press.

AGED CITY AUTOS ARE PENSIONED

Mayor and Council Get Shiny Sedans in Place of Infirm Conveyances

The official automobile of the Mayor of Los Angeles having reached the age where its infirmities made it hazardous for the Mayor and guests of the city to undertake a ride in it with any assurance that they would reach their destinations, the City Council has approved of the Police Commission's recommendation that a new sedan be purchased for the Mayor. The old car, which was purchased during Mayor Snyder's administration, will be turned in as part of the cost of the new car. The City Council also voted itself a sedan, and the old Council car will be turned over to the police department to be used for emergency work by the detective burau.

The net cost of the two new machines will be $6100. Mayor Cryer and the Councilmen declared they were not at all happy over the idea of purchasing the cars and would not have approved of it except for the fact that Chief Driver Sweeney of the police department reported that both the autos had seen their best days and the repair bills were greater than the cars were worth.

As the Mayor is required to represent the city during visits of kings, princes, dukes, generals, admirals and such and the Council must visit all parts of the city and take part in parades and other celebrations, the officials felt that the citizens would not be proud of the representatives of the metropolis of the Pacific Coast arriving in broken-down dingy automobiles, and so the appropriation of the $6100 was made.

The Mayor's old car was a limousine. The Council's old car was a touring car. The new cars will both be six-cylinder sedans.

Valentino to Lead in Grand March at Roof

Rodolph Valentino will lead the grand march of the city employees at their Mardi Gras ball at the Cinderella Roof tomorrow night.

The ball is being given for the benefit of the Spanish War Veterans' convention, which is to be held here early next month.

Miss Jessie Martin, who has been picked by the city employees to act as their queen in the great contest, which is being staged, will lead the procession with Valentino.

Besides dancing, the members of the local film colony have consented to help make the affair a success and a number of vaudeville acts have been scheduled for the evening's bill. Acts from Pantages, the Orpheum and Sid Grauman's theaters have been accepted by the committee in charge of the ball.

Miss Marion Gould is to headline the fancy dancing acts which are on the program with a new dance called "The Spirit of the Bachelor Button." Miss Gould is to leave next week to join the Ziegfeld Follies company in New York.

LARGE FISH IN SWIM AT SAN PEDRO

Packing Industry's First Period of Full Work Starts This Week

Los Angeles Harbor's fish-packing industry will this week swing into its first period of full production, according to an announcement made last night by packers. Schools of barracuda and bluefin tuna in steadily increasing quantities are daily reported running on the banks off Point Loma and northward.

During the two weeks ending the 21st inst. approximately 2,500,000 pounds of fish were delivered to canneries at the local port, as compared to about 900,000 pounds going to San Diego plants, according to C. F. Maddox, Fish Commissioner at San Diego. Receipts of albacore have averaged 50 per cent larger than catches of bluefin tuna.

Discrediting reports from San Diego to the effect that local packers were receiving the bulk of the tuna catches by paying $150 per ton for the fish—$15 and $20 above the established price—Gilbert Van Camp, Los Angeles Harbor broker, declared yesterday that the balance favors this port because of its better facilities.

Owner of Cafe Has Hearing on Bribery Charge

Samuel Shaneman, who conducts a restaurant at 224 South Spring street, was arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Long yesterday on a charge of attempting to bribe officers C. C. Brown and F. C. Neal, prohibition agents, by offering them $240 in cash following the sale of two drinks of liquor to Brown.

Bond was fixed at $5000, and the preliminary hearing set for Tuesday, August 1, next.

Shaneman was asked if he had anything to say about the attempted bribery charge, but he excused himself on the ground that he was suffering from asthma, making it difficult for him to talk.

The Eternal Hills Crumble

The geological freak of a great mountain disintegrating so fast that it is discernible day by day—a thing that ordinarily takes thousands of years—is occurring in the mountainous regions near Vienna. The Ausse Sandling, rising over 5000 feet, is simply collapsing. Its great cones and pinnacles of rock are crashing and tumbling as if undermined by gnomes. The forests that clothed the slopes lie flat or move slowly and steadily downward, piling into the valleys, and the turf carpet moves with them. Over three and three-quarter miles of territory are involved in the movement and hundreds of sightseers view the convulsions from opposite slopes. The phenomenon has been in progress for many months, with gradually increasing acceleration. One scientific explanation is the presence of an abnormal quantity of water in the chalky limestone core of the mountain, causing the collapse of great caverns and the slipping of strata.—[Detroit News.

WOBBLY HORDES EXPECTED HERE

Reign of Terror in Golden State is Aim

May Try to Establish Soviet on Pacific Coast

Predicts Effort to Organize All Workers

BY ZERO

[This is the fourth of a series of articles on revolutionary activities in this country, particularly as it has and will affect the Pacific Coast. Zero for many years has been an active member of the Industrial Workers of the World, and at the same time in touch with other revolutionary organizations. For years he has acted as an informant for law-and-order organizations, but now for the first time is making public, exclusively for Times readers, his knowledge of the inside of the elements that are working for an overturn of American institutions.]

I expect to see 25,000 I.W.W. in California by January 1, fresh from the wheat fields of the Middle West and ready to burn and rob their way to victory in the State that always has stood so strongly against them and other revolutionary organizations. As I have explained in previous articles, their chief object in coming is to break the criminal syndicalism laws here. First, they will try to organize the lumberjacks and others in the Northwest.

The treasury of "400" will be enriched by the drive here through addition of new members. California will be cut into three districts, for the I.W.W. operates in zones like an invading army. The first object will be to distribute propaganda from house to house, mill to mill and man to man—revolutionary appeals of all kinds. Then soap-boxers will start in to denounce the government of California and of the United States.

TO ORGANIZE WORKERS

Attempts will be made to organize all the workers of the State into I.W.W. groups. A few fires will be started and then, when some arrests are made, the wobblies will get rough and declare war on organized society in California.

Experience in other States should make clear what will happen. Some citizens will be afraid to leave and outsiders afraid to come into the State. If things get bad enough, they might try to set up a soviet on the Pacific Coast, offering an excellent opportunity for the Reds. Seattle already is called "Little Russia," and even some of the authorities there are friendly. (I am talking from experience.) If the Reds would follow me I could capture all the Pacific Coast States and set up an industrial commonwealth or a soviet—and hold it for a while at least. And if I could there are others that could.

ACTION NEEDED

That is the Reds' goal and it rests with the people out here if they want them. If they don't want them they had better wake up and the whole United States had better wake up. If I had my way the I.W.W. would entirely disappear. pear.

What is wanted now is action. I'd advise a few brick yards and county farms and the extension of our jails and the full use of our laws and a few men that know their business to handle the situation and then let 'em come.

(Zero in his article next Sunday will tell how the I. W. W.'s prey on themselves, and some inside scandal in the organization that never before has come out. This article is destined to have as many readers among wobblies as among people that oppose them.)

Sight Seeing Trips Are Part of the University's Social Life

Outings and hikes are being made a part of the social life of the summer session of the University of Southern California. Students registered from practically every State in the Union and representing eight different nationalities are "seeing Southern California" along with their academic studies.

Yesterday fifty students left for Catalina for the week-end. Prof. H. M. Miller, geologist, was a member of the party and gave informal talks.

Next Friday will be a busy day from the outing standpoint, for a party of students will go to Venice at 5 p.m. to see "The Night Life of the Beaches." Profs. Antony Blanks and W. La Porte will have charge of this group.

In the evening a party of 100 students will attend the "Pilgrimage Play" in Hollywood and a third group will go to Switzer's camp for the week-end. The musical department will give a matinee Friday afternoon.

Friday evening, August 4, will mark the last of the summer outings. A swimming party and supper will be enjoyed at Exposition Park. The same evening a large party will go to Mt. Wilson under the direction of Prof. Arthur W. Nye, where they will visit the observatory. A moonlight hike to Mt. Lowe for the week-end will complete the outings.

THE PRICE OF THINGS

The high cost of living is more than holding its own. According to the economical statistics gathered in the Bureau of Labor there was an average increase of a fraction over 1 per cent during the month of June in the items that go to make up the ordinary living expense of the home. Of course, this is not much of an increase, but it indicates that price-cutting has not been exercised to its full capacity. Salvation is still the freest thing we have.

MOTOR INN

Chicago has a ten-story hotel for autos located right down on Wabash avenue in the loop. It furnishes parking accommodations for more than two thousand cars and is so arranged that a driver can take his car around the spiral to the top floor in less than two minutes. There are also express elevators to handle patrons on their way to and from their cars. The enterprise is to be a money-maker from the start, according to all accounts. Something of the kind has been planned in Los Angeles. We already have a four-story garage, but no skyscraper rooming-house for Fords.

ON THE LINKS

Some odd things happened on the links before the American golf championship for the year was disposed of. One of the contestants made a rather difficult hole in a single stroke. The splendid drive trickled into the desired pocket before it stopped rolling. Of course, it was an accident, but it is one that occasionally happens—not often in a championship tournament, however. Another player's drive struck a tree, glanced off and went through the open door of the club's stables. The ball lodged between the heels of an irascible horse. Did the player try to lift it with his brassie? He did not. For all that he knows the ball is there to this day.

GLIMPSING THE FUTURE

Admiral Winfield Scott Benson told the business men of Los Angeles that the day would come when this would be the most important harbor in the world. Whether he would have the audacity to make this statement to a New York audience may not be known. It would not be tactful to do so. But that the gallant admiral believes his own declaration there is no doubt. Likewise he speaks with a great deal of authority because he is familiar with virtually all of the ports of the world and possesses an exceptionally clear concept of the future. He has certain facts to justify his declaration. Never in the history of the world has any port indicated the growth and progress shown at Los Angeles Harbor. If anything like this is maintained for fifty years the assertion will have long been established.

THE STUDENT VOTE

It does seem a pity that the mass of competence which the high-school student has assembled by the time of his graduation should remain inert and unavailable for the immediate settlement of our national problems. It is proposed to change all this. The head of the California Teachers' Association is crusading for the adoption of a law or constitutional amendment which shall instantly give the vote to the possessor of a high-school diploma. After the graduation exercises are over the proud possessors might all take their sheepskins down to the polls and vote them. At any rate, under the new regime the franchise would at once fall like a mantle upon the graduate. As it is now some dull and uncouth vassal from Slavonia may be voting right along, while an American youth, with the noodle of Daniel Webster and the prophetic vision of Isaiah, will have to tarry at Jericho until his beard be grown before he can cast his ballot for the salvation of his country.

LIFE AND DEATH

Los Angeles mamas did their duty rather handsomely by the State during the year ending July 1. They presented us with a new native-born citizen for every seventeen members of the population, being a 10 per cent increase over the previous year. All of which conforms very nicely with both the denunciation of birth-control and with the birth-controllers' claim that under their faith more and better babies are quite likely to result. Under either creed the "more and better babies" have it in Los Angeles this year.

Moreover, we are getting rather more sparing in the matter of the death rate—only 9259 for the year—which is one of the lowest death rates in comparison to population in the country. And this in spite of the reckless automobilist, the ubiquitous bandit and the "crimes passionel" which have adorned our records. Now if we can curb bootleg whisky, guns, poisoned candy, hammers and road hogs in their violent activities we may, with any luck, get the deaths down to one for every two births. At present we are only one and one-half babies to the good. But that is something in an age of jazz.

WILL HAYS, MOVIE KING

Los Angeles is preparing a great reception for Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers' and Distributors' Association.

This is eminently fitting and proper. His visit to Hollywood has a significance beyond that of a pleasant event in the life of a distinguished man.

Will Hays is a living evidence of the good faith and honesty of intention of the motion-picture industry. And the motion-picture industry means more to Los Angeles than to any other city in the world.

His selection as a sort of final arbiter and dictator of the cinema is an event without precedent in industrial history.

Not only does it indicate and prove an intention on the part of the motion picture to bring up that industry to the highest standard, but in choosing a man like Hays for that responsibility the producers have shown that they mean to carry it through. In other words, they have not been content merely to declare a standard; but they have placed the reins of power in the hands of one of the most efficient and determined men in public life without strings or conditions. They have not only established a standard, but they have insured the rigid adherence to that standard.

In honoring Mr. Hays the motion-picture industry has honored itself and silenced its critics. In his appointment the cinema people have done something fine and uplifting and without parallel.

As to Mr. Hays's own intentions and his ability to carry out his intentions there can be no shadow of a doubt. A man of the highest proven integrity and personal worth, he is a whirlwind of energy and efficiency.

As chairman of the National Republican Committee he rendered splendid service to his party and his country; and, on at least one notable occasion, displayed the highest qualities of moral courage and determination.

Dr. Harry B. Cox, an internationally known scientist, once summed up the personality of Will Hays, referring to him as "concentrated radium."

In a hide-bound, stuck-in-the-mud, governmental department he showed his ability to dig a marooned, water-logged craft out of the mud and make it get up speed like a racing motor boat. He left an extraordinary record for efficiency, sanity, good sense and energy in the postoffice. The motion-picture producers took him from the Cabinet because they wanted something done; they will get action.

The Times is of the opinion that there isn't very much wrong, anyhow; that the picture producers have, in the great majority of their activities, tried to keep their industry upon a high plane. It is a new business; it has grown like the bean stalk in the fairy story. Some things have happened that should not have happened. Pictures have been shown that never should have been made. In some instances people have connected themselves with the industry who were not an ornament to the same. But, as a general thing, the producers seem to have tried to raise the level of pictures.

They have a task before them that will require courage and determination and high ideals.

The installation of Mr. Hays as chief of the industry is an earnest of their good intent.

MOORE OF CALIFORNIA

Charles C. Moore is marching to victory. The current of public approval of his candidacy for the Republican nomination for United States Senator grows swifter, wider and deeper.

If there were any who held doubts as to his ability to defeat Senator Johnson, the Trinity Auditorium demonstration should remove further uncertainty. Never has a political candidate in so short a time received greater assurance of approval and none has elicited a more spontaneous response from a presentation of campaign issues and party principles.

Delivering a political speech in Los Angeles for the first time Friday night, appearing before a friendly but critical audience of the representative Republican men and women of the community and with a week behind him of strenuous campaigning through Southern California, Mr. Moore first astonished his auditors by his vigorous and confident personality and then won them enthusiastically to his cause by the candor and courage with which he discussed the Senatorial situation.

And Mr. Moore and those who agree with his interpretation of Republican principles can rest assured that the heavy reaction in his favor results not from sensational and insincere appeals to the passions and prejudices of the people, but from a loyal and disinterested effort to arouse intelligent considerations of the problem which California voters must solve at the polls.

Some professed at the outset of Mr. Moore's fight against Senator Johnson to see a forlorn attempt of political idealists to overthrow an invincible machine. And these would have been correct in their view of the situation if the people had not proved their complete independence of the machine; more, their energetic and concerted determination to upturn the machine.

The tables are turned and it is now the machine that fights on the defensive, and fights a losing fight. Senator Johnson, who announced a few weeks ago that he would not come to California this summer, now hastens to the Coast. His henchmen scurry here and there about the State conferring and planning and shouting for help.

Mr. Moore came to Southern California with a straightforward and a constructive platform; he met hundreds and talked to thousands; he won this end of the State to his cause and within a few days he will proceed northward carrying the message of sane Republicanism, real Americanism and a promise of faithful, capable, unselfish service to California and to the nation.

Success goes with him.

HOLDING OUR OWN

Southern California, under the leadership of Los Angeles, is rapidly achieving a state of financial independence. Very soon, now, she will be able to hold her wealth within her own borders to grow and multiply without even fractional loss through tribute to the money marts and centers of the world.

Always a producer of natural wealth, Southern California, during a period of intense development of the past two decades, has broadcast her riches by selling her securities at large in order to finance her many enterprises. Just now she is holding most of her own and is looking to a fast-approaching future when she will not only hold all her own, but ask for more in her willingness to aid her neighbors.

A few years ago—say, even two or three—and any bond issue based upon Southern California wealth and enterprise traveled the beaten track of the debtor community. Some large eastern investment house or group of capitalists would take over the issue and either absorb it or parcel it out over the country. Maybe a small quota would come back to Los Angeles as an offering to a limited number of local investors.

A few days ago the stockholders of a large Southern California corporation ratified a new $10,000,000 bond issue. Three out of the five underwriters selected for the issue were Pacific Coast investment banking houses and these houses placed with California investors over 60 per cent of the total issue.

Ten million dollars is quite a chunk of ready money in a community where the dollars are kept as busy as they are in Southern California, but the entire issue could readily have been absorbed right here at home and smaller issues of from $1,000,000 to $5,000,000 are now snapped up with avidity.

Testimony that California investors are ready and able to keep our wealth in the family comes from John E. Barber, vice-president of the First National Bank, who says:

> Too few of our corporation executives realize the resources of the California investment market. They still feel it necessary first to approach eastern underwriters when any considerable piece of financing is to be undertaken.
> The practical result of such a policy is to restrict the profitable development of our own investment banking and to deny California investors the full amount of local securities they would gladly absorb.
> The advantage to any corporation serving the public of a wide distribution of its securities throughout the territory it serves has been clearly demonstrated by our leading public utilities in their campaigns to sell stock to the public. The same advantages obtain in the sale of bonds.

It is doubtful if history can furnish a parallel to the establishment of such a thriving and rich investment market as Los Angeles holds today coincident with a period of prodigious growth and development. It virtually establishes the city as the dominant investment mart and money center for the entire Southwest, always ready to serve and capable of handling investment and development problems of an empire of natural wealth.

INCITING LAWLESSNESS

American people resent any insidious campaign to promote disregard for American laws in American cities. More particularly when that campaign is carried on by aliens in a foreign quarrel.

An especially outrageous example of this underhand tampering with the loyalty of American citizens to constituted authority is to be found in the following paragraph from a Sinn Fein-labor paper published in New York City:

> Every country and hybrid state born of the League of Nations could recruit a foreign legion in the United States, and they did. But it is illegal and unlawful to aid the Irish republic. Yet there is no law forbidding a United States veteran to take a three months' holiday in Ireland. Anyone experienced in explosives, or quarry work, is needed to open up new quarries and industries. Wireless operators and men skilled in antiaircraft guns, also aviators, could have a good vacation in Ireland. Think it over and act. The republic is calling now.

No attempt to direct a rebellion in Ireland from headquarters in the United States will be tolerated by the people of this country. President Johnson's action against the Fenians in 1866 and President Grant's in 1870 effectually disposed of this matter.

De Valera and his rebel chieftains should study American history if they expect to arrive at a true understanding of the temper of the American people. Propaganda by innuendo has no place in a country that believes in straight thinking and direct action.

The Irish Free State has the sanction of the voters of Ireland and in the eyes of our people is now a friendly nation. No more loyal body of men has ever existed than the American Legion. Where the Fenians failed to violate American sovereignty in their fight against England, De Valera is hardly likely to succeed in a quarrel with his own countrymen.

TWO MINUTES OF OPTIMISM

Charlie Schwab on Clock-Watching

"The great pity of clock-watching," says Charlie Schwab, "is first its positive effect upon the man who is guilty of it, its tendency to make him skimp his work, do it in a disinterested and therefore slovenly and slipshod way. Secondly, there is its negative effect—the fact that the clock-watcher never stands out conspicuously, unless as an undesirable. The man who is so absorbed in his job that he has no eyes or ears for the clock or its ticks is often put in the way of opportunities that the clock-watcher is always denied. Which puts me in mind of an incident which is probably repeated constantly in thousands of offices and factories in our country.

"Perhaps the greatest builder of men the steel business has ever known was Capt. Bill Jones, who had charge of the Braddock plant for Mr. Carnegie. One day a call came for a specially capable young man to handle an important piece of engineering at Scotia. Capt. Bill knew men. He picked high-grade assistants with marvelous surety.

"'Which one of your draughtsmen shall we send up to Scotia?' he asked the superintendent.

"'Why, any one of them will fill the bill,' answered the superintendent.

"'But there must be one more capable than the others,' commented Capt. Bill; 'who is he?'

"'I don't know,' said the superintendent, shaking his head; 'they're all busy, hustling youngsters.'

"Capt. Bill thought awhile and then said:

"'Tell them to stick on the job till 7 o'clock; I'll pick out the Scotia chief for you.'

"The order was a surprise. It was the slack season when the draughtsmen were not pressed to get through their work in regular hours. But they all kept on cheerfully.

"As 7 o'clock drew near Capt. Bill noticed that the men kept looking up to see how much more time they had to put in. All except one! Over in the corner a young man was so absorbed that he seemed to have forgotten there was a clock in the room. When the hour finally came the others hustled for their hats and coats. This chap was still bending over his desk. He was the man whom Capt. Bill sent up to Scotia and he became one of their greatest engineers."

RIPPLING RHYMES

RADIO

From out the air around me I hear strange voices come; such miracles confound me and I am stricken dumb. Some orator is spieling, a thousand miles away, and in my humble shelling I plainly hear him bray. Some gifted modern Dante recites an ode in Maine, and in my western shanty I hear his noble strain. Some world-famed singer's yelling afar in Boston town, and in my mortgaged dwelling the stove-pipes tumble down. No swaying wires are bringing these wondrous sounds to hand, the speaking and the singing, the crashing of the band. Along the waves of ether Dame Science sends her breath, old legends crushed beneath her, traditions done to death. The scoffers once were tireless, they used to sigh and swear when people talked of "wireless," of messages by air. And I with them was scoffing and wore a jeering grin; but now my lid I'm doffing to science and her kin. I see the airships sailing along the heavens blue, I hear strange dirges wailing from Crete and Timbuctoo; each day some thing of wonder is hatched beneath the sun; I ask you who in thunder will say things can't be done?

THE LANCER

One can discover exactly what is wrong with the world for $3.50. His publishers assure me in an impressive pamphlet that John D. Works of Los Angeles has not only devoted his life to studying this question, but has remedies for all of them. They assure us that Mr. Works deals with the question frankly and unreservedly—marital relations, divorces, the bringing up of children, birth suppression, degrading tendencies, club life, women in clubs, business and politics, high living, the idle and profligate rich, bath-houses, dance halls, indelicate female dress, automobiles, society, evil and degenerate habits, inordinate love of money—in fact, all the jolly, attractive subjects that we love to read about, all the sins we so deplore in other people, all the really naughty subjects that it is only nice to deal with in an investigating spirit.

I haven't read the book, but I must. "Having pondered deeply, he is able to prescribe the remedies," says this pamphlet, and "It lays bare the very soul of society"—and there is no doubt about it "laying bare" is a solemn and grimly pleasant duty these days in which all of us should co-operate. But my "inordinate love of money" inspires me to wish I could get "What is Wrong with the World" for a dime. At $3.50 it is so liable to become a best seller merely among the "idle and profligate rich." But, then, again, $3.50 is dirt cheap for the remedies.

I see King George, wishing to "honor" American women, has issued orders that a number of American women shall be presented at court who would not otherwise be eligible under the present regulations.

We must remember, you know, that it really is intended to be an honor—and this new edict direct from His Majesty must be taken as evidence of Col. Harvey's notable diplomatic achievements. What more could an Ambassador do for his country?

It will be utterly wretched if we never know whether William C. Camp of Beverly Hills courted Mrs. Katherine Gordon Thorne, wealthy Chicago widow, or whether the lady chased Mr. Camp. This is such a vital modern issue and one which is disturbing a good deal of masculine equanimity.

Tradition has given to men the sole right of the chase and that Woman's party complete equality of the sexes measure has not been passed yet. But every so often some disturbing case of this kind crops up to confuse the issue. It is, of course, a moot point as to whether it is nobler to be the chaser or the chasee, the suppliant or the conceder. We have rather regarded chasing as a precious prerogative of the male, yet lots of fellows get quite a brag out of being chased, and if Billy Camp can prove his contention that he was, it is likely to be worth $350,000 to him. But will the lady get her $350,000 worth of usurped prerogative.

It seems to be a case for James Oppenheim and his Hidden Powers. Was Billy Camp or Mrs. Thorne exercising hidden powers—and er—how much is it going to cost the winner?

So now Senator Henry Lee Myers of Montana feels that a Senatorial investigation of Hollywood is highly desirable—financed by the government. They should positively discover first-hand whether it is as bad as it is painted—and he feels sure it is.

But, Senator, dear, our worthy Congressional representatives can perform so much greater a service by investigating the good white spots and learning exactly how it is done. And think what a sinful waste of public money, to say nothing of the embarrassment of the Senatorial investigating committee, if Hollywood should be behaving with utter decorum when they arrive. And Hollywood is quite liable to do just that. It often does.

PASS THE SHIP SUBSIDY BILL

BY F. W. BELYEA,
District Director United States Shipping Board

The time has arrived when the American merchant marine should again be permanently placed upon its feet by Congress. The commendable recommendations recently made by President Harding should be backed up by Congress.

The ship subsidy bill now being considered by Congress, if enacted into law and placed upon the statute books, will aid very materially the whole United States, the Pacific Coast in particular. The ratification of the four-power treaty pact will be one of the big outstanding factors in the future development of our foreign commerce and should also act as a great impetus in the development of the Pacific.

An American merchant marine would very materially help to stabilize market conditions. Furthermore, it would seem that if capital, labor, industries and our railway systems are to be kept well employed an outlet must be found to absorb our surplus wares.

A ship subsidy will help to accomplish all these things and would also enable our merchants and manufacturers to successfully compete in the foreign markets of the world, open up new avenues for expansion of our banking business and in innumerable other ways greatly benefit the country as a whole.

A ship subsidy is not only essential, but imperative, as, under the terms of the naval limitation treaty, the United States Navy would be practically powerless without the support of an adequate commercial fleet in times of emergency. Foreign commercial ships, it is well known, have received government aid for many years in various forms and prior to the enactment of the Sherman law it was a well-known fact that American capital partly financed British shipping through the medium and manipulation of the deferred rebate system.

California, Los Angeles especially, would be greatly benefited by the passage of a ship subsidy bill, as privately owned and operated American steamship lines would be permanently established to cover all the trade routes on the Pacific, which would be an additional incentive to those interests that contemplate establishing their plants on the Pacific Coast.

It is the earnest desire of those who are engaged in the shipping business and affiliated lines that the Congress pass without delay suitable legislation which should prove of great value to the nation for many years to come.

PRACTICAL RELIGION

Let us make no mistake. Religion is not a matter merely of "feeling good," even in the presence of nature. We want to get all the mustiness out of our temples and out of our hearts and out of our worship. Our God is the great God of out-of-doors. But let us not forget, even in summertime, that He is a God of love and grace, assigning to His children tasks and responsibilities as well as joys and privileges. We are neither seclusionists nor Sabbatarians. It was Jesus who said, "The Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath." He brought religion into the open and revealed uncloistered ways for men. But he gave men primarily a gospel of grace and not a gospel of nature. The redemption of the world depends on a holier communion than that of hikes and golf courses and automobile parties. In seeking and worshiping God out-of-doors let us not forget our obligations to God's children and the institutions that exist for their service, chief of which is the church.—[Congregationalist.

A WELCOME REBUKE

Relations and friends do not always accept well-meant and loving effort in their behalf. But time often proves that those who did not care enough to attempt to induce you toward right activity did not care for you at all. One day a young woman broke out and scolded an older one in rebuke for a careless act. The older woman burst into tears. Immediately contrite, the younger one begged forgiveness. "I am not hurt. I am so grateful that you cared enough to scold me. It has been years and years since anyone did that for me."—[Mrs. Tom Thompson in the Howard (Kan.) Courant.

HISTORY STILL REPEATING

Thirty years ago eleven steel workers and nine private detectives were killed in a ten-hour battle at the Carnegie Steel Mills at Homestead, Pa. Also thirty years ago scores were injured and two killed in Irish riots. A mob of Parnellites attacked a group of "antis" returning from a meeting, while in Dublin priests were clubbed and stoned. Not only does history repeat itself, but at times it becomes a little worse with each repetition.—[Capper's Weekly.

THIS IS THE DAY

U. S. Grant died at Mt. McGregor, near Saratoga, N. Y., in the year 1885. Grant's declining years were darkened by financial losses which almost swept away the quite moderate fortune he possessed when he retired from office. The failure of a New York banking firm left him practically penniless. He at once took up writing for magazines and preparing his "Memoirs."

He died at a sanatorium of cancer of the tongue and was buried at Claremont on the banks of the Hudson, where an imposing mausoleum has been erected to his memory.

SEEK DISMISSAL OF SUIT

In Judge Bledsoe's court tomorrow the motion of a number of the defendants in the action brought by S. H. Mitchell against Gov. Stephens and others to dismiss the bill of complaint which charges a deliberate violation of the State Constitution that caused a loss of $222,-160.50 in State highway funds will be up for argument.

In addition to Gov. Stephens, the motion is in behalf of the following defendants: N. D. Darlington, Charles A. Whitmore and F. W. Hatch of the State Highway Commission; Marshall De Motte, Clyde L. Seavey and H. Stanley Benedict, formerly members of the State Board of Control, and Atty.-Gen. U. S. Webb. The bill of complaint against the various bonding companies has been dismissed by order of Judge Bledsoe.

The defendants assert that the suit does not state a sufficient cause for action, that the Federal court has no jurisdiction, that it is defective in that it fails to mention State Treasurer Richardson and his bondsmen as defendants; that the action is barred by the statute of limitation and that it also is barred by Subdivision 1, Section 3399 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

rather than a Republican Senatorial incumbent seeking re-election.

Moore is not only a new personality, but is a new type in California politics—and the professional politicians behind Johnson are bemused. They can't understand him and, from their viewpoint, his procedure is all wrong. They can't understand his fairness in dealing with the political record of Hiram Johnson; they simply gasp at his refusal to indulge in oratorical orgies; they are bewildered by the unsensational manner in which Moore states his position and principles.

There is only one outstanding fact that prevents the professional political workers from classifying Moore as a failure, politically. A that fact centers on his increasing strength with the people who cast the votes. When a candidate does about everything a professional wouldn't think of doing—and wins enthusiastic support by it—the professional is somewhat at a loss to account for it.

Altogether, this campaign isn't going according to the professional politician's Hoyle. All the time it is looking less and less like Johnson and more and more like Moore.

Candidate Moore has made a genuine triumphal march through Southern California. He began with an enthusiastic reception at Long Beach and has been received in other southern communities in highly gratifying fashion. His appearance in Los Angeles as a candidate Friday night was a further revelation of his increasing strength.

A steady chorus of "We Want Richardson" is going up throughout the State from more than 300 newspapers and the effect is beginning to be felt. The loss of the so-called "small-town newspaper" in California is one of the greatest blows encountered by the Stephens machine.

One of the influential papers whose slogan is "Richardson-for-Governor" is the San Jose Mercury-Herald, which has this to say about the State Treasurer:

"Richardson is a practicalist, which means he is a sensible business man. If anyone expects from him visions of impossible and conjectural achievement that one will be disappointed. Mentally, he is precisely what he is physically—broad and rugged, clear thinking and logical, with the practical resolves of a natural leader about to execute a great constructive program for a great growing commonwealth."

Under present Police Court administration a prisoner is practically penalized if he asks for a jury trial, according to James Hosick, police judge candidate, who has announced that in the event of his election he intends to establish a reform in this matter. "At present a man brought into the Police Court has his bail fixed at $50," Hosick said. "But if he asks for a jury the bail is raised to $250. That is practically penalizing him for asking for a constitutional right. Since the people maintain juries through taxes, it is unjust to demand a jury price from a prisoner. Setting this wrong right would also improve jail conditions by eliminating, to a great extent, the overcrowding, too often due to raised bails for jury trials."

Interest in the race for Superior Court judgeships was accentuated this week through the unexpected announcement by William C. Doran, for four years Chief Deputy District Attorney, of his candidacy. His supporters point to the remarkable success with which his nominating petitions were circulated as an indication of his strength. More than 5000 signatures were obtained by his friends in four days.

Mr. Doran has been in the District Attorney's office as a deputy for twelve years, and has taken a leading part in many of the most important criminal cases during that time. He has had charge of the investigation of the Ku Klux Klan and its activities in Los Angeles county, from its inception. As the result of its inquiry, the grand jury recently indicted thirty-seven alleged members of the Klan, in connection with the Inglewood raid.

By reason of his experience, Mr. Doran, in the opinion of his friends, is especially well equipped to serve as a judge, and particularly at this time, when so many crimes of unusual boldness and brutality are before the courts. Mr. Doran is a Mason, being a Knight Templar and a member of Al Malaikah Temple of the Shrine. He also is active in the Elks' Lodge.

Budding publicity departments, campaign headquarters, committees galore, managers and "workers" are to be found on every hand. The press agent has come into his own. Here is a campaign statement from the Jones-for Governor headquarters:

"The campaign to place Mattison B. Jones as Democratic nominee for Governor of California has begun in real earnest. His papers were filed in Sacramento on Wednesday and showed a splendid response from every district. Headquarters for Los Angeles and Southern California have been opened at 721 Merchants National Bank Building and for Northern California at the Hotel Witcomb, in San Francisco.

"Mr. Jones spoke on Tuesday evening at the Business and Professional Club of Glendale and addressed the Kiwanis Club of Glendale on Friday at noon. He is scheduled to speak at the Woman's City Club of Los Angeles August 7, when he will discuss his views of lower taxation for the State of California."

The Traeger-for-Sheriff publicity department functions as follows: "Men who are doing big things in the oil development of Los Angeles county are actively sponsoring the campaign of "Bill" Traeger for election as Sheriff. One of the noted men in the oil industry is A. J. Wallace, former Lieutenant-Governor of California, and now president of the Transport Oil Company, with offices in the Union Oil Building. Said Mr. Wallace:

"The people of Los are going to elect 'Bill' Traeger Sheriff. The voters know a good thing when they see it and we have never had a better Sheriff. In character, education and physical proportions and strict attention to business he is as nearly ideal a Sheriff as we are ever likely to get."

Headquarters for the Victor E. Shaw Independent Committee, working for the re-election of Judge Shaw to the District Court of Appeal, have been opened at 439 I. W. Hellman Building. Judge E. W. Britt is chairman of the committee, with J. J. Petermichel as secretary.

A series of weekly luncheons will be held under auspices of the committee, and for next Tuesday the following representatives of the automobile industry have been invited as special guests: Frank Howard, Leo V. Starr, Paul C. Hoffman, Dave Smith, George E. Farrand, and Carl Rosenberg.

Ruben S. Schmidt, one of the well-known Los Angeles attorneys, and a close contestant for the superior bench in the election two years ago, is a candidate for superior judge.

Mr. Schmidt, at the request of many of the incumbent judges and practicing attorneys, has sat as judge pro tempore in some forty or fifty cases in the last eighteen months.

In the special bar poll taken last fall at the instigation of Gov. Stephens prior to the selection of three appointees to newly created Superior Court judgeships, Attorney Schmidt stood third in the city list with a vote of 873.

Superior Judge Summerfield, who is a candidate for re-election, has received, among other indorsements, the active support of twenty-two prominent attorneys of Long Beach. In addressing the judge in commendatory terms the beach attorneys assured him that he might call upon each and all of them at any time to do whatever they might do to aid his candidacy.

Volunteer workers obtained nearly 5000 names to the petition of Superior Judge Houser for nomination to the Court of Appeals. E. Neal Ames, Judge Houser's campaign manager, is conducting an energetic campaign for the judge.

Mrs. Dora A. Stearns, candidate for the Assembly in the Seventy-second District, is making an energetic campaign, assisted by an organization committee of prominent women, among them Dr. Mae Parsons, chairman; Mrs. J. J. Abrahamson, assistant chairman; Mrs. Homer J. Castellaw, secretary, and Mrs. John S. Myers, chairman of finance.

Arrangements for broadcasting the addresses to be made by Friend Richardson, candidate for Governor of California, and Charles C. Moore, candidate for United States Senator, who will speak in Los Angeles on the night of August 17, are being made by the National Convention Committee of the Spanish-American War Veterans.

Thursday evening, August 17, will be candidates' night at the coming convention of the Spanish-American War Veterans, and Mr. Richardson and Mr. Moore will speak to the large audience assembled on top of the Arnold Building, Seventh and Figueroa streets. Other speakers of note will be secured for the occasion.

The convention committee yesterday announced that amateur radio-makers, who are to contest for prizes to be given at the radio show, August 14 to August 20, may make their entries now at headquarters, 536 Mason Building.

Rev. J. H. Wilson, former presiding elder of the African Methodist Church, is president of Johnson-for-Senator Club which, despite its name, has indorsed the following candidates in addition to The Senator: for Congress in the Tenth District, Henry Z. Osborne; for Governor, Friend W. Richardson; for Lieutenant-Governor, State Senator Joseph A. Rominger; for Assembly, Seventy-fourth District, F. M. Roberts; for Judges of the Superior Court: Incumbent Judges Summerfield, Hahn, McLucas, Wood, and Toland, and W. C. Doran, Chief Deputy District Attorney.

The Ninth Congressional District, which has already registered itself as more or less solid for the re-election of Congressman Lineberger, is being blanketed by a publication published in Indianapolis and carrying an inspired article urging the election of Randall. This significant assurance is carried by the Indianapolis four-sheeter: "Anyone who is receiving this paper for the first time, or who receives it for a brief or long period, who has not himself subscribed, may be assured that someone is paying for the paper for him."

Question: Who is paying for the paper?

The campaign committee organized to further the candidacy of Judge Frank H. Kerrigan for one of the two long terms now expiring in the Supreme Court issues the following statement: "Judge Kerrigan's candidacy has already obtained the approval of a large number of the California Bar as well as a number of prominent citizens in the various walks of life in the State. Judge Kerrigan is splendidly qualified for the important position with a brilliant record as a jurist, the last sixteen years of which he has served as Associate Justice of the District Court of Appeal. In this department of the Appellate Court he has inaugurated reforms of procedure that have attracted nationwide attention and have met with

Own a Corona Typewriter

Increase your output and income

CORONATYPING is the modern way of writing. It is easy and swift. Even a six-year-old can quickly learn to write with this simplest of all typewriters.

Coronatyping is legible, and neat and business-like, which is more than may be said of most handwriting. Nor does it tire you, even if you have a great deal of writing to do.

Another important advantage—you can keep an accurate carbon copy of every letter you send out. This alone makes it worth your while to own a Corona.

As an investment, Corona will pay for itself over and over again—by increasing your working capacity, by helping you to think straighter, write better English—and most of all by making your letters or manuscripts so neat and legible that they will make the right impression on those who receive them.

The sturdiest typewriter that is built today

When you buy a Corona you get a tried and proven typewriter that has been on the market so long that all its weaknesses have been discovered and corrected.

You buy a typewriter that, while dainty enough to grace Milady's writing desk, is nevertheless the sturdiest writing machine made—the standard portable of nearly every army in the world and the only one that has stood the test of over ten years continual use.

What you can do with a Corona Typewriter

Do you think you have no use for a Corona? Just glance over the following list of ordinary uses, and count up the number of times you could have used a Corona this very week.

In Corona you have a machine that embodies all the little conveniences that make for easier and better writing. You have a keyboard that contains 84 characters on only three rows of keys—no unnecessary keys to confuse the beginner or retard speed of operation.

You have a line spacer; a platen release that permits of variable spacing; a paper release for inserting or straightening paper; a carriage release; adjustable margin stops; adjustable paper fingers; reversible, two-color ribbon; back spacer; line lock and release; shift lock; [illegible] throw-out and extension paper table.

Corona is a visible writing machine. All typewriters now-a-days are called "visible writing," but in some only part of what you have written is visible; in others nothing is really visible unless you crane your neck over some obstruction. With Corona every word you have written is right up in front of you—in plain sight all the time.

Corona weighs but 6½ lbs. Folded in its neat case, you can take it with you 'round the world.

Special keyboards for special needs

Your Corona can be equipped to write any language you wish, without extra charge.

Or if you happen to be a chemist, a physician, a druggist, a mathematician, an engineer, we can supply a keyboard with the special symbols which you need.

Then too, you may have your choice of different kinds and sizes of type, from the dainty elite type that is so well adapted for social correspondence, to the plain gothic type or the extra large roman type required for some purposes.

For only $2 down you can buy a new Corona typewriter

Think of it—for less than the cost of a few letters dictated to a public stenographer, you can secure a brand new Corona which you can use for a whole month before the second payment is due. Then you give us only $[illegible] monthly until you have paid $[illegible] in all—half the price of the ordinary old fashioned typewriter. The cash price is $[illegible].

THE GULF STREAM AN "OLD RELIABLE"

It is hard to be steady, consistent and unswerving in spite of contrary forces, and still to gain the reputation of an erratic wanderer. Yet this is just what has happened to the gulf stream. Indeed, its character was getting so maligned that the government of the United States found it necessary to vindicate this current of the ocean.

Much has been said of late years of the changing route of the stream. The government experts declare that there is no change in the course, nor has there been for many years.

No other physical feature of the ocean is subject to more persistent misrepresentation than is the gulf stream. It is a pet theory of many that the temperature of Europe is greatly affected by it, but this effect is not as extensive as is commonly supposed. Practically starting at the Florida straits, where its volume is made up by the union of currents, it ceases to be a true current by the time it reaches the Grand Banks, where it becomes surface drift, governed by the winds.—[Kansas City Star.

In a very short time a radio receiver will be installed at Beetle Rock, Giant Forest, and every evening music and news of the world will be picked up and spectators entertained. The outfit will be of sufficient sensitiveness that the best near-by broadcast stations will be heard.

The Sigma Nu Chapter of Los Angeles, comprised of alumni members of the Sigma Nu college fraternity, will hold a picnic today at Wanda Park, at the head of Benedict Canyon, Beverly Hills. Among the numerous entertainments expected to take place will be that furnished by a radiophone receiver. The picnic party will meet about 11 a.m.

"Over my sewing basket receiving set," says Florence C. Rogers, assistant editor of Radio Journal, "the open-air transmission from The Times roof comes in clear and true, while the indoor transmission loses some of this clearness. The latter is clouded and has the same quality as if one were singing in a tube. The notes of the piano also come in more faithfully and with less 'tinniness' than from the broadcast room."

It is unlawful to operate a transmitting station after the license has expired unless application for renewal has been properly made.

Every good amateur operator keeps a log of his station.

Many people believe an antenna will attract lightning. Such, it has been pointed out, is not the case. Aerials—or most of them—merely act as good conductors for the heavy current to reach ground. An antenna, if it is properly fitted with a protective ground switch, is a splendid protection for a building. This switch should be of the double-throw knife type, having a break distance of at least four inches and a blade not less than one-eighth inch by one-half inch. It should be mounted so that its current-carrying parts will be at least five inches clear of the building wall.

GOLDIE LOCKS SEEKS ADVENTURE WITH PUP

Dressed in a freshly-ironed romper suit and her golden curls arranged just so, 2-year-old Francis Lahey, of 511 53rd street, Brooklyn, was told by her mother at 11 o'clock yesterday morning that she and her poodle, Tessie, might play in the front yard. Frances decided the morning was just right for a walk. In a few minutes golden curls and poodle were gone.

At noon Mrs. Lahey called unavailingly for Frances, then notified the police. A city-wide alarm was sent.

Frances and Tessie skipped about the neighborhood and about 4 p.m. arrived at a candy store at Fifth avenue and 43rd street, Brooklyn, as did Patrolman Corbett, one of the searchers.

"What's your name and where are you bound?" asked the patrolman.

"I's Francie and we's just going by-by," lisped Frances.

Corbett took the wanderers to the Fourth-avenue Police station, where Frances, from a chair in the back room, soon was entertaining the reserve police with her experiences on the curtailed trip. Tessie stood guard and snarled at any bluecoat who attempted to pat Frances's curls. Six o'clock brought Brother Tom, who took the adventurers home.

"Weren't you scared when you got lost?" asked Brother Tom.

"No, we had a fine time," said Frances, "but I's hungry now."—[New York World.

PROTEST RADIO SCHEDULES

Public Expresses Itself as Against Rulings of Committee; Local Broadcast History Told

BY JOHN S. DAGGETT

Constructive criticisms and suggestions regarding the local radio broadcast situation are coming to The Times Radio Department in every mail. The new "on the air" schedule, effective August 1, for the fifteen broadcast stations in the Los Angeles territory is not popular either with the public or with the majority of the broadcasters. Time allotments do not accord with the procedure followed by similar organizations throughout the East, and are not in sympathy with the policies followed at Washington in the division of hours where two or more stations in the same locality lay claim to those hours most desirable for broadcast purposes.

In other cities where two or more stations desire evening hours the government has recommended that these stations settle their difficulties by rotating in such a way that each station will be given an opportunity to present programs under favorable circumstances.

This discussion of the situation is being given on an entirely impersonal basis, and, it is believed, from the best viewpoint of public interest and the interests of radio. Radio history is being made in Los Angeles. Facts concerning its beginnings are far better written now than later, and a brief summary of radio local history to date is therefore presented.

Two stations pioneered the field, presenting programs almost entirely made up of phonograph records. The Times then announced its intention to establish a radio station, and entered into an agreement with C. R. Kierulff & Co. for the installation and operation of that station.

CLUB 6000 STRONG

Concurrent with this announcement The Times Radio Club was organized, its membership passing the 6000 mark in less than two months.

Other newspapers and corporations very soon followed with plans for the establishment of broadcast stations, and enthusiasm in the new art increased with a rapidity perhaps never duplicated in any section of the United States. The policy of The Times in presenting high-class artists set a standard with which the public is fully conversant.

When the number of stations had increased to a point where time allotments became a problem, the Southern California Broadcasters' Association was organized for the purpose of handling the situation locally, rather than have the time allotments made by the government.

Maj. J. F. Dillon, radio inspector of the sixth district, and with headquarters in San Francisco, attended the meeting of this association held at the Jonathan Club June 16. By unanimous vote all stations were rated on a percentage basis—programs to count 50 per cent, audibility, 30 per cent, and modulation, 20 per cent. KHJ, The Times' station, was rated at 100 per cent by unanimous vote. Maj. Dillon voiced his hearty approval of all proceedings.

KFI, the Examiner-Anthony station, dropped from class A into class B. KWH, the Examiner station, received fourth place in the rating, and KOG, the Herald (Hearst-controlled station) was so far down the list that it had to select time on the air from the remnant hours.

Immediately the Examiner-controlled stations formed a combination to defeat the provisions of the meeting of June 16.

"We must have some by-laws," was the excuse given for demanding an immediate special meeting of the association, and the movement became a "steamroller proposition."

TIME ALLOTMENT

In a letter to the association, Maj. Dillon stated that unless the local broadcasters could get together it would be necessary to cancel all licenses and reissue them with an arbitrary allotment of time by the government.

At the next meeting the "Hearst combination" endeavored to put over by-laws providing for the establishment of a classification committee, authorizing tests to be made on a basis of 70 per cent for distant audibility, 15 per cent for quality of program, and 15 per cent for quality of modulation. The opposition succeeded in reducing the percentage rating of distant audibility to 50 per cent, and in raising the quality of program to a percentage of 30 per cent, the remaining 20 per cent to be counted for modulation.

The meeting lasted until 2 a.m., and plainly exemplified the dissatisfaction caused by these by-laws, one clause of which provided that there could be no amendment to the by-laws except on six months' written notice and requiring three-fourths majority of all membership. This provision was temporized to require a thirty-day notice, and two-thirds majority.

Another provision of the bylaws is that the time allotments shall remain in effect indefinitely, except in the event that a broadcaster makes formal claim for a rerating of his station, on the ground that it has been improved to a degree where it should be given a higher rating.

It was pointed out at the meeting that this provision will mean continual testing, dissatisfaction and heavy expense.

As all schedule changes were to become effective on the first of each month, following any decision by the association at meetings which must be held ten days prior to the first of a month, the classification committee was rushed into the field to make its tests.

RANGE VS. MODULATION

The committee did its work with conscientious fairness, but the results of its testing showed conclusively that the stations merely entered a competitive race, in an effort to secure the widest range of audibility by overloading their vacuum tubes, at the expense of modulation. The test did not show what these stations had been giving to the public, or what these stations are now giving to the public.

The tests were not made on regular programs, and for four days the radio schedules were badly interrupted. Programs which had been arranged for days in advance, were cancelled practically without notice. A minister was ordered to discontinue his sacred service on a Sunday morning, and the public was subjected to inexcusable interference; insulting remarks passed from one station to another, and if it listened at all, heard on the air prior to 6:00 p.m. a jargon of phonograph records and uninteresting reading matter, read merely for the purpose of allowing the speaking voice to be heard.

Here is the result:

KWH and KFI, Examiner-controlled stations, and KHJ, The Times, are to monopolize all hours from 5:30 p.m. to 9 p.m. every day in the week, Sundays included. Such stations as Hamburger's, Bullock's, the Bible Institute, the California Theater, Barker Brothers, and the City Dye Works, are entirely deprived of any hearing except periods prior to 5:30 p.m.

PUBLIC TO DECIDE

The public is the final court of appeal, and it is because of the desire of The Times to foster fair play, and work for the best interests of the public that this article has been written.

There is no statement made herein that has not been made before the Southern California Broadcasters' Association.

Constructive criticism and viewpoints are invited, bearing on this situation. The Times desires to know how the public feels regarding radiotelephony broadcast, for The Times believes that properly controlled radio will prove of inestimable benefit to the communities of Southern California from an educational and entertainment standpoint.

WINS PRIVILEGES AT PLAYGROUNDS

Marjorie Pirie

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SANTA MONICA, July 22.—Heretofore it has always been the grown-ups who have championed the cause of the children. But times are changing. Take 10-year-old Marjorie Pirie of 633 California avenue, Santa Monica, for instance.

Miss Marjorie likes playgrounds, and in playgrounds she likes to play croquet, to swing and to slide. Also she knows that other children of her own age like the same things.

Several days ago the eyes of Commissioner of Public Works W. H. Carter bulged when he received the following communication written in a childish scrawl:

"I'm going to ask you to make the tennis court and croquet grounds ordinance so that children of 10 years can be allowed to use the things and ask the men who have charge of the things to leave them down there in the horseshoe box so little boys and girls may use them when they want to play.

"Respectfully yours,
"MARJORIE PIRIE,
"Aged 10 years."

Commissioner Carter replied:

"I am in receipt of your letter and wish you would come to my office when convenient, as I would like to talk to you in regard to the matter which you mentioned in your letter."

So little Miss Pirie called on Mr. Carter. She was alone. With a cheery smile, she climbed upon the commissioner's knee, and with her arm around his neck, repeated her demands. Before she left she had Mr. Carter's promise that her demands would be met.

FRENCH MENACED

Paris "Figaro" Pictures Plight Due to Lessening Population

"In France the problem of population and the crisis of the race dominate all other perils," says a recent article in the Paris Figaro. To convince other nations of that country's shrinking population and diminishing vitality, the following statistics are furnished:

"Since 1863, a record year in births—1,012,000—we have continued to diminish. As a result of the nuptual abundance of 1920-1921, a slight excess of births over deaths was produced. It will not last. In France, which lost 3,000,000 men since 1914, there was an increase in population in 1921 of 140,000, compared with 590,000 in England for the same year and 720,000 in Germany. The Germans are eagerly proceeding to repopulate their country. What sentiments are animating the French, born upon a fertile area, larger than that of the German Empire, whose tillable soil requires the services of 55,000,000 inhabitants?

"If the European birth rates continue in their present ratios, France will have in twenty years 35,000,000 or 36,000,000 inhabitants with a majority of old people; Germany will have 75,000,000 with a majority of young men and women. What will happen, with the Reich congested by lack of room, and empty spaces in France next door? We must use our wits and our strength to protect ourselves.

"The causes of this voluntary suicide are essentially moral; they betray an obvious impairment of mentality and post-natal care of mothers and infants must play a part. A plan of defense must forthwith be devised."

Violin lessons at 8 cents each are available to the pupils of one London school.

IRRIGATION WILL BE DISCUSSED

"Times" Farm and Tractor Section to Take Up Problem Sunday

Since water is the life of the Southwest's basic industry, agriculture, it follows that attention to the best and most economic methods of water development, distribution and conservation is the most important thing before the public of this part of the world. Some of the greatest civilizations of history have been built upon the foundation of what some of the critics of the humid regions call an "artificial agriculture," which is to say, irrigation farming. The greatest agriculture and perhaps the most wonderful civilization of all time is being built upon irrigation in Southern California and its adjacent areas. The possibilities of progress in this region are limitless if the available water is made to do its full duty. If this vital problem is slighted, however, the limit of advancement is even now almost in sight. Here is a subject of intense interest to every thinking person in the Southwest and it is a subject that is discussed in the most thorough way in the Farm and Tractor Section of today's big Sunday Times.

TOBY GETS BATH WITH TRIMMINGS

Long Beach's Old-Timer Massaged by Bricklayer and Mechanic

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, July 22.—Toby, one of the oldest and best known residents of Long Beach had his first bath in twenty-five years. Two prisoners from the City Jail, one a bricklayer and the other an automobile mechanic, turned masseurs for a day and put in eight good hours on Toby with the result that Toby's bones shine resplendent in the sun. Twenty-five years ago Toby, a full grown whale from whom the breath of life had departed, landed on the beach with all his clothes on. Like most clothing, Toby's suit soon wore out, however, and now all that is left of the poor fish is his skeleton. Years of exposure to the dust from the ocean out on Pine-avenue pier and the gaze of hundreds of thousands of tourists had turned Toby's bones almost black. Previous efforts to have them manicured and polished by city prisoners resulted in failure, the prisoners balking and declaring they were not undertakers. Recently, however, two prisoners eager to get out on the end of the pier and enjoy the sea breezes far from the city bastile, set to work with a will. And for good measure they washed the windows in Toby's sun parlor.

VETERANS TO GUIDE ACTIVITIES

General Meeting Called to Stabilize Endeavors Under One Council

A central council, composed of delegates from each of the fourteen ex-service men's organizations in Los Angeles, is to be formed at a meeting to take place on the evening of August 1 at 246 South Hill street.

The purpose of this council, as tentatively planned, would be to act as a clearinghouse for all matters that need solidarity of action—such as Armistice Day and Memorial Day activities—and to take under consideration every affair pertaining to the ex-service man as a whole. Meetings are to be staged once a month.

All of the veterans' organizations in the city have been invited to send two representatives to the initial meeting, which was called by the Francis W. Green Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars. The other associations which were asked to join the council are: Victory, Los Angeles, Hollywood and Sunshine Posts of the American Legion; James B. Gresham and Mesner Posts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; Posts Nos. 1, 7 and 8, of the Disabled Veterans of the World War; Los Angeles chapter of the D.E.O.W.W., Roosevelt Camp of the United States War Veterans, and the G.A.R.

OVERSEAS HEROES TO JOIN FETE

Veterans' Club Schedules Celebration to Raise Funds for Injured Soldiers

Soldiers of the Allied nations who have come to Los Angeles since victory crowned their heroism in the World War are to be honored next Tuesday at a reunion and celebration to be held in the rooms of the Overseas Club, First and Spring street.

These men, many of whom fought shoulder to shoulder in the British, French, Belgium, Italian and United States armies are sponsoring the reunion as a means of providing funds for the car of their less fortunate brothers-at-arms who were wounded in action.

Through the efforts of the Overseas Club scores of crippled soldiers and others who have fallen ill in Los Angeles and Southern California have been given medical care and financial aid when it was necessary. It is now necessary to replenish the fund devoted to this service.

Many men and women prominent in the foreign colonies of this city will be in charge of the program which will fill afternoon and evening. Miss Geraldine White Mortimer, daughter of the late British Consul to Los Angeles, will be hostess in the afternoon when tea is to be served from 3 to 5:30 p.m.

A musical program will also be given. In the evening the grand reunion of Allied soldiers will take place.

Artists of the screen and stage have volunteered to enliven the celebration and a well-balanced bill will be presented. Among those who will appear will be Larry Semon, Ruth Roland, Brighton and Company, Ora Carew, the Campbell Sisters, Lionel Belmore, Bobbie Baird, Vernon Dent and Babe Hardy.

EXHIBIT LISTS GROWING DAILY

Pageant of Progress Still One Month Away

Industrial Firms Preparing Elaborate Displays

Commerce Chamber Heads Predict Success

Although the opening of the Pageant of Progress at Exposition Park is a month away the number of displays to be made already surpasses the total number shown at the Industrial Exposition last year, it was announced yesterday at the Chamber of Commerce.

Nearly 600 industrial establishments already are represented and the list is growing constantly; not only is there a larger number already than last year, but most of the exhibitors have increased the size of their space and many of the displays will be very elaborate.

The work of building the temporary structures in which the exhibits will be housed is proceeding rapidly. More than 100 workmen are engaged on the grounds to complete the 800 booths that will be needed, in addition to the massive stages being prepared for the entertainment program.

MOTOR DISPLAY

One of the latest of the elaborate displays to be arranged is that of the Motor Car Dealers' Association. This organization plans an exhibit typifying the spirit of transportation and has engaged 2800 square feet of space for its display. The electrical group also is planning a varied and interesting exhibition of modern appliances.

Indications, it is stated, are that the list of buyers attending this year will far exceed that of last, when they flocked in from all of the western States and even overseas. The buyers and the public alike will witness entertainment on a scale never before attempted in the West. There will be a wonderful water carnival, a reproduction of the crisis at Chateau-Thierry, a Hippodrome ballet and other selected acts from the famous New York amusement center, a Mexican national band and massed bands of seven Los Angeles organizations and an industrial chorus of 800 voices.

The manufacturing committee of the Chamber of Commerce, which is staging the pageant and industrial exposition, has proceeded with the idea that the exposition must be in keeping in every way with the prestige of Los Angeles as first city on the Pacific Coast. Close co-operation is being extended by many organizations and sister communities, insuring certainty to the public that the promise of the big show will be fulfilled.

EXIT FLASKS, ENTER BUSTLE

Woman Carries Bootleg in Old-Fashioned Article of Wearing Apparel

Something new under the sun was reported yesterday by the local prohibition agents—a metal bustle fitted up to accommodate a half-dozen pints of liquor.

The discovery was made when the agents made a raid on the place at 736 East Garvey street, Monterey Park, where they arrested Mrs. Clara Orenstein, Sam Gold and Hyman Brooks, and charged them with violation of the Volstead law, following the asserted discovery of a seventy-five-gallon still, twenty-five gallons of moonshine and about 1000 gallons of mash. The three were lodged in the County Jail.

Mrs. Orenstein is the mother of three children.

The metal bustle was the property of the woman, and she acknowledged that it had been used for the transportation of liquor, the officers say. It was arranged in small compartments.

a hearty approval of the bench, the bar and the laity.

"Possessed of a fine business ability, in addition to his comprehensive knowledge of the law, he makes the ideal candidate for the exalted position to which he justly aspires."

Californians who believe that the proposed $500,000,000 Water and Power Act, which would amend the State Constitution to permit a majority vote to carry the stupendous mortgage on the State, have issued a brief statement summarizing objections to the contemplated act as follows:

"The so-called Water and Power Act is dangerous because it:

"Bonds the Credit of California for $500,000,000, $140,000,000 more than cost of Panama Canal.

"Creates an uncontrolled political board of five members.

"Vests unlimited power in this board.

"Permits rate-juggling and political favoritism.

"Authorizes unlimited pyramiding of bonded indebtedness.

"Sanctions raids on State Treasury to meet deficits.

"Directs tax-collecting machinery of State to cover losses.

"Empowers Board to enter any business, directly or remotely connected with water and power development.

"Bestows power to hire as many employees as board desires.

"Provides for paying whatever salaries board wants to.

"Disregards State Cicil Service regulations.

"Authorizes expenditures 1700 times greater than permitted by Legislature.

"Permits taking away of undeveloped water rights of communities.

"Increases State debt seven times, making it 40 per cent of total bonded debt of all States.

"Removes board far as possible from voice of people.

"Why was the act thus drawn. Why is it sponsored and supported by so many office holders and politicians? Why is it opposed by the home-owners of California? Why are the clear-visioned and successful business men and women of the State against it?

"Do not confuse this act with the Boulder Canyon Dam project. The Federal government proposes to build this dam. They are two separate undertakings and in no way related."

A reasonable man, it would seem, might find such reasons worthy of reflection and of further investigation. Complete information and a copy of the remarkable proposition itself will be furnished interested persons by the People's Economy League, 1010 Van Nuys Building.

ATTORNEY IS HELD ON CHECK CHARGE

A. J. Morganstern, attorney, who was disbarred at San Diego some time ago, was arrested yesterday at the Van Nuys Hotel here, charged with having passed a check for $50 with no funds in the bank. The check was drawn on the Southern Trust and Commerce Bank of San Diego. Morganstern went to jail in default of $1500 bond fixed by Justice of the Peace Baird, before whom he was arraigned. He will have a hearing Tuesday.

Couple Celebrating Golden Wedding Came to State Via Panama

Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Strobridge will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding, this afternoon with a family gathering at the home of their son, William E. Strobridge in Hollywood. Other children of the pair, who will be present are: T. Albert Strobridge of San Francisco; E. M. Strobridge and Mrs. Frank Rush of Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Strobridge have seventeen children and grandchildren.

Mr. Strobridge came to Sacramento in 1852, Mrs. Strobridge (nee Sarah Marvin) came in 1855 to Georgetown, El Dorado county, and both have been residents of California since that time. Both arrived in the State via Panama. The railroad being but partially completed, the method of transportation across the Isthmus was by native carrier or mule-back.

Southern California has been their home since 1884 when they removed to Compton. They have been residents of Los Angeles since 1906.

Count Kept on Users of Road to Salvation

The salvation trail still echoes with the scuffing of many feet. Recently a count was kept upon the number of persons entering the Midnight Mission from noon to midnight, and yesterday T. H. Liddecoat, otherwise known as "Brother Tom," gave out the following report:

Nine hundred persons passed the mission portals last Saturday, and on Sunday the number was 1415. Approximately 3000 passers-by paused to look in—a hopeful sign, according to "Brother Tom." About 2000 persons stopped to drink at the water fountain by the front door.

The Midnight Mission hopes to have a new home of its own one of these days. One man has offered to give $1000 to a building fund if ninety-nine others will put up a similar amount.

HUSBAND HARD TO PLEASE, SAYS WIFE

After inviting his wife to step out with him for a good time, Alexander F. Word would wait until his wife dressed for the occasion and then announce that he had changed his mind and that she could not go, according to a suit for divorce filed yesterday by Mrs. Naomi F. Word. The husband did this on a number of occasions, the complaint states.

Every time the wife would attempt to do something to please her husband, Mr. Word would find fault with it, it is charged. He nagged her and on several occasions burned her arm with a cigarette and tweeked her nose. W. T. Kendrick, Jr., represents Mrs. Word.

FORMER TREASURER SAYS "NOT GUILTY"

Girls of Shorn Locks Defended by Instructor

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAWTELLE, July 22.—Score one more hit for the bobbed-haired girl.

According to Eugenne Wolff, playground instructor at Sawtelle, bobbed-haired girls make the best athletes.

"Many a ball game," said Mr. Wolff, "has been lost by a braided coil evading its hairpin and becoming entangled in the ball or getting in the eyes. Now that bobbed hair is in fashion, girls have gained skill in various sports for they can now keep their mind on the game and not worry about their hair."

Mr. Wolff also says that bangs would help girl athletes materially.

WIFE OBJECTED TO SHOTGUN TACTICS

William F. Mahneke once expressed a desire to know that his wife was "eight feet underground" and a short time later he followed it up with a discharge from a shotgun close to her head, according to a suit for divorce filed yesterday by Mrs. Lydia E. Mahneke. The shot tore a hole in the wall immediately over the wife's head, the complaint states.

The complaint which was prepared by Attorney T. C. Gould recites that the husband frequently threatened the life of Mrs. Mahneke.

President McKee of the board has received an offer from the owners of the Byrne building for space at $1.45 a square foot. Which ever offer is accepted, the board plans to locate in its offices its accounting and engineering forces now occupying rented quarters at Los Angeles harbor.

OBJECTS TO QUARTERS

The board is expected to settle the matter of its new quarters during the coming week.

The Board of Public Utilities, not having the semi-independent power to rent its own offices outside of the City Hall that the harbor board has, yesterday filed a protest with the City Council against being moved from the City Hall to the Bullard Block, declaring that the latter location was inconvenient and that the space allotted the department was insufficient. The utilities board declared its business required that it keep in close touch with the Mayor, City Council, City Attorney and other City departments and for this reason the Bullard Block location was unsatisfactory.

FIUME URGED TO BAN DIVORCE

Harder for Italians to Gain Freedom; New Law Discussed

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ROME, July 22.—The obtaining of divorces in Fiume on the part of Italian citizens is becoming more and more difficult. The discussions in the Senate on the subject lead to the belief a law will be passed which will forbid the reacquisition of Italian citizenship once that citizenship has been exchanged for that of Fiume in order to obtain a divorce under the laws of that city.

GETS MONUMENT, IS STILL LIVING

Explorer, Writer Honored by Townspeople

Franklin Welles Calkins Has Busy Life

Author of Adventure Tales Resumes Work

Few people live to know about monuments erected to their memory and perhaps many have speculated in vain as to inscriptions placed thereon.

Franklin Welles Calkins, explorer and writer of adventure stories, whose works have charmed lads of America and Europe for forty-one years, now a resident of Porterville, is one of the few Americans given this unique privilege.

Franklin W. Calkins

Recent visitors from Spencer, Iowa, the town of Mr. Calkins's adoption and where he first started his literary career, told him of a monument erected to his memory in their city park. On it is written, "Franklin Welles Calkins, author. Born June 5, 1857, Spencer, Iowa."

Mr. Calkins went to Spencer, Iowa, at the age of 8 years, and made that city his home until a man of 30. While in school there he began his work of adventure stories, later filling the position of schoolmaster himself. When a youth, he explored the Black Hills country and learned much of the Indians, speaking several Indian tongues fluently. He is also versed in lore of the mountains of the West, the desert, animal and bird life, and his work abounds with knowledge gained in this field.

FOLLOWED MANY LINES

The Golden Day of Philadelphia first published his serials, which were later syndicated and appeared in many of the leading Sunday papers and magazines. Mr. Calkins has been a lawyer, railroad contractor, school teacher, broker, rancher, hunter and traveler. For over forty years he has been a regular contributor to the Youth's Companion and other leading journals. Among his best-known works are "The Wilderness Voyagers," "The Cougar Tamer," "The Wooing of Tokala," "My Host, the Enemy," "Tales of the West," "Captured by Crows," "Up the Missouri."

In "Who's Who" he is listed as one of America's foremost adventure and folk-lore writers.

Ill health forced him to give up his writing in 1917 and he went to Bear Lodge, Wyo. Two years ago he came to Porterville with the hope that a change of climate might benefit him. He has lived in a tent in the open under a physician's care and is "coming back." In the meantime, Spencer friends, hearing nothing of him, honored his memory by erecting the shaft.

Swinging in his hammock beneath a mighty oak tree at 319 South G street, Porterville, gazing toward the high Sierras in the east, in memory he lives again those stirring days of the pioneer West.

HAS RESUMED WRITING

Until his breakdown Mr. Calkins averaged twelve or fifteen stories per year. He resumed his writing early this spring and has just sent his editors a group of four stories which they declare have the same old "kick!" He is also working on a novel which he expects to place in the hands of his publishers early in January. This will also be released for the screen. With this book he has departed from his regular line. It is the story of a Red Cross woman worker through the World War and the recognition of her worth which comes with appointment to office after her return to America. The love theme enters strongly and except for "The Wooing of Tokala," is his first attempt at romance. Mr. Calkins is unmarried. His mother, a woman of more than 80 years, makes her home with him and shares with keen interest the affairs of his life.

When asked about the monument Mr. Calkins remarked with a droll smile, "It might be more ethical to pass on now but I guess I'll go on as usual until I'm summoned."

In spite of his 65 years and that shaft at Spencer, Iowa, Franklin Welles Calkins is very much alive.

DIVORCE IS GRANTED TO WIFE OF SOLDIER

While John E. Kellerd was serving in the Army on the Island of Guam, he was served with papers in the suit for divorce filed by Ruth Kellerd. Yesterday Judge Summerfield granted Mrs. Kellerd a decree. She told the court her husband declared he did not care for domestic life. He is said to be the son of a well-known theatrical man. She charged desertion.

PROTEST SIGNERS IN MINORITY, IS REPORT

OBJECTORS TO STREET WORK AT HARBOR NOT SUFFICIENT, SAYS COUNCILMAN

The protest of property owners in the Fifth street improvement district at Los Angeles Harbor against the proposed improvement of Third, Fourth and Fifth streets represented but thirty-three and seven-tenths of the frontage in the territory to be improved, Councilman Wheeler, chairman of the public works committee of the City Council, announced yesterday.

This improvement is one which some property owners have endeavored to make for the last twelve years, but action has always been blocked by protests.

The ordinance of intention for the improvement has already been passed and the hearing on the protests was postponed until the coming week in order that the protesting property owners' petition could be checked by the City Engineer.

HAD JUST ONE MORE

It had been a trying day, and Raymond's father was rather irritable. He stood for a few questions from the youngster, but when the latter asked what caused the desert of Sahara, he laid down his paper and answered: "I guess it formed when the Israelites lost their sand. And if you don't quit asking me so many questions, I'll see your mother puts you to bed before I get home hereafter."

"But pa," came the question, "how can you see her put me to bed is she puts me to bed before you get home?"

And that question was Raymond's last—for that evening.—[Boston Transcript.

IN BAD COMPANY

When a vote is to be taken on some important measure, a Congressman who cannot be present "pairs" himself with some Representative who would vote "aye" to the Congressman's "nay," or vice versa.

Once a Democratic member of the House received a letter from an active politician of that party in his district, calling attention to the fact that he was reported in the Congressional Record almost every day as being "paired" with a Republican.

"I don't doubt your loyalty to the party," read the letter; "but I think the boys would like it a great deal better if you paired with Democrats instead of Republicans."—[Harper's Magazine.

OLD PROMISE IS FULFILLED

Frank Wiggins Gave His Word Fifteen Years Ago

He Told Honolulu to Expect Line to Los Angeles

Chamber of Commerce Going on New Ship to Islands

Excursionists to Honolulu in the Chamber of Commerce party will leave Los Angeles, September 9, it was announced definitely yesterday at the chamber offices.

Particularly fitting is this date chosen for the friendly tour, as it marks the day that California was admitted to the union and it will also be the closing date of California's Pageant of Progress and Industrial Exposition, opening on August 26 at Exposition Park under the auspices of the chamber.

PROMISES KEPT

Sentimental and commercial aspects both mark the uniting of Los Angeles and Honolulu. Yesterday when the board of directors adopted the excursion sailing date they reminded Secretary Frank Wiggins, dean of commercial secretaries, of his promise made in 1907 to the Hawaiians that a direct Honolulu-to-Los Angeles shipping service would be permanently established some day. At that time he headed a delegation of 275 chamber members aboard the S. S. Ohio and the board again asked him to head a second party, marking the fulfillment of his promise made fifteen years ago.

Reservations for the excursion will not be made before Thursday, July 27, at the request of the chamber following the agreement with the Los Angeles Steamship Company. It will be necessary to make a survey of the big liner and chart the boat for reservations for the chamber membership after its arrival and refitting for freight and passenger service between the island and Los Angeles. The excursion boat is "The City of Los Angeles," ideally constructed for this service in this trans-Pacific voyage. Formerly a German ship, received by the United States Shipping Board, it was allocated to the local steamship company which will equip it luxuriously for permanent service. The steamship measures 581 feet in length, accommodating 250 first class passengers, and members of the chamber will be given the first choice of cabins.

FIVE DAYS IN HONOLULU

According to present plans the excursionists will remain five days in Honolulu and the entire trip will not consume more than three weeks. Visitors will have to remain at the Honolulu hotels during their stay there since it is not possible to remain on the boat when it is anchored in Pearl Harbor.

Many requests have already been received by chamber members to join the party and it is believed that the entire boat will be chartered for the chamber on its maiden voyage from Los Angeles to the islands.

Similarity between the aims of Los Angeles and Honolulu, both tourist cities, have bound the two with a tie of sympathy and it is fitting that business and commercial men of the sister ports become acquainted at the outset of a new commercial period started by the inauguration of the new steamship lines.

Acceptance of the board's invitation to Secretary Wiggins has been received so that the Los Angeles chamber will extend friendly greetings through its veteran leader who will be first to disembark at Pearl Harbor and redeem his pledge to Hawaiians made years ago.

Artillerymen End Training Camp at Fort

Tanned and healthy 650 coast artillerymen of the California National Guard at noon yesterday filed down the winding military road of Fort MacArthur, homeward bound after two weeks of intensive training on the upper reservation of the post. An hour after they had swung by Col. R. E. Mittestaedt in their final review on the Fort MacArthur parade ground every unit was en route home by train, motor and steamer.

Two hundred and fifty of the guardsmen, comprising the San Francisco battalion, returned to the Bay City on the express liner Harvard of the Los Angeles Steamship Company. The State troops came south on the same vessel two weeks ago.

According to officers at Fort MacArthur, this year's encampment was the most successful in the history of the post. Gratifying records were made in target practice and infantry drill, while not an accident or case of serious illness was reported.

SEEKS .. TO .. KEEP .. HIS .. PROMISE

Do You Know This Pair?

They are Angelenos and they posed high up in the Eiffel Tower in Paris ten years ago. The gentleman who took the picture is anxious to keep his promise and give them a copy. Don't they look happy? They ought to, for (whisper) they were on their honeymoon!

WHO are they?

Where are they?

These questions, pertaining to the honeymooning couple shown in the accompanying picture are asked by Milton M. Kohn, who was in Los Angeles as an exhibitor at the dental convention at the Ambassador recently.

If the questions are answered, then Mr. Kohn will be able to keep to an agreement made ten years ago 1000 feet above Paris on the top balcony of the famous Eiffel tower!

That smacks a bit of romance, and so it was, for, you will remember, a honeymooning couple were concerned. Mr. Kohn, an ardent amateur photographer, had taken several snap-shots from various vantage points when the radiant bridegroom approached him.

"I recognize you as an American," he said, "and, therefore, you may not think it rude in me to ask that you favor my wife and myself by taking a snap-shot of us to show to our friends back home."

"Certainly, I will be glad to," Mr. Kohn replied, and the picture was taken. The name and address of the couple were then written on a card and given to Mr. Kohn but, this was lost several days later.

"I believe the name was Hibbard, or something like that," Mr. Kohn said last night. "I am not sure. But the couple surely were boosters for os Angeles. Several times they said that they were 'born and bred in Los Angeles,' and nothing they saw in Paris seemed as good to them as their home city's wonders."

Anyway, here they are for all to see. If you know them, get into communication with Mr. Kohn. He's at the Alexandria. He'll do the rest.

QUEEN .. CONTEST .. ENDING

City and County Entrants Seem to Head List

Will Aid Veterans

ACTIVITY will be the keynote of this week for the United Spanish War Veterans, which will culminate in a coronation ball at the Ambassador hotel on Saturday night and a mammoth municipal barbecue to be staged at Selig Zoo one week from today.

The queen contest to determine what Angeleno beauty shall preside over the festivities incident to the grand encampment here next month will come to an end next Saturday night with the coronation carnival at which Gov. Stephens will present the winner with the keys to the Durant automobile, the capital prize in the competition, the $400 piano which is the second price in the contest, and the several hundred dollar fur coat donated by the Columbia outfitting company which is the third award in the struggle which has been going on for the past thirty days between girls from the various industries of Los Angeles.

CUBAN BALD

The ball will be typically Havanan in character including a Casino de Cuba, which will be an island replica of the 49 camp that made early California famous.

Hale Dewey's orchestra which played for the "Wampas Frolic and Ball" last winter will furnish the dance music, while Lena Baskette who was prima ballerina of the recent "Carmen" production at the Hollywood Bowl, will make her farewell dancing appearance before leaving for New York to open at the Palace Theater there to start a tour of the Orpheum circuit. Miss Baskette is appearing by special arrangement between Ernest Belcher ballet master and P. F. Roller, chairman of the finance committee of the Spanish War Veterans.

BALL TOMORROW NIGHT

On Monday night city employees and their friends will gather at the Cinderella Roof to do honor to Jessie Martin, the City Hall candidate in the queenship race.

On Tuesday night the motion-picture interests of Los Angeles will stage an all-star vaudeville and minstrel show under the direction of Fred Gamble, well-known screen comedian, at Philharmonic Auditorium in compliment to Helene Holte, who is representing the film world in the "vets of '98" competition. The dancing of Betty Gallagher will be a feature of this occasion.

On Wednesday night the film folk will stage a cinema carnival at the Perluss Majestic ballroom at Fifteenth and Main streets for Miss Holte.

COUNTY BALL THURSDAY

On Thursday night, Eloise Johnson, county employees' protege, who is leading the race at present, will be honored by her associates with a grand ball at the Goldberg-Bosley assembly rooms.

The grand ball is to be staged on Saturday night at the Ambassador, and municipal employees will contribute their bit to the entertainment fund at the mammoth barbecue on next Sunday at Selig Zoo Park, which is being staged by Capt. Jenkins of the fire department, special appointee of Mayor Cryer, who is honorary chairman of the convention committee.

With Eloise Johnson, county candidate, and Jessie Martin, city protege, fighting lustily for the top position, Hyacinth Brown of the Union Pacific, and Grace Mulchahey, Southern Pacific entrant, have been battling fiercely in third and fourth position. Latest figures show Tina Platt of the picture theaters and Lucille Newton of the retail druggists, climbing on each other's ties in fifth and sixth positions.

CORONATION AT AMBASSADOR

Elaborate preparations are being made by P. F. Roller, chairman of the finance committee, to make the coronation ball at the Ambassador one of the biggest affairs yet staged at Los Angeles newest hotels.

By Monday noon it is estimated that various queens will have turned in all of their votes to date in order to qualify for the $50 cash prize offered for the girl making the best showing during that week.

Venezuela's climate is the hottest in the western continent.

SOVIET SAID TO BE STRONG IN UKRAINA

Here at Kharkof, Ulkraina, I feel that I can at last say something as to the real forces at present dominant in Southern Russia.

Since about a year ago, there has been no armed opposition to the Moscow government anywhere in the Ukraine. The only real authority has been the Ukraine Socialist Soviet Republic. Every organization hostile to it, whether presided over by Denikin, Petljura or Makhno, is in exile. Not one of them controls a square yard of Ukrainian soil or retains a following worth mentioning.

Naturally, it is always possible that Wrangel or Petljura will receive financial or military help from the entente and make a new incursion into Ukrainian territory from Poland or Rumania; but there appears to be very little chance that they will win any permanent success in this country.

My opinion that the bolsheviki are firmly seated in authority is not based on my personal observations alone, but largely upon the opinions of opponents of that government. No matter how [illegible] curse it, none of these [illegible] talk imagines for a [illegible] it can be overthrown [illegible] Ross in Venezuela [illegible]

FAIR NOTICE

An "Underwriter" is accepted to be one who, with vision, initiative, and understanding of those things which make for values, takes hold in the inception of an undertaking and helps to bring it about by his underwriting or guaranty that it will be done.

Increments in values become just as real, when certainty takes the place of uncertainty, as when the thing is actually accomplished.

The "underwriter," by his guaranty, makes certainty of uncertainty, and thereby creates values just as real as any other. The certainty that a railroad will be built through a new country makes tangible land values in that country almost equal to the effect of the actual construction of the road. The increments in values do not await the actual construction; they precede it, as the result of the underwriting.

Millions of Dollars Subscribed

Those who by their foresight and confidence in the future of Los Angeles, with their subscriptions to the Palos Verdes trusteeship, underwrite it, thereby create tangible increments in values. The effective pointing out of the advantage, strategic position and availability of the great Palos Verdes estates as a residential place, has created an increment in its value far beyond that it had before. The subscription of millions of dollars for the construction on these estates of improvements of the most desirable character has greatly increased these increments in value.

The basis of underwriting is that the underwriter, because of his foresight, initiative, and courage in leading the way and guaranteeing the accomplishment, shall be entitled to special advantages over those who follow in the steps of certainty.

Under the terms of the trust indenture securing the underwriting notes of the Palos Verdes project, all subscribers to the notes are equally protected, equally secured, and equally pro rata participate.

Underwriters Become Owners of Property

It is manifestly good business and sound policy that THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE PROPOSED IMPROVEMENTS OF PALOS VERDES BE BEGUN AT THE EARLIEST POSSIBLE MOMENT. One most unusual feature of this undertaking is the financing IN ADVANCE of the improvements to be made, instead of depending on the partial sale of the partially improved estate to complete them. This is the part of the underwriters, and for their underwriting or guaranty they become the equitable OWNERS of the improved property, receiving the benefit of its enhancement and increments.

It is necessary, in view of the policy of advance financing, that the remainder of the underwriting notes be placed as quickly as possible, that the undertaking may promptly proceed to the second stage, THE CONSTRUCTION, without loss of time. Under the trusteeship controlling the entire project, the trustee may not accept subscriptions to the underwriting at less than par.

Early Construction Desirable

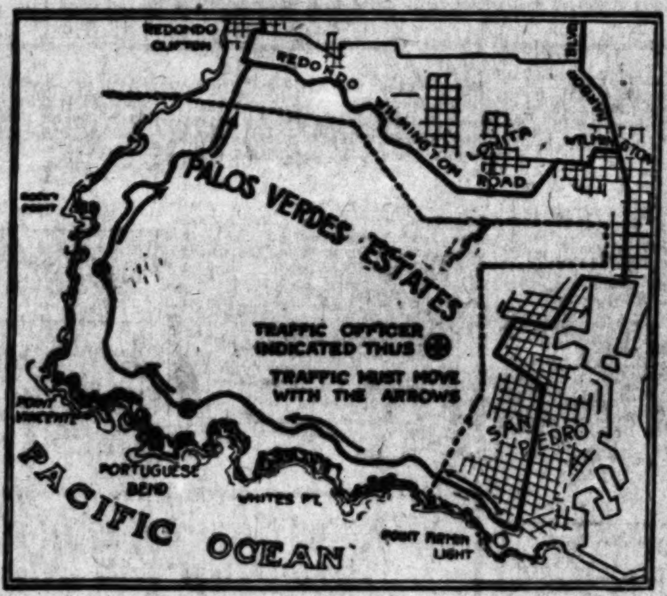
The completion of the underwriting, purchase of the Palos Verdes Estate, and prompt beginning of the construction of the proposed improvements are desirable and of material advantage to all concerned.

Increase in Subscription Price

Notice is hereby given that to this end negotiations will be undertaken for the organization of a Syndicate to underwrite the ENTIRE REMAINDER OF THE ISSUE OF NON-CONVERTIBLE NOTES at par.

See Palos Verdes TODAY

Why not drive down and along the wonderful coast line of the Palos Verdes Estates TODAY?. Drive to San Pedro, round past Point Firmin and up along the coast road on the Palos Verdes Estates to Redondo. It is a beautiful trip, and you will see approximately a quarter of the estates in this way (the greater part of the estates being on the inland slopes.) The estates will be open until 5 p.m. Automobiles cannot be admitted after that hour, since the great trucks of garden products from the thousands of acres under cultivation begin to move out both ways at 5 p.m. Go early; you will enjoy the trip immensely. Refreshments may be had at about the center of the coast drive in the estates. Be sure to enter at the San Pedro end.



One Way Traffic in Palos Verdes Estates

Please follow the above ONE-WAY TRAFFIC map in visiting Palos Verdes Estates, entering, this week and Sunday, at the San Pedro Portal and emerging at the North Portal. Take this map along. It shows you roads and directions in Palos Verdes Estates.

Title Insurance and Trust Company of Los Angeles Is the Trustee

It is proposed that under this arrangement, if made, the selling price to be fixed by the Syndicate will be limited to a maximum of two and one-half per cent (2½%) over par at first, with provision for possible subsequent periodical advances not exceeding a maximum total of ten per cent (10%) over par. Neither the Trustee nor the management would benefit by any increase in price, as this increase would belong exclusively to the Syndicate taking the issue.

Subscriptions Accepted at Par, Now

Subscriptions to the Non-Convertible trust indenture notes will continue to be received at par, on terms of 10% cash, the balance payable in thirty-six equal monthly installments, with interest at 7% per annum on deferred payments ONLY until the proposed syndicate option is made effective.

Interests of Non-Convertible Note Holders

With the application of the Convertible notes (now withdrawn by the Trustee from further subscription) to frontage purchase, the Convertible notes thereby will become satisfied and carry no further interests. The remaining business and residential frontage, together with the entire liquidable assets of the trust, less only the fixed fees, will be the equitable property of subscribers of the Non-Convertible notes, which, unlike bonds or mortgage notes, will represent the equitable OWNERSHIP, clear and free of incumbrance, of the properties securing them, and hence have a value proportionate to the real value of those assets, and be entitled to the entire net proceeds of their liquidation until they have received 100% of the subscription, and thereafter to 90% of all net incomes until the last asset of the trust is liquidated.

All checks, drafts and money orders must be made payable to Title Insurance and Trust Company as trustee.

Three Days More of Biggest Vote Offer

Candidates in The Los Angeles Times' Great $70,000 Prize Campaign Busily Building $30 Clubs—Vote Offer Closes July 26, 9 p. m.

Only three days remain of the biggest extra vote offer in The Los Angeles Times' $70,000 prize campaign.

Wednesday, July 26—9 p.m.—marks the close of the 75,000 extra vote offer, and only until then will such a liberal bonus in votes be given on each and every $30 club of new subscriptions.

Promptly at 9 o'clock Wednesday night the doors of the campaign office will be closed and no one will be allowed to enter. However, all persons who are in the office at the time will be waited upon.

In order that candidates living in the outlying territory may have the same length of time to work on the offer as have those in the city territory, all new subscription payments in letters bearing a postmark not later than than 9 p.m. will apply on the offer. Get in touch with your local postmaster and find out how late letters can be posted to bear this postmark.

Practically every candidate in the list expects to have at least one club by Wednesday night, and some of them hope to do even better than that. There is no limit to the number of clubs a candidate may turn in. The 75,000 bonus votes are given on each club. The regular votes are given as usual.

New subscriptions are worth more votes the remainder of this week than they ever will be later in the campaign. This explains why candidates are striving with all their might to do their very best now.

The vote standings, as they appear today, show that the competition is livening up fast. Spirited voting is taking place in all of the twenty districts. The tabulation today represents votes held for publication up to noon Friday. The next list, to appear Wednesday, will include votes up to noon Tuesday.

(All votes counted on Burroughs Adding Machines.)

WARNING TO CANDIDATES!

Anonymous communications are being sent to candidates by a rival newspaper in an effort to discourage participants in the campaign through misleading statements. Their paid agents, claiming to be representatives of The Times, are also being sent to call on candidates. These imposters usually state that they will drop candidates' names from the list "because they have not done enough work"—or remarks of similar nature. Candidates are warned to pay no attention to communications or representatives unless adequate credentials are shown.

If such incidents are reported promptly to the campaign department of The Times, or the local Times agents, measures will be taken immediately to prevent further annoyance.

Mrs. Alfred Wright, closest friend of Miss Banning, was matron of honor and was most attractive in her gown of green brocaded satin, embellished with hand-made zinnias. It was cut on old-fashioned lines—low off the shoulders and long-waisted. The skirt almost touched the floor on the sides. She carried a sheaf of ferns and wore a picture hat of green.

The gowns of the bridesmaids were fashioned on the same lines as Mrs. Wright's except they were made with satin bodices and chiffon skirts and shaded from lavender and flame to pale pink.

The bridesmaids were Mrs. William Phineas Banning, Mrs. John C. Macfarland, Miss Katherine Mellus, Mrs. Louis Cass and Miss Alice Morse. Robert Peele Elliott was best man, while the ushers were Joseph Brent Banning, William Phineas Banning, William McFie, Dr. Archibald Macleish, and Louis Gable.

A bevy of little children; nieces and nephews of the bride and groom, held the ribbons that marked the aisle. They were all frocked in apple green organdie and included Alice Stewart, Kitty Armstrong, Betty Armstrong, Gabriel Wright, Ann Banning Macfarland, Louis Cass, Buddy Cass, Eltinge Brown, Alfred Wright, Jr., Scotty Armstrong.

Supper was served in the huge dining-room and in the patio.

Give A Thought To the Breakfast Room

The influence of environment is a very important factor in our every-day lives. Cheerful surroundings have a tendency to create buoyant, cheerful thoughts. This is especially true of the Breakfast Room, for it is here that we get our start for the day.

And as a matter of fact the Breakfast Room in the average Southern California home is much more than a Breakfast Room, for its convenience and charm encourage its adoption as the "family" dining room.

It costs so little to furnish the Breakfast Room effectively—and it means so much to the family—in happiness and enjoyment that it should be given careful thought.

The ideal Breakfast Room is colorful, refreshing, cheerful, and yet not obtrusive.

The "California" attaches great importance to the correct furnishing of this very essential room, and shows many distinctive and beautiful types of inexpensive furniture for its proper equipment.

A very attractive Breakfast Room Set may be had for less than $60.00.

We shall be very glad to have you come and see our interesting display of Breakfast Room pieces, and to compare our values with the offerings of any store anywhere.

Perfect Diamonds Are Always a Safe Investment

There need never be any concern about the permanent safety of an investment in a diamond that is perfect.

Stones which are known to the trade as "perfect" are so very rare, as compared to the great preponderance of imperfect stones, that their inherent value is bound to keep on advancing.

It is generally known that Feagans and Co. confine all their diamond selections—in stones of one-fourth carat and larger—to "perfect" stones, so that you are assured of the safety of any investment you may make in "Feagans" diamonds.

Many wondrous gem pieces are shown in our diamond cases.

The Gem-Lights of Her Engagement Ring

In the rich green hue of an emerald—the deep blue loveliness of a sapphire—the clear, flaming brilliance of a diamond—in any of these gem-lights an affianced loves to read the sentiment marked by the gift of her engagement.

Which stone it shall be is a matter of personal preference, and the size is of secondary importance. Only one thing is imperative—that its fineness shall radiate the charm of romance—that its purity as a stone shall match the delicacy of sentiment it expresses.

With an insistence that dates back to the beginning of our career, we have held to the most rigid standards of quality in diamonds, pearls, sapphires, emeralds and all precious stones. And if there is any instance in which we stress the point with special emphasis, it is in the matter of a solitaire diamond or other gem as the setting for an engagement ring.

During July, August and September this store closes Saturday afternoon at 12:30

GARDEN GROVE

Two informal events were given this week as farewell compliments to Garden Grove residents who are leaving for other communities to make their homes. A beach party was enjoyed Friday evening by a group of young people with Miss Maybelle Tuma as the honoree. They motored to Huntington Beach where a swim and supper were enjoyed. Those in the party were the Misses Clara Munz, Irene Natland, Frances Dugan, Ines Moort, Minnie Bodenhamer, Maybelle Tuma and Messrs. Norman Bryan, Harry Munz, Manley Natland, Marion Umphress, Lester Head and Robert McCullah.

The other event of like nature was a party given also on Friday evening by Miss Amelia Scidmore with Mrs. F. L. Woodhouse and daughter, Miss Bessie, as the honored guests. The guests were members of Mrs. Woodhouse's Sunday-school class. Games were played and refreshments were served. Mrs. Woodhouse was presented with a gift from the class. She and her daughter are moving to Santa Ana. Miss Tuma is to reside in Anaheim.

To note the birthdays of two girl friends Miss Lona Holt entertained several young women for dinner at her home on Monday evening. The girls whose natal days were thus being remembered were Miss Harriett Brown and Miss Gladys Fitz. Dinner was served at 7 p.m. and covers were laid for the Misses Elizabeth Brown, Bessie Woodhouse, Marion Magnusson, Vesta Newson, Fitz, Brown and Holt.

Steaks, broiled out of doors at Orange county park, were the feature of an al fresco dinner enjoyed there Wednesday evening by a number of Garden Grove folks. Included in the group were Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Monroe, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Woodworth and family, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Doepke, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Wheeler and family, Mrs. Zeigler and small son and Miss Clara Lott.

ONTARIO

Members of the Jolly Sixteen Club have enjoyed several delightful outings recently. One evening last week they motored to Camp Baldy, where they surprised Mr. and Mrs. William Davis (Mattie Ola Roberts,) who are spending their honeymoon there. A handsomely decorated bride's cake was a feature of the picnic supper, which was eaten under the trees near the cool stream. Following the meal the guests enjoyed dancing until a late hour. Another evening recently club members went to Ganesha Park in Pomona, where they entertained themselves in the outdoor plunge and partook of a delicious picnic supper. Over the week-end the club was at Long Beach, where they spent two happy days on the beach and in the surf.

Mrs. Welles T. Ross, 111 Bonita Court, entertained at a beautiful tea one afternoon recently in honor of Mrs. Mary DeMotte of Pittsburg, Pa. Mrs. DeMotte, who is a house guest at the Ross home, is a well-known author. A pink and white color scheme was used effectively, being carried out in gladioli. Among Mrs. Ross's guests were Mrs. Leonard Baugh Fowler, Mrs. J. Stewart Ingalls, Mrs. Frank M. Taylor, Mrs. Hugh H. Franklin, Mrs. Ward Walker, Mrs. Walter V. Coombs, Mrs. Jesse W. Heinecke, Mrs. Harold Latimer, Mrs. Harvey O. Chapman, Mrs. Rupert F. Graettinger, Mrs. Royal Miller, Mrs. Kenneth S. Whitmore, Mrs. Jerome H. Titus, Mrs. Amy Huntoon, Mrs. M. E. Titus, Mrs. W. Starbuck Fenton, Mrs. Byron Ford, Mrs. Edgar Shumaker, Mrs. B. F. Webber, Mrs. Henry E. Swan, Mrs. H. J. Sandford, Mrs. Earl Holmes Richardson, Mrs. Lester R. Kennedy, Miss Katherine Salter, Mrs. Harry B. Harlow and Miss Ruth Carpenter.

Members of the Six-Twenty-three Club hit upon a happy innovation for their regular meeting one evening when they motored to Ganesha Park, Pomona, for a picnic supper. Swimming in the open-air plunge occupied their time until the bountiful picnic supper was ready. They returned home in the moonlight. Members who enjoyed the event included Mrs. Francis Rogers, Mrs. Hobart R. Alter, Mrs. Clarice H. Bentley, Miss Myrtle McNay, Miss Marie Rowe, Miss Helen Schallowitz, Miss Viola Poister, Miss Bertha Moore, Miss Lucille Joss, Miss Maude Nisley, Miss Dana Williams, Miss Eleanora Leagy, Miss Georgia Loba, Miss Mabel McClelland, Miss Mary McClelland and Miss Corinna McClelland.

Miss Dorothy Shaw, formerly of Upland, but now of Hollywood, assisted by her mother, Mrs. Mark W. Shaw and her sister, Mrs. William S. Lord, II, entertained a group of young women friends at their delightful cabin in San Antonio Canyon several days this last week. Swimming in the plunge, dancing and hiking filled the happy days to the brim. Among those who were Miss Shaw's guests were Misses Wilma Atkinson, Ruth Viegler, Charlotte Burell, Olive Doyle, Frances Thayer, Caroline Maple, Janet Craig, Dorothy Brenholts, Doris McCready, Kathryn Nelson and Margaret Benedict.

UPLAND

A quiet wedding service was performed Saturday evening in San Bernardino when Miss Etta Mae Perdew became the wife of Peryman Hubbard Evans. Miss Perdew was gowned in a dainty frock of blue canton crepe, with hat, gloves and shoes to match, and was attended by her sister, Mrs. Ed Bryden. The groom was unattended, and only a few intimate friends witnessed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Evans will make their home in Upland.

Mrs. Edith Troeller entertained the teachers of the daily vacation Bible school on Tuesday with a luncheon of charming appointments. Hydrangeas and ferns were used most effectively as decorations. Mrs. Charles Allen assisted the hostess. Among Mrs. Troeller's guests were Mrs. Leon Durham, Mrs. Harleigh Brown, Miss Harriet Riley, Miss Gladys File, Miss Louise Harris and Miss Mary Hill.

Mrs. Neil Hess was hostess last Wednesday at her canyon home at Seven Oaks, in San Antonio, to members of the Philathea Society. A delightful day was spent under the huge oak trees, and a delicious luncheon was served at noon. Those who enjoyed the affair were Mrs. Carl Nicholson, Mrs. David Bradfield, Mrs. Glenn Wright and her guests, Mrs. Saylor and daughter from Monterey, Miss Elizabeth Wright, Mrs. F. D. Hehl and Miss Elizabeth Fossett.

Miss Ruby Moser and her brother, Cleo Moser, entertained a group of friends at a jolly wiener roast at their pretty home on Twenty-

MEET MY FRIEND

By Sam W. Small, Jr.

—JACKSON, the BARBER

A gentle, nice-looking old fellow climbs into Jackson's chair.

"Hair trimmed today, sir?" asks Jackson in his best professional manner.

Yes, the Barber Seldom Misses One

"Yes, and I want you to cut it shorter on this side than you do on that. It grows faster on this side."

"On the right side, sir?" queries Jackson without the flutter of an eyelid.

"Yes, I suppose so, but it's fust on one side and then on t'other, and for sixty year, it seems to me, I've been trying to get some barber to cut it right."

"How old are you, may I ask, sir?"

"Well, I'm only 96, byt my older brother's quite an old feller by this time. No pep and go at all."

And yet, says Jackson, the people think the barber's lot's a happy one.

—JOHN, the SHOE MAN

He Passes Shoes Along the Line

John runs a shoe store on Main street. His customers buy shoes because they need them. They are one-pair men, and when they have a new pair on their feet the old ones go into the discard for keeps, so far as they are concerned.

"Throw these old ones away for me?" asks a customer, spurning the wrinkled and service-scarred veterans with a prideful foot in its glossy and shapely new covering.

"I'll do better than that," says John. "I'll put 'em in that big box back there and pass 'em on down the line. Every day fellows that haven't got a dime come in here looking for old shoes. I send them to the big box to help themselves and they are seldom disappointed. But they, too, must leave their old pair behind, because some fellow worse off than the last one is coming along some time and glad to get what's left behind."

She Knows How to Handle Help

When Lily's Jim struck oil, and struck it right, and she moved into the big house with its garage filled with expensive cars, draped herself with diamonds and went in for societ, life had every promise of unalloyed joy. But Lily has her troubles.

"What with three butlers, a flock of feetmen and a bunch of maids, my personal household menage is flooding the tanks," says Lily. "I'm going to epitomize the help around this joint in just about a minute."

—AL from AUSTRALIA

Here's One Who Misses the Credit

The best that Britain had to offer Al was rat-catcher on a dirty old hooker that finally landed him in Vancouver, whence he migrated south, but Al is still British to the core, and it is a perpetual source of amazement to him how we get by at all. A copy boy's job on one of the big "lots" in Hollywood turned Al's talents to literary lines, and you'd be surprised if you knew the credit he fails to get.

Did George Ade write "Our Leading Citizen" for Tommy Meighan? Let Al tell you who put the thing over. Irvin Cobb write titles? It's a joke. Al was the boy that made 'em funny. Every time a producer falls for one of these lit'rary guys, it means a job for Al. He admits it.

And so one of these days Jess Lasky is going to get wise to things and save himself a lot of money and unnecessary trouble by making a one-man literary colony in Hollywood.

Why They Come From Indiana

Science may clear the mystery of "why so many writers come from Indiana." Gifted writers usually have abnormally active thyroid glands, with the customary symptoms of artistic temperament and vivid imagination. Something that stimulates the thyroid gland probably exists in the air, water, or other phase of the climate of Indiana. Each district of earth produces a characteristic type of people.—[Capper's Weekly.

FAMOUS AUTHORS WHO WRITE IN HOLLYWOOD

Intimate Glimpses of Their Methods of Writing; No Flavor of Bohemia

"WHAT I can't figure," remarked an eastern publisher, "is how they can find anybody to do the washing or run the street cars in Los Angeles. To my positive knowledge every one of the 700,000 inhabitants is an author. Every train leaving Los Angeles is loaded till the springs creak with manuscripts."

Perhaps he may have exaggerated just a little, but it is certainly a fact that a very large proportion of the literature of the day is manufactured in Hollywood.

Some of the biggest stars in the literary firmament live here. Every year brings more of them. They come out for the winter or to write a story for the movies; the next year they stretch the visit out a little longer. Then there's a house for sale or a lease abandoned back East and another one joins the colony.

There are so many big literary lights now twinkling in Hollywood that the Mahomets no longer go back to the mountains; the mountains make respectful journeys out here to the Mahomets. It has come to be a custom for the editors of the big magazines to pay regular yearly visits to Los Angeles to consult the writers.

That's the way they do nowadays. When you get to be one of the Immortals you no longer send in your hopeful manuscripts with a bright note designed to attract the eye of the editor. When you arrive Up There you and the ed. sit down together and talk it over. Together you decide whether Jose ought to leave the black-eyed jane flat at the end of the story or come back and marry her.

The life of the author colony centers in an attractive vine-covered house on Sunset Boulevard; this is the home of the Writers' Club. There is more brain power housed under that roof at luncheon time every day than in any similar territory in the world.

WHERE THE BIG STARS GATHER

If you suggested to anybody that it was Bohemian you would be mercifully slain by the first author who could find a hammer; but it does suggest the kind of Bohemia that young authors dream about, but which doesn't exist.

The Writers' Club is what Greenwich Village tried to be before it was invaded by fat grass widows from Keokuk and became the habitat of young lady poets who clerk in Macy's daytimes and soar at night—soar but do not sell. The real Greenwich Village is a sideshow full of four-flushers and cheap imitations.

Nobody can get into our Greenwich Village who is not an established and proven success. Membership is limited to those who have actually won their spurs and have had their names upon a cinema screen.

Primarily, it is a club for screen writers, but there is scarcely an author of note in America who has not written for the screen. So, the Writers' Club is the central hive around which buzz the authors of the best fiction being written in America.

It is a charming place—the Writers' Club. Originally it

MIDGETS "AT HOME" IN HOLLYWOOD

Instead of the land of Lilliputians this is the house of midgets in Hollywood, the house where little women in dainty gowns and high heeled slippers run up and down stairs as happy as larks and pipe their thoughts in falsetto voices.

How did these little people meet? Well, of course, they're in the show business; midgets always are. In fact, they are Singer's midgets, playing this week at the Hillstreet theater, and they all live together because they are very domestic and thy want a home of their own.

Hotel life doesn't appeal to a person who is so tiny that guests turn about and stare. Then, too, these midgets have a family of pets which must be properly sheltered. One of the boys has four sheep dogs, all taller than himself; another keeps forty canaries, and then the family has a midget chef, a midget shoemaker who knows how to make tiny shoes, and there is a dressmaking establishment right in their own house.

A CLOSE-UP VIEW OF A TERRIBLE HEROINE; WHAT CLARA PHILLIPS IS REALLY LIKE

BY HARRY CARR

WERE I a young lady accused of murder, I should pray to be tried by a jury composed of police reporters. They have a veneer of blase cynicism. But, like most young gentlemen of courage and adventurous disposition, they are incurably romantic. They see every woman as beautiful, winsome, charming and thrilling. They see Mrs. Clara Phillips as a fascinating vision of loveliness; or, in other moods, as a dangerous and beautiful demon.

Unhappily for my own romantic interest in the drama, I happened to meet the lady face to face. It was about the most crucial and vital moment of her whole life. She was going to jail. The great steel door was about to close upon her—possibly never to open again.

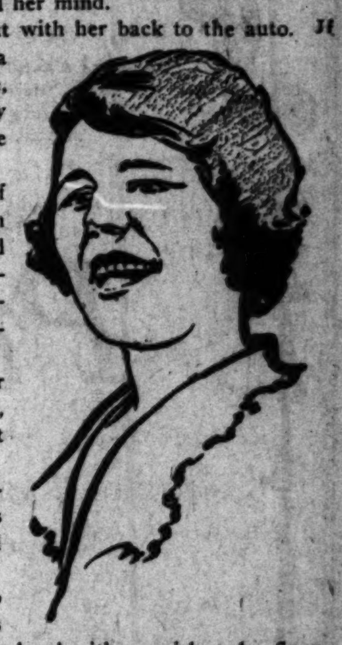
For that instant, her soul was stripped bare. I saw her with the cover off, so to speak.

It was Sunday—the day they brought her back from Tucson.

When the Sheriff's automobile drove up to the jail with a dash and a rush and grinding of brakes, some one yelled, "There she is."

The crowd then came running from every direction and rapidly closed in about the automobile, leaving only a path from the auto door to the jail door.

When she got out of the car, she saw a tense crowd pushing and closing in about her. I saw her look up with swift terror. Her eyes quickly swept around the circle. I knew what was in her mind as well as though it had been written on her forehead. She comes from a lynching country. For just a flash, a sudden terror entered her mind.



She whipped around, with a movement like a cornered cat with her back to the auto. If it really had been a lynching party, there would have been a grand fight. For that girl is a fighter. She has the tense, tightened face of a killer. I have seen the same type many times on the Texas border and in regiments recruited in the mountains of the South.

I am not trying to convict this girl, in a newspaper, of murder. I have known many fine and honorable men in whose faces there lurked this same suggestion of menace and danger. It is the indomitable fighting heart; it may make martyrs and heroes—or murderers—according to the other qualities which accompany it. Anyhow, she is entitled to the presumption of innocence until she has been heard in court.

For a moment she stood there at bay. It lasted only for one flash—just as long as one heartbeat. Then that cornered, desperate look went out of her eyes. She understood. It wasn't an attack; it was merely an audience.

There is a peculiar, sweeping, swaying walk that was invented by Mr. Florenz Ziegfeld for the use of his chorus girls in the Follies. It is a graceful movement from the hips and shoulders. All chorus girls try to copy it.

In her brief journey across the sidewalk from the auto to the jail door, I was interested to see Mrs. Phillips affect this Ziegfeld walk. Just as she got to the door she threw back her head with a smirk and a flourish the way chorus girls do as they get to the wings for the exit after a song number. She gave this characteristic "exit" toss of her head and a stage

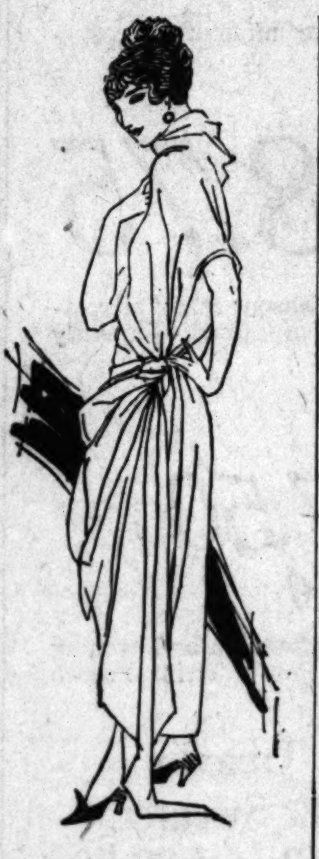
EXIT FLAPPER; ENTER THE MYSTERIOUS WOMAN OF THIRTY

BY ALMA WHITAKER



The Mysterious Woman

Ominous changes in the air. "She" is about to enter upon another era, another phase, to affect a new pose, new poise, new manners, new styles and a new personality.

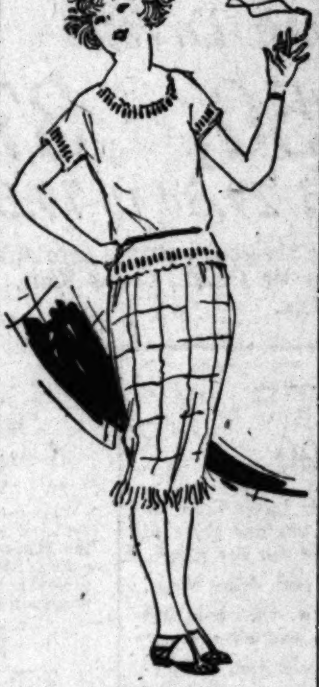
The skittish flapper styles are registering their last kick. Very short skirts are distinctly passe. Extreme youthfulness is rapidly becoming demode. Obvious makeup utterly outre. And the reckless, impudent, flamboyant, dashing, inconsequential, flippant young person, with her independent devil-may-care attitude, her defiance of the conventions, and her scorn of dignity is passing, passing, passing.

What now is going to be her new pose? What manner of front is she going to exhibit to the world? What demeanor will she adopt to confuse and boggle the naive male? What is her next move in the game?

She has rather enjoyed the reckless era with its sumptuos audacity and flouting of all the traditions. She shows a marked inclination to cling to it for a little longer, to defy the Parisian edict of longer skirts, to continue to bob her hair and show her legs and snap her fingers in the face of Mrs. Grundy. She liked the attention it commanded, the anixety it fostered, the alarmed criticism it provoked. But she also knows that variety is the spice of life, that the eternal feminine demands disconcerting changes, that to remain the paramount interest in a world of crowded competitive interests she must ever be on the alert for something new. She positively must not be "uderstood," the male must be kept guessing, maintained on a "qui vive?" footing, bewildered and a little embarrassed. And this flapper attitude has worn itself thin. Even the pulpits are beginning to "understand," to exonerate, to excuse, nay, even to approve. Yes, and even to ignore—the unkindest cut of all.

WHEN SHE WAS "CUTEY"

Just before that she had elected to be merely cutey, with her hair dressed in ultra simplicity, with fluffy coy escaped tendrils over the ears. Dainty little collars and cuffs, plain tailored gowns, severe white satin fronts, all of which was combined with the earnest attitude of a damsel intent upon war work, taking life rather seriously, service and serviceability rampant. It was the civilian counterpart of the Red Cross costume.



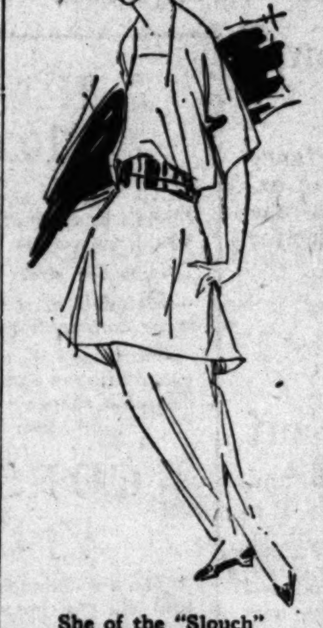
The Flapper

All of which you will recall was a marked and fetching contrast to the floppy style which immediately preceded it, the bunchy clothes, the debutante slouch, the hunched shoulders and the slightly elevated tummy. She was a weary limp little creature in those days, rather bored, with hair yanked back off her forehead to conform to the slightly contemptuous arched eyebrow. Any enthusiasm she evinced was confined to a wistful little smile, an obvious effort at tactful congeniality. Hence the trim tailored docilely eager war attitude was a highly becoming contrast.

But just before the flop it was the slit skirt, with its subtle draperies, its hint of naughtiness combined with a touch-me-not hauteur. Sophisticated elegance was her role then, dashing, daring, sparkling, but a bit overwhelming. A long queenly fishtail half across the room, jeweled laces, rich silks—most imposing, but artfully modified with that stretch of silken peticoatless leg in chorus girl tights that was so utterly confusing. She strutted in those days with a haughty glide, she smiled with serene superiority and dressed her hair high and queenly—oh, the very quintessence of daring, but haughty sophistication. Today's flapper is daring to be sure, but it is impudence, not hauteur, cheeky, reckless, but not the elegant superciliousness of the slit skirt era.

SLIT SKIRTS.

The bolster skirt era of ten years ago was still another pose. She hobbled and hopped, walked with a staccato little jerk, showed a fair modicum of leg, and, for a time accentuated her buttock line with a rather lame sort of vulgarity. That phase seemed to indicate a deliberate accentuation of her former thralldom, an exaggeration of the outward and visible shackles to which her inward spirit had ever been heir.



She of the "Slouch"

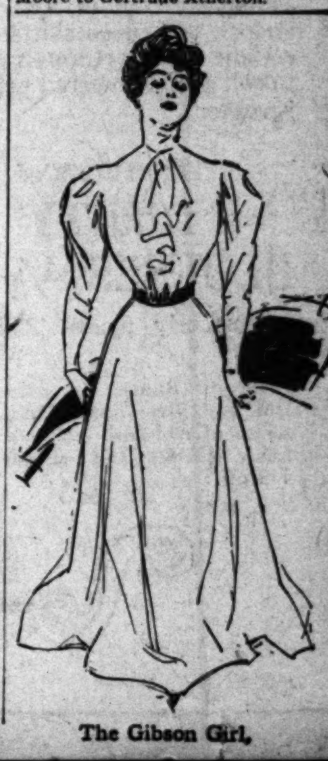
It was the last phase before suffrage came in—and incidentally woman's suffrage came in with slit skirts in California—the first untrammeled stride she had taken for years! And it came in for the rest of the country with bare-backs and knee-length skirts.

But just before the hobble, she had passed through the sporty, doggy, stage of which Miss Eleanor Sears was a shining example. The mannish clothes, hands in pockets, the boyish stride, the athletic swing to the shoulders, all combined with an ultra practical manner, an air of physical capacity—and it was stylish to be very sound and healthy in those days. Fainting Amelias were decidedly out.

That was a sequence to the Gibson girl vogue—that elegant young lady who so successfully combined ultra-feminism with a taste for sports—who managed to look radiantly healthy, capable, ineffably attractive, slightly superior, haughtily dignified and pleasantly graceful all in one. She wore her hair mounted high upon her head, artfully exposing her intellectual temples. She wore her skirts long and frilly round the feet for dress occasions, but had a nice taste in trim shirtwaists, sailor hats and trotter skirts for walking and sport wear. It was she who adopted the divided skirt for bicycle riding as distinct from the less artistic "bloomers" which had a brief, but perilous vogue. Oh, that Gibson girl era had a lot to recommend it—it had the bolster skirt phase and the slit skirt phase and even the demure practical war phase all beaten to a frazzle.

Well, we needn't go back any farther than that. But what is she going to do now? After being flamboyantly frank, telling all she knows and not caring a whoop what anybody thinks of her, tripping around in skittish knee-length skirts, metaphorically putting out her impudent tongue at the world, kicking up her heels, painting her face, bobbing her hair, behaving how she jolly well likes, you can wager something diametrically opposed to all that is in the offing. That was but an exuberant outburst following her new found freedom. But now she is settling down, getting used to her emancipation, growing up.

Ah, growing up. That is the next phase. The fall styles are all designed to present an enchanting woman of 30. That subtle, clever, sophisticated, dangerous "woman of 30" who has lurked through fiction all the way from George Moore to Gertrude Atherton.



The Gibson Girl.

THE HELPING HAND

"How far that little candle throws its beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

In Placerville, a town with a population of about 1900, the El Dorado county chapter of the American Red Cross supports a social worker in co-operation with the County Board of Supervisors, the Red Cross paying her salary. The duty of the social worker, Miss Helen Geiser, is to investigate all the cases of need in the county, reporting to the supervisors cases requiring county aid. As her work necessitates covering the entire county the stage lines give her free transportation wherever she is called upon to travel. In addition a Red Cross Motor Corps has been organized throughout the Red Cross branches to take care of Miss Geiser when called to an isolated place.

A school for the blind, the first of its kind in Armenia will be opened in Alexandropol in a few weeks by the Near East Relief. The school will be operated in connection with the American trachoma hospitals and will be called "Cleveland House" in honor of the city of Cleveland. Funds for the school were provided out of the war chest contribution which Cleveland makes annually.

Radio can make the dreams of the many blind, now "shut up in darkness," come true.

That is the belief of Miss Edith Marsh, secretary of the Minneapolis Society for the Blind, and of members of the society who see in the radio possibilities for a new field of interest and information for themselves.

"Radio communication would prove a Godsend to the blind," Miss Marsh said. "It would give them new interests, and make the world a happier place for them to work in."

She suggested the possibilities of giving instruction and entertainment to the blind from a special central broadcasting station.

In Petrograd district, not directly in the famine area, the American Relief Administration is now feeding 40,000 children between 3 and 14 years of age. The work is supervised by George A. Conlon, a New York man, assistant to Dr. Herschell C. Walker, American Relief Administrator.

The Relief Administrator also is providing a daily meal for 5000 famine refugees quartered in barracks and is giving a daily portion of milk to babies as well as food and milk to nursing mothers.

Twenty-five hundred students are fed every day by co-operation with the Students' Friendship Fund of America.

The will of Benoit Wasserman, cigar manufacturer, who died recently, leaves bequests to ten charitable and religious organizations. They are $1000 each to the Brooklyn Hebrew Orphan Asylum and the Jewish Hospital of Brooklyn, and $500 each to the following: Sydenham Hospital, Hebrew Infant Asylum, Sanitarium for Hebrew Children, House of the Daughters of Jacob, Home for Destitute Blind, Five Points House of Industry, French Benevolent Society and the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor.

The will also gave $4000 each to Adele Frankfort of 550 West 157th street and Fannie Plase of 2513 Seventh avenue, and divided the residue in seven parts, of which six go to children and one to Flora W. Matthews of Saranac.—[New York Times.

YEAST, NOT BREATH

Other day some honored visitors paid a call at the Pathfinder plant. They were shown around, and after they were through one of them was heard to remark to another: "Everybody employed by the Pathfinder seems to have been drinking; they all smelt strongly of liquor. I would never have thought it." Rather than have our readers think we are as wealthy as all that, we hasten to explain that there is a big yeast factory just opposite the Pathfinder building, and that the odors coming fro mthis factory at times are strongly alcoholic. So when you visit the Pathfinder and you think the strictly abstemious editors have been doing anything anti-Volsteadian, remember that it is only the yeast factory you smell.—[Pathfinder.

BOBBED HAIR

Craze Result of Clever Promotion by Beauty Shops

Bobbed haired American girls will be buying their hair back soon at snug prices.

Of course, it may not be their own hair, but, in that case, some other faid one will be paying a good sum for the tresses which young woman No. 1 so gladly relinquished not long since.

In other words, the boobed-hair craze is merely the result of some clever promotion on the part of the beauty shops.

That's the report of one habitue of the beauty shops in many larger cities who thought it safe to divulge the information in Defiance, O., in the belief it "wouldn't get out." According to this information, the beauty shop proprietors have given her the following story:

"Receipts began to dwindle when the 'rat' and the 'switch' and the 'transformation' went out of style. So, to put matters on a bedrock foundation (no reference to the head intended), the bobbed-hair fad was pushed energetically. Every one entering a beauty shop was given a comprehensive argument on the desirability of short hair. That campaign is now at its height.

"And, in anticipation of the reaction, there now are appearing the most ornate combs and transformations. How can they be worn? Only with an elaborate coiffure."—[Exchange.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Williams, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Mayer, delightfully entertained members of the First Christian Church choir on a recent evening at the Williams home at 1416 North Broadway. The large living-rooms were like a beautiful flower garden with masses of summer posies. A musical program offered by Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hummel and Will Gallienne, accompanied by Mrs. E. Thompson, was varied with games and contests which were particularly enjoyed and prizes of beautiful gladiolas and velvety dahlias were received by Mrs. Maud Lash, Mrs. A. V. Napier and Mr. Gallienne. At a late hour Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Mayer served delicious refreshments to the following: Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Knights, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hummel, Mr. and Mrs. Will Gallienne of Huntington Beach, the Rev. and Mrs. F. T. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Merle Morris, Mr. and Mrs. A. V. The G.A.R. hall was the scene of a delightful entertainment last week when the Shiloh Circle, Ladies of the G.A.R., entertained with a splendid program, the Woman's Relief Corps. The affair was in charge of Mrs. Martha Crane of Garden Grove. The program consisted of piano, vocal and violin solos, and clever readings given by various local talented musicians. At the close of the entertainment Mrs. Ludwig, president of the corps, introduced Mr. and Mrs. Noah S. Long of Santa Ana, who celebrated their golden wedding anniversary a few days later. As is the custom of the corps, the couple was presented with a gold piece, which, in turn, Mr. Long presented to the chairman of the "bean" dinner committee, to be used with that fund for the big pork and bean dinner given annually during the encampment at Huntington Beach.

smile; then the jail door swung open and she disappeared—perhaps forever as a free human being.

In a way it was inexpressibly silly and cheap. But in another way it was ghastly.

You always think of this Ziegfeld walk in connection with nights in roof gardens, with laughter, song and white linen tablecloths; with hurrying waiters and the tinkle of ice in tall glasses.

There was something indescribably grotesque and horrible, seeing her walk that way out there in the dirt of a street corner, with gaping crowds of Mexicans and loafers for an audience—walking with the silken sweep of gilded frivolity—into a dungeon.

Some one has written that Mrs. Phillips is a typical chorus girl. She is anything but that. The average chorus girl is a bonehead with lusty legs and a fearful and wonderful appetite. She cries and chews gum—and eats. She may be rough, but she is usually soft—soft of head, heart and muscle.

There is nothing soft about Mrs. Phillips. She is hard. She looks dangerous. Mrs. Phillips came straight toward us as she walked across to the jail.

As she came near a large, vigorous gentleman next to me instinctively shrank back into the crowd. It was the same instinct that makes it impossible for anyone to hold his hand against a window pane when a rattlesnake strikes at it from the other side of the glass. I do not wish to compare the lady with the reptile family. I mention it simply by way of illustration: to show the instinctive recognition of something dangerous in this girl's appearance and personality.

Mrs. Phillips isn't as pretty as you expect her to be; she is too fierce. Her face gives the impression of being sharp and pointed. In moments of emotion, this effect is heightened. She has been compared to a tiger. She doesn't convey that impression to me. She has more the cold ferocity and belligerence of a falcon or an eagle. She has that same darting look. That same sense of hardness and deadliness.

It is evident that she is lacking an imagination. That accounts for her self-possession. One of the most extraordinary features of this case is that she could have driven home in the murdered woman's automobile. Especially that she should, in that terrible moment, have found no difficulty in managing the mechanism of a car utterly at variance with one she had been used to driving.

Lack of imagination would account for her sleeping the sleep of an undisturbed mind in the jail at Tucson. She is only worried by the dangers that she can actually see.

You can't rightfully call her a primitive woman, because primitive women are intensely imaginative. This girl is literal, down-right and stark in her directness. The greatest qualities of high courage, like most abject cowardice, come from an overdose of imagination. Mrs. Phillips has the bristling, war-like terrible courage that comes to those who do not think much, but act from instinct.

My psycho-analytic friends say that, if she did do this murder, it was because of an abnormally developed subconscious mind. Their theory is that she may have intended some harm to the victim, but that, at the sight of the blood, her subconscious mind simply leaped out with a yell and took possession of her, turning her into a momentary demon. They say that, if it was murder, it was doubtless, in a measure, an impersonal crime; that the conscious part of her mind was a mere spectator.

Compared with her, Madalynne is tame tea. I can imagine the gentle, forgiving, mournful expression that would have been on Madalynne is artful and clever, who was confronting a crowd she feared was about to lynch her that Sunday afternoon.

Madelynne is artful and clever. Mrs. Phillips is crude and ferocious.

As heroines of sordid drama, Madalynne is Ethel Barrymore in "Declasse;" Mrs. Phillips is Ruth Roland or somebody in "The Clutching Hand."

HOW FAMOUS AUTHORS WORK

was a luxurious private home. The writers had it decorated by Penryn Stanlaws. It is cool and quiet and restful, with an air of peace and the odor of success.

At luncheon time it is one of the most interesting places in the world. Tables are set on the wide, open porches—the shimmer of white linen and crystal against the green of the lawns with the shaded boulevard beyond. At one table, perhaps, you will see Rob Wagner in an argument with Al Cohn, the play broker, and Louis Sherwin, the dramatic critic who was kidnaped by the screen from New York. At another you will hear Konrad Bercovici telling gypsy stories to Peter B. Kyne.

Except that the talk simply sizzles with epigram and penetrating analysis, you would never know that these men were big stars of the writing game.

WRITERS ARE BUSINESS MEN

The most outstanding fact about the authors' colony, as it gathers here and elsewhere, is the utter absence of pose. No queer clothes or soul yearnings.

The modern literary man is a business man engaged in writing.

Perhaps the three most successful writers of the day are Montague Glass, Rupert Hughes and Peter B. Kyne. They all live here. They are fair samples of the literary stars of today.

Montague Glass, the creator of Potash and Perlmutter, lives in Oak Knoll, Pasadena. With his short stories, plays and pictures, he probably makes the most money of anyone in the writing colony. He is a thorough business man. In fact, he was a young lawyer in New York before he began writing. Potash and Perlmutter were his clients. Every day, Abe and Mawruss used to come into his office to wrangle over some absurd trifle, calling each other terrible names and usually going out with their arms around each other. He got the name "Potash" from the sign he saw over a little store on Lower Broadway, and "Perlmutter" from another sign. Mr. Glass is an accomplished musician and a very charming man.

Peter B. Kyne is another author who has reduced writing to business principles. He has an office in a business block in Hollywood. His "studio" is decorated with shiny office desks, letter files, a card index and two typewriters. Every morning at exactly 9 o'clock he breezes in, dictates his business correspondence to a stenographer for half an hour, then pounds out his day's fiction work on a typewriter. He writes it treble-spaced, goes over it with a pencil, edits it and turns it over to his stenog to copy. He never sees the manuscripts after that. The next he knows of the story is when he reads it in the printed page. His secretary also is a trained research expert. "Find out what a Spanish family dinner was like in 1845," growls the author. The next morning when he comes to work she has the complete data on his desk. Mr. Kyne contends that an author does not depend upon inspiration any more than a dentist. If he can write at all, he can write anywhere, any time.

HOW HUGHES WORKS

Rupert Hughes is said to be getting the highest prices ever paid to any author for magazine stories. He writes always at night and in long hand. His best stuff is usually turned out between midnight and 4 a.m. He is not a consistant preformer, as racing men say. Sometimes he has written a story in thirty-six hours: he spent eight years writing one. Often he works hours, when he is writing a novel, trying a phrase a passage describing a bit of scenery or telling of the emotion that sweeps over the face of one of his characters. He has a curious superstition. He always writes the last few words of every story standing up. He says he gets some of his plots from his own life: sometimes from a chance incident.

One of the most interesting figures in the literary colony is Frank E. Woods. You don't see his name so often in print, but he has a hand in most of the screen stories and many of the plays that are written. Incidentally he is the father and president of the Writers' Club. Frank is the official assuager of all human grief. Every author who has run foul of an obstreperous plot and every young lady star whose temperament has been ruffled, dashes to Frank Woods and gets smoothly ironed out. He is the grand Poo Bah of all the Lasky productions and has had perhaps a greater part than any other one person in advancing the motion-picture industry.

Gertrude Atherton is a hard systematic literary worker. When she gets the inspirational "hunch," she disappears from all haunts that have known her. Nobody knows where she goes and she can't be reached by telephone, telegraph or United States mail. When she finally comes out for air, they know her story is finished. She writes on a small probable typewriter that works with a clatter like an aamatic thrashing machine. The amount of noise that emerges therefrom caused one wag to remark that it must be easier to write a grand opera than a "silent drama" on it.

Frank R. Adams, author of "The Time, the Place and the Girl," "A Stubborn Cindrella" and some fourteen other big stage successes is a member of the Writers' Club and lives in Los Angeles most of the year. He is just now spending the summer in a Michigan summer resort of which he is mayor. He is one of the few successful playwrights who ever turned his back on dramatic writing to take up short story writing. When in Los Angeles he always hires a down-town office and goes to work like any other business man. He writes all his stories with an enormous pen, about the size of a scoop-shovel. He turns his manuscripts over to a secretary to copy. There is an interesting story in this secretary. He is a boy about 17 years old. Mr. Adams is teaching him to write. Every week he turns out one short story which is criticised and re-written, then laid away—like De Maupassant. To this labor of love, Mr. Adams has attached one string. he has stipulated that, if his pupil turns out to be a literary success, he in turn, is to take some boy as a pupil and pass along the torch.

HER CHINA SILK GOWN

Rita Weiman is willing to take a long chance on being considered eccentric; but she insists she has to have certain conditions to write. Especially conditions of color. When she writes, it is always in an exquisite Chinese kimono of apple green silk the border of which is embroidered in amethist.

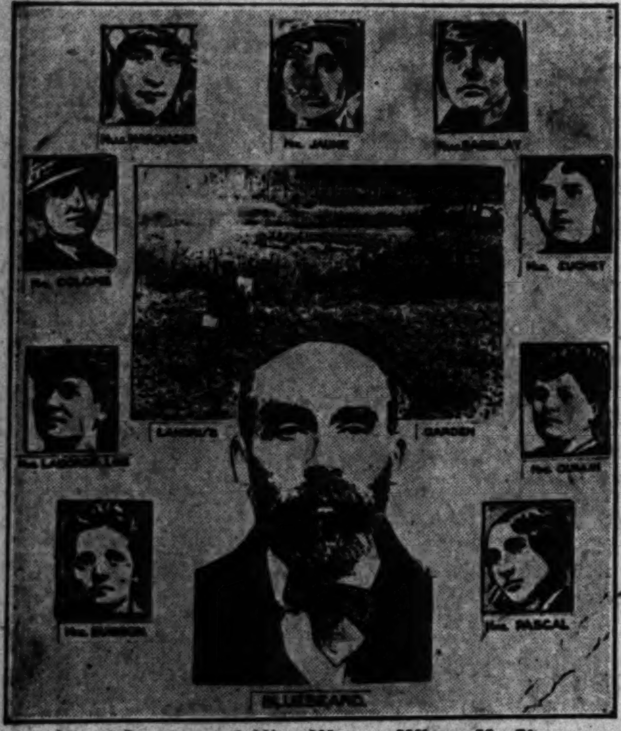
Bluebeard and Nine Known Victims



Henri Landru and Nine Women Whom He Slew

In the center is a photograph of the garden at the rear of Landru's death house at Gambais. Excavations in this garden produced some of the grisly evidence that led to his conviction.

LANDRU AGAIN ESCAPES

Cunning Monster Evades Close Questions and Poisons Another Victim

BY WILLIAM LE QUEUX

(The relatives of Mme. Cuchet, one of Landru's first victims, were by this time close on his trail. Her brother-in-law wrote him a letter demanding within three days an explanation of Landru's suspicious conduct and the fact that he had in his possession women's clothing, many motor licenses and the identification papers of a considerable number of women.)

BLUEBEARD'S CHAMBER

Whenever the amazing criminal Landru felt himself treading upon thin ice, he acted with bold audacity. If danger threatened, he became calm, affecting an injured innocence so apparently genuine as to at once disarm suspicion. His ability to act as though in perfect good faith and honesty carried him across many a pitfall into which a less able criminal would undoubtedly have fallen.

The day following the receipt of Monsieur Friedmann's letter, he called upon his victim's brother-in-law, expressing his extreme regret that he had been absent on business in Lyons—from which city, be it remembered, he wrote to the police at Mantes—and had only just returned.

Monsieur Friedmann was in anything but an amiable mood. His wife had long ago denounced Landru as an escroc, and had urged her sister to leave him. Landru knew that, and at once pointed out the fact to Monsieur Friedmann.

"I certainly do not like the tone of your letter," he told him frankly. "Mme Cuchet and Andre have gone to London, probably influenced by your wife. She has left me, and I am deserted and desolate. And yet you seem to insinuate that I am a swindler! You speak of the motor licenses your wife found. Certainly, I deal in motor cars, and many licenses pass through my hands. Surely you have known that fact."

"But the women's clothes?" asked Monsieur Friedmann.

"Oh! I have lots. I often buy the household goods of women, and frequently have boxes of clothing. Every dealer has," laughed Landru.

"And the identification papers of women? There were five in the trunk my wife examined, and some letters. She showed them to Mme. Cuchet."

"Oh! I'm glad she did," said Landru, quite unperturbed. "Women's papers often fall into my hands, because, sometimes, when a woman sells all her belongings, she does so with an intention of effacing her identity. It is done in Paris daily. It is quite easy, as you know, to get fresh identity papers—if you know the ropes."

"Well, I am not at all satisfied," declared Monsieur Friedmann, whom I later on interviewed, and learned of this conversation. "If Mme. Cuchet had gone to London she would certainly have written to her sister."

CLEVER EVASIONS

"No, I don't think she would," declared the clever criminal. "You do not know the secret that I learnt only ten days before she left me—that she was an agent of the contra-espionage department of the Ministry of War. She told me so in strictest confidence—and I now only betray it because of your allegations against me. I tell you that Mme. Cuchet and her son ahave gone to London as secret agents, at orders of the Ministry, in order to follow a woman spy who has left Paris for London. It is because of that I am confident of their return."

This statement appealed to Monsieur Friedmann. He confessed to me that Landru, though suspected from the very beginning, cleverly adopted such an attitude of injured innocence that eventually he withdrew his threat, and begged forgiveness from him for having written that letter.

Landru departed in high spirits. Next day he motored to Mantes, where he called at the Bureau of Police, apologized for his absence, and asked if they desired to question him further regarding the smoke from his chimney of which neighbours had complained.

Again the great criminal, by his frankness and good humor, disarmed suspicion, and later he spent an hour or so at "The Lodge," at Vernouillet, of which he had kept the key.

He went around the house, busily placing it in order, removing the dust with an old towel which he took from the kitchen. He was preparing the House of Death to receive yet another victim!

He worked at cleaning up the place till dusk, and then, racing back to Neuilly in his car, he spent the night quietly with his wife and family.

For four days he remained with them, his brain busily plotting. Then, telling Mme. Landru that he was compelled to travel on business to Biarritz, he left and returned to his "nest of love."

NEW PLOT HATCHES

The police who patrolled the little town of Vernouillet, under the police of Mantes, were quite satisfied with his explanations regarding the smoke, therefore, the way was open for the middle-aged South American widow, Madame Labord-Line, or "Bresil," as he termed her in his famous note book.

A week after his return to "The Lodge," he called upon her in his car and took her motoring out to Fontainebleau, where they lunched at the Hotel de France, and then strolled into the historic palace, nearly opposite. She knew him as Monsieur Cuchet—for he had actually had the audacity to adopt the name of the women he had murdered! On the following day she went to the Rue des Petits-Champs, when he persuaded her to hand over all her furniture for him to dispose of, assuring her that he could at the moment obtain very high prices for her. And she, under the influence of his charming personality, foolishly believed him.

Two days later, he sold the lot to a dealer at Batignolles. The day after, he invited her out to spend the week-end in his little trou at Vernouillet. The day was the 15th of June. On the 16th there remained no trace of her, and none has ever been discovered. But is was proved that his profit was about £57—a platry sum, surely, for a woman's life!

As I study the mass of reports in those formidable dossiers, which would take months to read every would, I have come to the conclusion that he was rather taken by the South American widow. By some means she had attracted him, for he had kept in touch with her for an unusually long space of time.

Briefly I tell my readers, without fear of contradiction for my assertion is supported by facts which came to the knowledge of the Surete after the trial at Versailles, that on the very night that Madame Labord-Line stepped from the arch-assassin's car in the narrow street of Vernouillet, she fell dead in that same little salle-a-manger in which Madame Cuchet and her son had writhed their death agonies. Landru used the same poison as before, and at 2 o'clock that morning he placed the body of his victim in the swift-running Oise River, whence nearly a year afterwards the remains were recovered five miles away and buried as a person unknown.

At the trial, the disappearance of this lady was never cleared up to the satisfaction of the court. There were many conflicting statements, but the fact nevertheless remained—a fact we now know—that Landru, having sold her possesions, kept her papers of identity among his effects. Why, nobody can tell.

But while Landru was toying with the affections of the South American lady, he had been making ardent pretense of love for a certain elderly but low-bred woman called Guillin.

Landru, though threatened by Monsieur Friedmann and suspected

Without this gown, her art would simply refuse to "jell."

Anna Yezierska who leaped into fame from the sweatshops of New York's East Side with the publication of "Hungry Hearts" finds writing tough work. She writes only when she feels an irresistible impulse to express herself on paper. When the fever is burning she works terrifically—long, terrible hours and says she prays as she works.

Richard Walton Tully, author of "The Bird of Paradise," says he has to have music to work by. Nobody can find out whether Richard is kidding or not, but anyhow he says he has to have somebody standing by ready to ladle music into the phonograph in order for his art to function.

Governor Morris always begins work at 8 o'clock in the morning and stops at eleven to play tennis. If the story sticks, he stops again and either plays tennis or rides horseback.

One of the most terrific workers of the literary colony is Gordon Ray Young, the author of "Hurricane Williams" and other South Sea stories. He lives in an attractive house on the top of a hill overlooking Elysian Park. He seldom leaves it. When he starts working on a story, he gets "clear under" and works ten to twelve hours a day. He composes on a typewriter and works very rapidly.

Perley Poore Sheehan, author of "We Are French," "The Whispering Chorus" and many other stories is one of the familiar figures at the Writers' Club. He dictates all his stories to a stenographer, as does C. Garden Sullivan and many other well-known writers.

Sheehan and his charming French wife, live on Fairfax avenue. They speak French altogether at home, even if you don't believe it when you think of his last name.

Sheehan and his wife entertain at Sunday evening suppers served in the garden of their beautiful home. It is here, too, that the author works.

Gene Stratton Porter, of late years has dictated her novels. She says it was hard for her to learn to do it, but she kept at it, and until she got the hang.

Elmer Harris dictates much of his stuff, but uses a trusty typewriter, also.

Frances Marion, who has had the unique experience of having been a recognized screen beauty, a star writer on a newspaper, a successful novelist, a director of some of Mary Pickford's best pictures, and the highest paid scenario writer in the world, has a peculiar method of working. She pencils out the high spots and roughly outlines difficult passages, introductions, etc.; then fills in the actual words by dictating to a stenographer. Miss Marion is the wife of Fred Thompson, who is an ordained preacher and screen actor; he became internationally famous a few years ago by winning the all-around athletic championship of the world.

Although Sam Blythe lives most of the time in Carmel, he spends much of his time in Los Angeles, and is a member of the Writers' Club. He writes on an aged and decrepid typewriter. He beats it until it gives forth strange looking combinations of letters that nobody in the world but one trusted stenographer can decipher. She divides up the jumble into words of appropriate length.

A great majority of the successful writers of the day have been newspaper men. That's why so many of them can write any old place or at any time. George Ade, however, likes to be where it is quiet. He dictates all his stories to a stenographer.

HAROLD BELL WRIGHT

Elinor Glyn writes her superheated works of art longhand and always works at night. When in the midst of the fires of composition, she spends most of her days taking naps; then an auto ride, and at it again all night. Hollywood Hotel must be a furious place when Elinor's genius begins to burn.

Thompson Buchanan, author of "Civilian Clothes," lives in Berkeley Square, with a retinue of servants. He always carries home from Lasky studio with him a mysterious bag of scripts, and comes back with them in the morning. One of the biggest fictions in the business is that he reads them all when he takes them home.

His wife is one of the most beautiful women in the world. She had intended becoming a professional singer, but gave it up. However, her training was excellent, and one of the pleasures the guests of the Buchanans experience is in hearing her sing. They have one little daughter, who seems to be inheriting her father's gift for writing, as well as her mother's beauty.

Aside from the methodical bag of scripts, Buchanan works somewhat spasmodically.

Konrad Berkovici, author of the Rumanian Gypsy stories, is a newcomer in the Hollywood literary colony. He writes all his stories longhand, and says that the chief obstacle to literary art in California is the charm of Charley Chaplin. He finds Charley so fascinating he has to go over to see him and Charley finds his Gypsy stories as entrancing that they keep each other up all night—literally, all night—talking, and go home at daylight.

Jim Tully, the author of "Emmet Lawler" and other stories of Hoboland, writes on a small portable typewriter. He likes to keep in contact with the edges of the life he has known, and every once in a while, forsakes his friends and disappears into the mysterious depths of the underworld, coming back with strange tales of strange experiences. He is the Jack London of the literary colony, although his stories are truer to the conditions of which he writes than London's.

Harold Bell Wright, never mingles with the other literary people here, living most of the time in Arizona. He has a peculiar method of working. He outlines all the situations of his novels on cards, which he posts on wire racks. For months he keeps elaborating and changing these notes. By the time he is ready to begin the actual writing, the whole story is outlined to the smallest detail of conversation.

WROTE "PREDESTINATED"

Stephen French Whitman, author of "Predestinated," which was considered to be one of the finest novels ever written by an American, is a member of our literary colony, but is just now traveling in Italy. He also has a peculiar method. He outlines a story approximately in blocks of 500 words each. For each character he has a different colored pencil. By making what amounts to little maps he keeps the characters straight and in the right proportion. He works very slowly and carefully.

Cleveland Moffatt has come to Los Angeles to live, but is seldom seen at the Writers' Club. He does much of his work in the library of the Athletic Club. Having been a journalist all his life, he works easily and rapidly. He has become very much interested in sociological conditions in Los Angeles, and is trying to bring about some reforms in prison conditions.

J. W. Schultz, author of "My Life as an Indian," divides his time between a cabin in the mountains of Arizona and Los Angeles. He does all his work on a small portable typewriter. He writes 1000 words a day, no more, no less, and his finished work in consequence has a charm that is Stevensonesque.

Zane Grey lives in Altadena and is seldom seen in Los Angeles. All his novels are written in his home there.

Among the younger writers, two have been the literary sensations of the year—Adele Rogers St. John and Emma Lindsay Squier. The former, whose stories are in furious demand by the magazines, is a daughter of Earl Rogers, who died here recently. Emma Lindsay Squier, author of "Wild Heart," is perhaps the most popular nature writer whose work is now appearing. Both had their first training on Los Angeles newspapers, Miss Squier having been society editor of The Times. Both work with great rapidity and can work anywhere they can find typewriters and elbow room.

OCCASIONAL RESIDENTS

Sir Gilbert Parker lives at the Beverly Hills Hotel when he is in California. His wife is sometimes with him, but she is a globe-trotter, and he never quite knows when he is going to see her.

Sir Gilbert is proper and methodical and precise in all his goings-in and comings-out. He works according to rote.

Basil King is nearly blind. He met with a disaster a few years ago which ruined his eyes so that he has always to wear dark glasses. But he is the gentlest and kindest man in the world, always anxious to hold out a helping hand to struggling writers.

King is the friend of dozens of convicts in the prisons. It is from these, he says, that he learned about life, really. He visits them often.

The author's niece is his stenographer. He has to dictate everything he writes. His home is in Boston, but he loves traveling and has spent much of his time in Los Angeles.

Channing Pollock was here for a few weeks, putting on his new play, "The Fool." He is a radiant soul, bubbling with friendliness and enthusiasm. Pollock lived at the Athletic Club while here, but his home is on Long Island. There's an acre of roses in front of the place. His wife is Marble Helen Pollock, a writer, and he has a daughter named Helen, too.

"I get up at 8 every morning," he said, "and my wife takes me out for a walk. Then she brings me back and chains me to my desk. You know how it is about writing—you put it off and put it off. Why, I can make cleaning my typewriter last for an hour! Finally I get down to work, and work until 2 or 3 in the afternoon without stopping."

Pollock is deeply devoted to his wife. Their romance was an odd one. Both were working very hard at the time they were engaged. He was writing "The Pit," and she was working on a newspaper. They had no time even for writing letters, much less seeing each other. So they used to send each other telegrams—"Read Blank's love sonnet on page blank tonight, dear!"

Both were working very hard, but finally Miss Marble went away for a rest. Pollock managed a day off. He telegraphed his fiancee: "I'm coming up to marry you today!" Miss Marble telegraphed back: "Come and see if I care!"

MISSION PLAY DRAWS NEAR SEASON'S END

NEW PLAYHOUSE TO MAKE CONTINUOUS SHOWINGS POSSIBLE

Only seven days more to see the Mission Play in the old San Gabriel Playhouse, where the famous historic pageant drama of California has held forth since its initial performance eleven years ago. Despite the pleas of numerous business organizations, clubs, fraternities and the general public, Mr. McGroarty emphatically declares that it will be impossible to hold the Mission Play open a single day later than the 30th inst., which has been set as the closing date after a season's run of seven months.

"Not only must the Mission Play positively close July 30, for this season, but it will be the last time the play will be produced in the old San Gabriel playhouse," answered Mr. McGroarty with a mysterious smile, when pressed for an answer as to why the Mission Play could not be now made an all-year-round institution of the Southland.

A solution of the mystery has been found behind the walls of the old mission compound. Here crews of workmen are busily piling adobe bricks about huge steel girders, architects are studying the lines of old San Antonio Mission, seeing that no detail is overlooked in making the new mission playhouse the exact replica of the grandest of all the missions of California. The Mission Play will re-open next year in its new playhouse, where there will be more than twice the present seating capacity; and it will stay open the year round.

EFFICIENCY FIRST

An applicant for work at the Ford plant asked a veteran Ford employee if it were true that the company was always finding methods of speeding up production by using fewer men. The veteran replied:

"Most certainly. In fact," he continued, "I just had a dream which illustrates the point. Mr. Ford was dead and I could see the pallbearers carrying the body. Suddenly the procession stopped. Mr. Ford had come to life. As soon as the casket was opened he sat upright, and, on seeing six pallbearers, cried out at once: 'Put this casket on wheels and lay off five men.'"—[Wall Street Journal.

THUS SPEAK MANY WHO SEEK ADVICE FROM THE WORLD'S GREATEST SPIRITUALIST ORDAINED, NATIONAL INDEPENDENT
SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION.
ADVISER,
REV. CHARLES NEWMAN,
705 WEST 6TH ST.
ISN'T THERE SOMETHING YOU WOULD LIKE TO KNOW?
THERE IS NO DEATH.
THERE ARE NO DEAD.

Those gone before us are trying to reach us. Would you like to receive a message? The news may be good or bad, like a letter from home. But you will get it straight, honest, as received. You may like it or not. The world's greatest men have believed in Spiritualism. Moses, Daniel, Elijah, The Talmud, Safa Tora. The Bible speaks of the living dead. Justice Brewer, Judge Brandeis, Wm. McKinley, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Edison, Wm. T. Stead, Conan Doyle.

The World War was predicted 5 years before it came by a Spiritualist. Rev. Charles Newman's prediction of Judge Hiram Dannal's son's death during the World War, given at Judge Dannal's home, Goldsborough, N. C., 3 years before death on the battle field.

The end of the World War was predicted before the grand jury of Santa Cruz, California. Newman told the grand jury the war would end in the middle part of November, one year before it ended, and it came to pass as he told the grand jury. George Smith, District Attorney, Santa Cruz, called Newman before the grand jury to ascertain when the war would end. Rev. Charles Newman is a true Spiritualist who gives you the plain, honest facts as they come to him.

FOR SERVICE AS RAILROAD MACHINISTS, BLACKSMITHS, SHEET METAL WORKERS, COPPERSMITHS, CAR INSPECTORS, BOILERMAKERS, ELECTRICIANS, PIPEFITTERS, TINNERS, CAR REPAIRERS, HELPERS, ALL CLASSES.

UNDER STRIKE CONDITIONS.

BEST EXPLAINED BY CHAIRMAN BEN W. HOOPER OF THE UNITED STATES RAILROAD BOARD IN HIS STATEMENT OF JULY 1, READING AS FOLLOWS:

"IN THIS CASE THE CONFLICT IS NOT BETWEEN THE EMPLOYER AND THE OFFENDING EMPLOYEES. THE PEOPLE OF THE COUNTRY, THROUGH AN ACT OF CONGRESS SIGNED BY PRESIDENT WILSON, ESTABLISHED A TRIBUNAL TO DECIDE SUCH DISPUTES OVER WAGES AND WORKING CONDITIONS WHICH ARE SUBMITTED TO IT IN A PROPER MANNER. IT IS THE DECISION BY THE TRIBUNAL AGAINST WHICH THE SHOPCRAFTS ARE STRIKING.

"REGARDLESS OF ANY QUESTION OF THE RIGHT OF THE MEN TO STRIKE, THE MEN WHO TAKE THE STRIKERS' PLACES ARE MERELY ACCEPTING THE WAGES AND WORKING CONDITIONS PRESCRIBED BY A GOVERNMENTAL TRIBUNAL, AND ARE PERFORMING A PUBLIC SERVICE. THEY ARE NOT ACCEPTING THE WAGES AND WORKING CONDITIONS WHICH AN EMPLOYER IS TRYING TO IMPOSE. FOR THIS REASON, PUBLIC SENTIMENT AND FULL GOVERNMENTAL POWER WILL PROTECT THE MEN WHO REMAIN IN THEIR POSITIONS AND NEW MEN WHO MAY COME IN."

ADEQUATE PROVISIONS HAVE BEEN MADE FOR THE FULL PROTECTION OF ALL NEW EMPLOYEES THE SAME AS OLD EMPLOYEES WHO HAVE REMAINED LOYALLY AT WORK. APPLICANTS SHOULD APPLY AT SOUTHERN PACIFIC EMPLOYMENT BUREAU, 65 MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO, OR ANY OF THE FOLLOWING OFFICERS: SUPERINTENDENT, (3RD ST. Cause and Effect

The amateur dramatic society was preparing for a performance of "As You Like It."

The dress rehearsal took place in a garden that was overlooked by a building in the course of erection. As the amateurs postured and chanted the bard's beautiful lines, bricklayers above them laid bricks, carpenters planed boards and masons chipped stones.

Towards the end of the play, during a pause in the rehearsal, a voice from the building operation was hear to say gravely: "I prithee, malapert, pass me yonder trowel."—[Pearson's Weekly.

The Convert

There is another story about a poet who took a Broadway chorus girl to the Metropolitan Galleries. She gazed about at the fine paintings and listened to the inspired eulogies of the verse-maker. As they were leaving she turned to him and said: "Well, I ain't taken up culture yet, but when I do I'll make it hum."—[St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

DOUBLE DEATH SCHEME FAILS

Aged Man Fires at Wife, Then Ends His Life

Shots Intended for Woman Go Wild

Long Illness Said to Have Caused Rash Act

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

POMONA, July 22.—After firing two shots at his aged wife, neither of which took effect, William H. Symes, 73 years old, turned the weapon upon himself with fatal results. The shooting occurred at the home of the couple, 700 North Park avenue, this afternoon.

When police arrived, shortly after the shots were fired, they found Mrs. Symes in a hysterical condition. There were three exploded cartridges in the revolver, which was a .32 caliber weapon, and one unexploded shell which showed marks of the firing pin upon it.

Neighbors heard none of the shots and Mrs. Symes, who is hard of hearing, did not hear the first two, which the police believe were fired at her with intent to make it a double tragedy. Upon coming into the house shortly after the old man had fired the first cartridges, Mrs. Symes, says she saw her husband with the revolver pressed against his head. She attempted to knock the gun from his shaking hand but was a second too late, for the third shot rang out and her life's companion crumpled in her arms.

Mr. Symes has been an invalid for several years and for the past six months has been unable to walk, spending his time either in bed or in a chair in the house. Mrs. Symes said she left him sitting in a chair in the living-room this morning and went out in the back yard to burn some trash and upon returning in a few minutes, saw him with a revolver to his head. Running to him, Mrs. Symes said she grabbed her husband's arm and tried to pull the gun away.

The body was taken to the Todd & Reeves morgue. It will be held pending the Coroner's decision whether an inquest will be necessary.

The couple have no relatives, but rented a part of their house to a Mrs. Kelly, who left this morning shortly before the tragedy, for Long Beach, but was notified to return immediately to ascertain whether or not she may be able to throw some light on the case.

GAMBLE MAY DIE, IS BELIEF

Son of Soap Manufacturer is Seriously Injured in Accident in Massachusetts

Dr. Clarence Gamble of Pasadena, 28-year-old son of David B. Gamble, 4 Westmoreland Place, one of the multi-millionaire partners of Proctor and Gamble, Ivory Soap manufacturers, was believed fatally injured yesterday, according to telegraph advices. An airplane in which he was flying near Framingham, Mass., crashed to earth.

The plane, which was bought by Dr. Gamble from the Italian government on June 1, was to have been used for a transcontinental flight to Los Angeles which was to have been started today.

Dr. Gamble's injuries included fractures of the left leg, clavicle and nose, concussion of the brain and internal injuries. At the Framingham Hospital it was said last night he probably would die.

The parents of the Miller boys are now on their way to Los Angeles, where they were to have met their sons.

The pilot of the plane, Zens R. Miller of Boston, was pinned under the wreckage and killed, and Ralph K. Miller, the pilot's brother, escaped with cuts and bruises.

Dr. Gamble, who is not married, was graduated from the Harvard Medical School a year ago, and has just finished a year as an interne at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

He is the youngest of three sons of Mr. and Mrs. Gamble.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Preliminary steps toward negotiations for the funding of the French war debt to this country were virtually completed today at a conference of Undersecretary of the Treasury Gilbert with Jean V. Parmentier, director of finance of the French treasury.

Treasury officials said after the conference that the American debt funding commission would meet late next week to discuss with M. Parmentier the data on the financial condition of France, which was presented today to Mr. Gilbert.

QUESTIONS ARE UNSAFE IN WAR-TORN DUBLIN

Irish Free State Troops Shoot [illegible] But Correspondent Learns Not to Ask Why

BY S. FRED HOGUE
"Times" Staff Correspondent

[Mr. Hogue, who has been for many years attached to the [illegible] The Times, was sent to Europe by this journal to analyze [illegible] political conditions and interpret them for Times readers through [illegible] eyes. Few newspaper men in America are so well qualified by [illegible] and natural ability for such an exacting task. Long a [illegible] politics, Mr. Hogue is in an exceptional position to write with [illegible] subject. How Mr. Hogue prepares to make his exit from Dublin is [illegible] the following article, the first having dealt with the battle at the [illegible] Ed. Times.]

I must here record an incident showing one of the [illegible] alies of the Irish character. When I was leaving the [illegible] the boys who had refused to touch a penny of my [illegible] broken into the wine cellar and were serving champagne [illegible] also had looted the little cigar stand in the hotel and were [illegible] ing around boxes of cigarettes. They did not regard [illegible] things to eat and drink as looting.

At College Green I placed my grips on a jaunting cart and rode by a circuitous route to the Shellbourne.

I noticed that the porter at the entrance did not offer to open the door for me or to take my luggage. I spoke to him and he did not reply. A number of people were in the lobby, but no one was speaking. It was as though I had suddenly burst in upon a funeral service.

I looked about, and saw five boys in the uniform of the Free Staters, each carrying a rifle, going through the rooms. They were evidently searching the hotel.

WOMAN SCREAMS

Three of them walked up the wide stairway to the first landing. An instant afterward a rifle shot rang out and a woman uttered a wild scream.

I had seen enough of Ireland to know it is not safe at such times to ask questions. I sat down quietly in the lounge. At least twenty other men and women were about me. But not one made a single reference to the shot we had just heard.

For the first time, however, I saw eyes rolling restlessly and cheeks blanched by terror. The bullet of the assassin awakens more dread than gunfire in the street.

In about five minutes an ambulance pulled up before the hotel and a body clad in male attire was carried out and placed inside. Whether the victim was living or dead I do not know. Neither do I know the cause of the shooting.

It may have been a case of punishing a looter. The Free State government had issued a warning that morning that all looters were liable to be shot on sight.

I walked outside and found an English correspondent entering a light armored car of the Free Staters. He said they were going down to the Four Courts, that O'Connor and his forces had surrendered.

TROOPS FALL IN

I accompanied him, and we arrived just as O'Connor, the priests Dominic and Albert and about 130 irregulars were being lined up along the sidewalk.

It was a curious sight; but little heroic about it. These boys in badly-soiled civilian clothes, and unshaven faces, looked like they might be a bunch of toughs taken in a slum raid.

Most of them staggered as they walked. Two were fighting drunk and were resisting their comrades who were trying to pacify them.

Flames were rising higher about the buildings and only one wing and the dome were still standing.

I saw O'Connor, a heavy browed, sullen Irishman who looked like a lightweight prize fighter. At the time he was speaking to a Free State officer and laughing dejectedly.

Father Dominic wore a long beard and was dressed in the brown gown of his order. He was insisting on surrendering and two Free Staters were telling him that they would take him only as a voluntary prisoner.

Women kept running up to the prisoners, throwing their arms about them and kissing them. I presumed they were relatives. There were also jocular greetings between the rank and file of the Free Staters and the garrison. It reminded me of the winners and losers fraternizing after a tug of war.

Looking down the Liffey, I saw two swimmers making for the opposite bank, about a block away. I learned later they were two of the irregulars who made their escape when the others surrendered.

I entered with some other correspondents the quarters that the garrison had just vacated. Amid the empty bottles and other debris on the floor I spied something that interested me.

It was one of those coarse-haired, curled wigs that the high judges of the British law courts wear, part of the paraphernalia the justices abandoned when they fled.

I crammed it into the pocket of my overcoat and carried it away as a souvenir. It is on my head now as I write. I donned it an hour ago to have some fun with the hotel staff.

A few moments ago a maid knocked at the door. I bade her enter. But when she saw me in my big wig she gasped in astonishment.

"Pawdon, your worship," and courtesied as she retired. I suspect I shall become something of a mystery about the hotel.

Two photographers for London newspapers told me how so many members of the garrison came under the influence of liquor. They said that at least half the force refused to give up, said they would stay in the Four Courts and burn with them.

PLENTY OF BOOZE

Negotiations had lasted for more than an hour. During that time the Free Staters sent half a dozen cases of Irish whisky in to the garrison. Those who wanted to still fight were plied with liquor until they were too drunk to resist—a typically Irish way of effecting a surrender.

As all the cables were cut and I could wire nothing from Dublin I concluded to re-cross the channel and return to London. I had seen enough of civil war in Ireland. The vision of that little girl standing in the midst of gunfire and imploring her mother to "get up quick" kept dancing before my eyes. My judgment told me the leaders of the Free State party were doing the only thing possible to bring peace to Ireland. But my sympathies were with those boys and girls in Gresham.

I learned a local train was leaving at 5 o'clock for [illegible] the port of Dublin; and [illegible] boat would be crossing at [illegible] Another jaunting car [illegible] the suburban station [illegible] the train started. I [illegible] compartment in which [illegible] eight women and another [illegible]

We [illegible] yet wholly free.

Kingston was fairly [illegible] with suppressed excitement [illegible] Terror had arrived that [illegible] with two lorries of irregulars [illegible] motored down from Dublin [illegible] the Holyhead boat.

There were no Free [illegible] in Kingston, and a number [illegible] unteer companies of [illegible] were forming. Fighting [illegible] place at the Coast Guard [illegible] held by a Free State [illegible] and two had been killed.

Now it was lying off in the [illegible] nel; and there was some [illegible] to whether it would [illegible] chance of an irregular [illegible] pulling up to the wharf.

I checked my luggage [illegible] depot and started up [illegible] a place to dine. I noticed [illegible] ber of people looking at [illegible] ously, some with distinctly [illegible] eyes; and I reflected the [illegible] terror the unknown is [illegible] pected.

Even the policeman [illegible] ner looked at me sharply [illegible] tated before he directed [illegible] restaurant. Before a [illegible] a coarse-featured [illegible] rough attire was [illegible] group of about twenty [illegible] up with the irregulars.

"There's something [illegible] in Dublin," he shouted, [illegible] things as well. Let's [illegible] them."

I felt the eyes of [illegible] lowing me as I passed [illegible] recollection of that [illegible] Shellbourne gave me a [illegible] sudden insecurity.

Passing the door of a [illegible] bacco shop, I stopped [illegible] my now depleted stock [illegible] The proprietor was an [illegible] low-voiced, timid-appearing old fellow, probably [illegible] age. I won his respect [illegible] ing what plainly appeared to be an extravagant [illegible] Ireland is a poor market [illegible] as they all smoke pipes [illegible] cigars are as poor as [illegible]

I started to chat with [illegible] serving me, telling him [illegible] a rather strenuous day [illegible] Reserved at first, he [illegible] friendly tone, asked me [illegible] the only chair in the [illegible] and told me he had [illegible] America.

We had talked [illegible] minutes, interrupted by [illegible] sional customer, when [illegible] considerably younger than [illegible] the unmistakable [illegible] "Merrie England" entered [illegible] rear door.

He presented her [illegible] and I offered my card [illegible] turned to the back room [illegible] rose to leave. He [illegible] should rest a few [illegible] as the boat was not due [illegible] for more than an hour.

FACT AND COMMENT

It is difficult to account for that strange perversity in human nature which will cause an entire city to spend a breathless week in discussion of a five-ounce hammer with which a jealous woman settled her quarrel, while the meager attention paid to the simultaneous arrival of an epoch-making and record-breaking "prosperity special" in the form of 12,800,000 pounds of locomotives, leaves it a fair inference that the bulk of our people are even yet unaware of this remarkable performance, with its tremendous bearing on the life and prosperity of millions of people in California and in the Western States.

That the "white spot" of the United States should have been the destination of the world's greatest shipment of locomotives is worthy of more than passing notice, at least in the city these mighty engines are to serve. That it is the first concrete evidence of the returning tide of production has been told in the scientific and commercial press throughout the country, to the enhancement of the white spot reputation of the new world port.

The twenty locomotives that came to Los Angeles within the last two weeks represent an accomplishment not possible at any period in the past for a number of reasons. They are of a type developed only within recent years, using oil for fuel, and they are the first twenty of a total order of 100 of these engines, ordered by the Southern Pacific with special reference to the steep grade hauls through the mountain passes of the Golden State. Each locomotive is provided with a "booster," another recent invention whereby its tractive power is increased 20 per cent on grades, enabling a single engine to do the work heretofore requiring a tandem.

These locomotives each weighed 320 tons in transit, while their weight in service, with water and oil for operation, is approximately 400 tons each. But, coming in as freight this train of twenty locomotives weighed 6400 tons, or a total of 12,800,000 pounds. It is the greatest shipment of locomotives, and its successful movement constitutes one of the biggest achievements in American transportation. Yet, of a contiguous population of nearly 1,000,000, 1000 would exaggerate the number who turned out to give it welcome when the city and Chamber of Commerce officials rendered it formal homage.

A Modern Achievement

Only under most modern conditions of railroad building and maintenance of way could this shipment have crossed the continent on schedule and without mishap. Roadbeds ballasted with stone; every tie and spike inspected; rails weighing 90 to 130 pounds to the foot, in place of the slender pipestems of thirty-pound rails, which characterized the earlier roads; bridges, trestles and culverts by the hundred along the route, all modernized to carry

NEW BUILDINGS IN FINE GROUP

Harvard School Starts Big Construction Program

Bids Now Being Received for Main Dormitory

Full Athletic Equipment to be Provided

Under the supervision of Architects Johnson, Kaufmann & Coate, plans for an extensive building program for the Harvard School for Boys, at 1601 South Western avenue, have been developed. The growth of the institution has been such that its present facilities are inadequate, and are being replaced by new units of permanent construction.

A comprehensive general plan for all of the proposed improvements has been devised, the plan being so developed as to provide ample parade grounds and athletic facilities. When the group is completed, it will consist of a number of attractive buildings facing the campus, parade ground and athletic field.

A quarter-mile track and 220-yard straightaway, as well as football field, baseball field, grand stand, and swimming pool and gymnasium are all part of the future scheme, because in the future, as well as in the past, the matter of games and athletics will be given proper attention.

The architecture for all new buildings is distinctly a product of Southern California, being based on Italian and modified Spanish traditions. The new chapel has been built for several years, the dining hall has been recently completed, and new bids are being taken on the dormitory building, which is the first unit of its kind to be erected. The building is of fireproof construction, and is planned along the most modern lines.

A splendid commons room will serve as a general lounge and living quarters. This room faces the campus and will be an important feature in the school life. The bedrooms are individual rooms, each student having a room to himself.

The bathrooms will be absolutely modern and will be finished in tile and marble, the object of the trustees being to have them stand as models of their kind. There will be two masters' apartments on each floor, by which means discipline and supervision will be facilitated.

Western Live-Stock Industry to be Studied

Prof. Christie of Purdue to Head Work

Utah Gives Support to Los Angeles as Market

Prof George I Christie

Progress toward the actual operation of a live-stock market in Los Angeles in connection with the survey of the union stockyards project, is the point of concentration of effort under the superintendence of E. S. McNaughton, who has the union stockyards angle of the big industrial enterprise under his direct supervision.

As stated a week ago, a survey of the Western States is to be made at once under direction of Prof. George I. Christie, head of the agricultural station of Purdue University. This survey will undertake to learn all existing facts on western stock raising and marketing; to uncover all the potentialities of stimulation and increase of this industry, especially through the stabilization of markets, methods and prices and transportation.

Prof. Christie arrived in Los Angeles last Thursday, and making his headquarters at the offices in the Pacific Electric Building started at once on plans for pursuing his investigations, in which he hopes to enlist the co-operation of all chambers of commerce, agricultural and breeders' associations, State and county officials directly concerned with stock raising, feeding, handling and transporting.

SUPPORT OF UTAH

On his way to Los Angeles, Prof. Christie spent four days in Salt Lake as the guest of the Chamber of Commerce of that city, which body, he states, placed itself squarely on record as indorsing the union stockyards project and made arrangements for a joint survey in Salt Lake, Juab and Millard counties of Utah, with Dr. R. N. Mead, chairman of the agricultural committee.

He also quotes L. B. Hampton, president of the chamber, as declaring for a policy that will place a million hogs on Northern Utah lands in place of the 100,000 now raised, and as declaring that the establishment of stock yards at Los Angeles will be welcomed and encouraged as a practical step in that direction.

John T. Caine, field manager for the Utah College of Agriculture, is also quoted by Prof. Christie as stating unequivocally that the salvation of the live-stock industry of Utah is largely dependent on the establishment and successful operation of Coast stockyards with their organized marketing, and that he regards the establishment of the Los Angeles yards as the solution of the problem.

President Gray and Vice-President Adams of the Union Pacific are quoted by Prof. Christie as stating that all possible support of the Union Pacific organization will be given the new yards at Los Angeles; and both stated that subsequent to a long and thorough inspection of the region tributary to and under the influence of the Salt Lake Line between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City, they are convinced this region is to become a great agricultural and live-stock feeder to the road and its Los Angeles terminal.

Lease on West Sixth Involves Large Rental

The three upper floors of the building at 217-219 West Sixth street, now occupied by the Chocolate Shop, have been leased for a period of fifteen years to the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank, according to an announcement made yesterday by J. R. Swan, realtor, agent in the transaction. The deal involved a total consideration of $270,000.

Alterations will be made on the building by the bank, which will use the space for its trust department. The Chocolate Shop has taken a lease on one of the stores in the new Metropolitan Theater at Sixth and Hill streets, and will move about August 1.

Through the same agency, a long term lease, involving a consideration in excess of $200,000, has also been taken by O. A. Olin, who will open a cafeteria at this location. Mr. Olin formerly operated restaurants in Idaho and Washington. The Cal Hirsch and Sons Mercantile Company were the lessors in the transaction.

Tenth and Main Corner Transferred

The northwest corner of Tenth and Main streets, 122 by 100 feet, has been sold by the Security Trust and Savings Bank to Peter Haber and J. I. Preluzsky, of the firm of Haber & Co., tailors, according to an announcement made by W. I. Hollingsworth & Co. The property, which is improved with a one-story building containing seven stores, was sold for $200,000.

The present building will be remodeled and renovated by the new owners, but no other improvements are contemplated at the present time, it is stated. A branch tailoring establishment may be opened in the building by the new owners, although this has not been definitely decided. This is the second recent sale by the Hollingsworth Company in this district, the same agents having recently sold the corner of Eleventh and Main to a local investor. Frank S. Kadletz and Clarence Norton of the Hollingsworth Company handled the transaction.

INSURANCE SERVICE IS EXTENDED

Local Company to Protect Titles Issued by the Kern County Abstract Company

The Title Insurance and Trust Company has entered into an underwriting agreement with the Kern County Abstract Company of Bakersfield, whereby all of the certificates of title issued in the future will be guaranteed by the local company. Under this arrangement, realtors, bankers and investors in real estate in Kern county will be afforded the same service as are those of Los Angeles, and the Kern County Abstract Company, in the guarantee of titles, will be supported by the resources of the big Los Angeles company. The Title Insurance and Trust Company, the largest title company west of Chicago, has a paid-in capital and surplus of $3,500,000.

This arrangement is not experimental since it has been in successful operation with the Union Title Company of San Diego for nineteen years. The Title Insurance and Trust Company will not open a branch at Bakersfield, but will have a representative there to care for its interests. Regular policies of title insurance will be issued by the Title Insurance and Trust Company on property located in Kern county.

The Kern County Abstract Company, capitalized at $100,000, is the leading title company of Kern county. It is headed by H. I. Tupman, while H. A. Yates is secretary. The arrangement with the San Joaquin Valley company is in line with the policy of the Title Insurance and Trust Company to extend its service to clients throughout Southern California, officials of the company said yesterday, and similar arrangements may be made in other counties contiguous to Los Angeles.

TRUCK COMPANY IN NEW BUILDING

H. J. Ruddle Company, Southern California agent for the Fageol truck, has moved to its new building now under course of construction at the southwest corner of Ninth and Towne. The lease involves a total rental of $42,000. The deal was handled by E. R. Beal of the business leasing department of the Charles G. Andrews Company.

NOW IN HARMONY WITH CENTRAL GOVERNMENT

Revolutionary Spirit Dies Out in State of Oaxaca; New Consul to Los Angeles Appointed

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

OAXACA (Mex.) July 22.—It is the expressed opinion of business men of Oaxaca that this State comes nearer being in harmony with the national administration now than at any time since the revolutionary period began, nearly twelve years ago.

Notwithstanding the fact that during nearly all of that time Gen. Felix Diaz, nephew of the late President Porfiro Diaz(has had in armed following in the more remote parts of Oaxaca, this revolutionary movement never gained serious headway and it was completely recently suppressed by the killing of Mario Ferrer, leader of the Diaz forces, and the wiping out of his armed band.

Ferrer had been giving trouble for some time, his most notable exploit being the blowing up with dynamite of a passenger train on the Mexican Southern Railroad, and the killing of twenty-nine persons. He and his band had raided many ranches and mining camps and were greatly feared by the people of the rural communities. So far as known here there is no other organized Diaz force in Southeastern Mexico. Business conditions here are improving and there is a greater feeling of security on the part of the people than for several years.

Following the downfall of President Diaz there was much sympathy felt here for him and the political element that he represented during his long incumbency as Chief Executive. This was due largely to the fact that he was a native of this State and that he had always shown an interest in the welfare of the people here, especially the Indian element from which he sprang. It was with the knowledge of this feeling that Gen. Felix Diaz, who was former chief of police of the City of Mexico, fled to Oaxaca when the revolution led by the late Francisco I. Madero Jr., resulted successfully. Diaz soon busied himself organizing a revolution of his own. For a time he was a man of considerable influence and importance in the State. For about five years following the triumph of the Madero revolution Oaxaca maintained a distinct and separate government, refusing to recognize all national authority.

Finally, the people of this part of the country got tired of the isolation and revolutionary situation and Diaz began to lose support. He made his way at the head of an armed force of a few hundred followers to the mountain fastnesses, where he lived in security for more than three years. At times he would venture into the State of Vera Cruz, only to be chased back to his mountain rendezvous by government soldiers. Time after time he tried to rally about him the Indians of Oaxaca and Vera Cruz in a movement against the government, but he failed in each instance to gather more than a handful of men. He left for the United States more than a year ago, living first for a time in New Orleans, later going to Los Angeles, thence to New York.

It is considered here that there is little likelihood of Diaz ever becoming a serious factor in the political affairs of Mexico. It is known that he never has received the financial or moral support of the old Cientifico element of exiles in his efforts to promote a revolution. At one time it was reported that he had the financial backing of certain American oil interests but no confirmation of this rumor was had. It is asserted here that there never has been any evidence that Diaz had much money with which to carry on his revolutionary operations.

MEXICO CITY, July 22.—Senor Vasconcelos is preparing to go to Brazil as special Ambassador of Mexico to attend the independence celebrations in that country. While abroad he will visit several other South American nations.

MEXICO CITY, July 22.—The Secretary of Exterior Relations has ordered Senor Gustavo Luders de N., consul at Los Angeles, Cal., for several months, to proceed to San Francisco and assume duties as Consul at that American port. Leandro Garza Leal has been named consul at Los Angeles. Senor Garza recently has been stationed at San Antonio, and formerly Consul at Houston.

MEXICALI (Lower California) July 22.—It is reported that Attorney Jose Inocente Lugo, late civil Governor of the northern district of Lower California, is to become Secretary of Argiculature to succeed Senor de Negri who has been ordered to the United States on a special mission. The orders came some time ago for Governor Lugo to turn over the office here to Gen. Jesus M. Garza, who will become military and civil Governor of this district.

RADIO GETS INDUSTRIAL BOOST, BUMP

Cuba Acquiring the Craze as Constantinople Bans All Wireless Apparatus

A fan's a fan the world over, and the universal brotherhood of listeners-in will be interested in commerce reports on what the cult is doing or having done to it in far corners.

For instance Consul Harold D. Clum of Santiago, Cuba, reports to the Department of Commerce that there is an increasing interest in that city in radio telegraphy and telephony, and it is intended to install a broadcasting station powerful enough to be heard in every town in Oriente Province.

The majority of receiving stations now in use have been constructed by amateurs or assembled from parts obtained from the United States, but as American firms are oversold, much difficulty has been experienced in getting deliveries on orders placed in this country.

The proximity of Cuba to the broadcasting facilities of the United States adds to the possibilities for developing a market there for radio sets.

The Department of Commerce is advised on the other hand by Trade Commissioner Gillespie, that the president of the Allied Police Commission at Constantinople has published a notice prohibiting the sale of wireless apparatus in Constantinople and in the zone of Allied military occupation.

The notice permits the sale of wireless apparatus outside of the zone occupied by the Allies, but requires firms wishing to make such a sale to obtain permission from headquarters, Allied Police Commission, Constantinople, before making delivery of the goods, giving the name and full particulars concerning the buyer and of the destination of their apparatus.

EASTERNER BUYS STORES ON VERMONT

Peter M. Kerst, formerly of St. Paul, has purchased the property at the southwest corner of Forty-eighth street and Vermont avenue. The improvements consist of a one-story store building, with thirty-five feet of vacant property at the rear. This portion will be improved in the near future with an attractive building, fronting on Forty-eighth street, according to Mr. Kerst. The property, formerly owned by Mrs. Effie M. Hite, was sold for $30,000, most of which was in cash.

Mr. Kerst bought the property for an investment. He was formerly chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank in Minneapolis, and for a number of years was also the Chief National Bank Examiner in District 9, a territory covering several States in the Central Northwest.

NEW BUNGALOW COURT

J. M. Close, designer, builder and realty broker, reports the execution of a contract with E. A. Simmons for the erection of an eighteen-unit Spanish bungalow court at the corner of Hoover and Monroe streets. The group will cost $42,500. A contract has also been closed with Louis Wurfl for the erection of a seven-unit bungalow court on Echo Park avenue, near Scott street, for $20,000. The same firm will build for Norma Barris a four-flat building and single dwelling on Thirty-eighth street, near Broadway, for $15,000.

STORE IS LEASED

The C. C. Brown Candy Company has leased the storeroom in their new building, 713 South Flower street, to the Rachel Baker Company for five years. Miss Baker will open a millinery and ladies' ready-to-wear store in the room in the near future. Both parties in the transaction were represented by Robert Baker, of Metcalf & Ryan, local realtors.

REALTORS TO MAKE MERRY

Preparations Being Made for Catalina Jinks

Date Set for First Week-End in October

Expect Big Delegation from San Francisco

The realtors of Los Angeles will stage their annual jollification, known this year as "The Hi-Jinks of 1922," Oct. 6, 7 and 8, probably at Catalina Island when the members of the San Francisco Real Estate Board will be the guests of the Los Angeles Realty Board in another inter-city demonstration of good-will and good-fellowship.

"The Hi-Jinks of 1921" held in October of last year at Catalina Island was one of the most successful events of its kind ever attempted on the Pacific Coast. The realtors of the two cities owned the island for a week-end and a continuous program of frolicsome fun made the celebration a memorable outing for the four hundred business men who attended.

Instead of a two-day program it is planned to have the Jinks start Friday evening and continue over Saturday and Sunday. Colbert Coldwell, president of the San Francisco Real Estate Board has wired President Frank Ryan of the Los Angeles Realty Board: "On behalf of the San Francisco Real Estate Board I am pleased to accept Los Angeles Realty Board's invitation for us to be guests of honor at annual Jinks during first week in October."

Last year forty of the Bay City realtors accepted the invitation and it is expected that one hundred or more will come this fall.

The telegram was most welcome news to the local realtors for in the acceptance they saw a continuation of the inter-city friendship visits which have been such a pleasant feature of Pacific Coast realtordom in the last two years. The Los Angeles realtors have twice been the guests of honor at banquets held by the Bay City realtors and in addition the San Francisco realtors were the hosts to the delegates from here to the national convention.

It is a noteworthy fact that since this spirit of friendliness has prevailed there have been several large deals completed in which San Francisco capitalists have become interested in Los Angeles realty, and the local realtors by reason of their new understanding of San Francisco have also been active in a way to benefit the northern city.

During the Jinks last year the San Francisco Real Estate Board, through its representatives, presented to the local realtors a block and a gavel on which was inscribed: "To the Los Angeles Realty Board from the San Francisco Real Estate Board in appreciation of the splendid spirit of fellowship and co-operation—may there continue a happy relationship through the common desire to know and to do what is for the highest good."

The Los Angeles realtors through their governing committee passed a resolution extending "to the San Francisco Real Estate Board its deep appreciation of the spirit and feeling that prompted the giving to the Los Angeles Realty Board of the splendid gavel and block, and particularly is the Los Angeles Realty Board appreciative of the sentiment expressed in the engraving thereon."

The general Hi-Jinks committee will be appointed in the near future by President Frank Ryan. There will be a large number of sub-committees as it is planned to have Friday's and Saturday's hours solidly packed with events. "Something doing every moment" is to be the slogan, according to the realtors, and the committees will soon be organized so that the program of attractions can be announced early in September. There will be a committee for the boxing bouts, for the midnight follies, for the athletic contests, for the "polo" game, and for the other activities which have been tentatively planned.

MANY NEW BUILDINGS UNDER WAY

Construction Activity at South Pasadena Shows Gain of 225 Per Cent.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SOUTH PASADENA, July 21.—A new lumber yard to be built along a 300-foot frontage at the Santa Fe Railroad tracks and El Centro street has taken its place in the list of new business construction for this city during recent months. Others either built, in course of construction or in architect's hands include a new post-office, two new bank buildings, a new hardware store, a new theater and a new business block for miscellaneous purposes. All have been announced within the last ninety days, and, including the new lumber yard started this week, total about $225,000.

C. W. Upton of 844 Pasadena avenue is the motivating force behind South Pasadena's new lumber yard.

South Pasadenans are jubilant over building-permit figures which show a gain of 225 per cent for this city during the first six months, where thirty-three cities outside of Los Angeles registered average gains of only 40 per cent. Cities topped by South Pasadena include Pasadena, Alhambra and Glendale with 70 per cent each and Long Beach with 32 per cent.

Recent permits include C. L. Behrs, six-room residence, 2054 Fletcher avenue, $4000; Charles Gunther, six-room residence, 1932 La France avenue, $4200.

ARCHITECT MOVES

A. B. Rosenthal, architect, formerly located in the Douglas Building, has moved to new offices at 709-710 Hillstreet Theater Building, at Eighth and Hill streets. Mr. Rosenthal is at present preparing plans for a one-story store building to be erected at York Boulevard and Avenue 53 for Joseph Trattner and E. H. Lieritz and for a one-story store building at West Adams and Middlebrook for A. L. Lipsey.

LOTS NEAR ARROWHEAD SELL FAST

Many Purchasers of Mountain Homesites Will Build Homes Before Winter

During the first week that the Arrowhead estates have been on the market lots valued at more than $200,000 have been sold, according to the announcement of Andrew Warminton of the sales department of the Arrowhead Lake Company. It is said that more than 90 per cent of the purchasers intend to begin work on their homes in the near future. It is thought that most of these homes will be complete for the winter carnivals.

Among those who have purchased homesites near Lake Arrowhead are J. B. Van Nuys, Edward Maier, Mrs. C. Medini Woods and Oscar Selling.

The subdivisions on the North Shore have been worked out, it is said, so that each purchaser obtains not only the frontage of his lot but unrivaled scenic vistas where from his dream home the charm and happiness of wooded glen and babbling brook reacts and stimulates the tired city mind. The piney fragrance of the ancient wood, the outdoor sports of mountain, forest, lake and stream weave enchantment.

The village of Arrowhead, conceived from some quaint early Norman town, blends delightfully with a mountain setting and as the winding road leads one into the center of the court, the well-stocked shops impress one with the charm and dignity of their medieval appearance. Here in the village is locatod the cafeteria, food shop, grocery shop, meats, provisions, art shop, garage and tool shop, gasoline and oil service station, postoffice, billiard room, and barber shop, drug store and tea room.

British Firm to Subdivide Buttonwilliw

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, July 21. — Real estate men here are greatly interested in the announcements they have just received of the sale of the Buttonwillow ranch of 150,000 acres west of Bakersfield by Miller & Lux. The tract has been sold to a British syndicate headed by the Duke of Argyll for $12,000,000, or $80 an acre, it is said.

The real estate men are interested not because it is the largest sale ever made here, but because it indicates a policy of the large estate owners to sell so that the land may be subdivided and placed on the market. That is what will be done with the ranch. Conservation of the flood waters of the Kern River will make it possible to water the whole ranch it is said.

The land is highly productive and was reclaimed from swamp lands several years ago.

Keep posted on Wilshire Development

The Wilshire District is shaped like a bottle. The older part of the district is very wide, and is the thick part of the bottle. In the natural growth of the Wilshire District westward, different conditions have changed the situation, and the New Wilshire District becomes the constricted narrow neck of the bottle.

Instead of an equal growth to the north and to the south of our finest boulevard, as in the past, the new development is to the south of Wilshire Boulevard. The oil derricks of the La Brea oil field, as shown on the map, divert the residential growth of the Wilshire District to the high ground south of the boulevard.

This neck of the bottle has excellent car service now, with two yellow lines and one red line. It is the only part of the New Wilshire District that is served by yellow lines.

Again, south of Wilshire Boulevard, as shown on the map, is the terminus of the subway right-of-way owned by the Pacific Electric Railway. Think what the construction of this subway will mean to south of Wilshire property?

The neck of the bottle, in short, is a magnet, attracting to it homeseekers and investors. The beautiful high ground, the long-time carefully planned building protection, the irreproachable tone of the district—all add further strength to its pulling power.

Buy your lot in the neck of the bottle

The irresistible growth of Los Angeles is not the same in all directions. It takes the easiest, the most natural and favored courses. Los Angeles is growing so rapidly and so generally that it is often difficult to interpret this growth, and to determine exactly where the strongest currents lie.

The basis of all real estate values is growth. The failure to judge this growth accurately and to locate the main currents, to drift behind in the quiet eddies of the stream, means getting nowhere with your realty investments. It takes growth and development not only up to, but through and on beyond, to get the greatest enhancement of values. In order to be in the best and most rapid growth, select your lot in the neck of the bottle.

The New Wilshire District is virtually a gridiron of important thoroughfares and cross-town arteries. Boulevards such as Wilshire, Country Club Drive, Cahuenga, San Vicente, Rimpau, Redondo and Highland form the substantial framework of a great industrial growth.

Live in this best part of town—it costs no more. Build your home where values will be maintained.

Beckoning to all investors are the business thoroughfares and business centers of the new Wilshire District. La Brea is destined to be the next Western Avenue. At present prices, lots on La Brea will double and treble within the next few years. La Brea Avenue runs through the important business center of Mansfield Square, while at San Vicente, Pico Boulevard runs through Rimpau Square. Rimpau Square is at the terminus of the subway right-of-way.

Business lots in these locations can be bought now at low prices. The amount of increase in the value of these lots can be gauged by the certainty of the development in the neck of the bottle.

Several hundred thousand dollars' worth of lots are being bought in this New Wilshire District every month. The supply of lots there is definitely limited. Make it a point to see these lots today. There are courteous salesmen on the tract awaiting your call to take you to this property.

FOUR COLONIES MAKE PROGRESS

Most of San Joaquin Units Are Near Terra Bella

German Section Will Have New Lutheran Church

Company is Starting Hungarian Colony

In the Terra Bella district of Tulare county there are now located more colony projects than in any other new territory in the great San Joaquin Valley. The success of these colonies is now evidenced by the prolific growth of all grape vines and fruit trees, and the bountiful crops of all farm products planted there.

The 8000-acre tract of the Terra Bella Development Company is dotted with small homes surrounded by garden and fruit patches. F. M. Cranmore had 18-months-old French prune and almond trees, which were from six to twelve feet high and produced fruit. H. C. Cameron, contractor of San Francisco, visited his twenty-acre orchard and vineyard over the Fourth of July and took great pride in displaying bunches of Thompson seedless grapes picked from 1-year-old vines. The townsite is responding to the growth of the surrounding country by new houses and business blocks.

The German colony is one of the most advanced, and the homes of these pioneers whoch once stood in barley fields are now nestled mid orange groves and fruit orchards. A new packing-house on the Santa Fe Railroad handles the output of citrus and deciduous fruits. The prosperity is evidence by the new farm buildings and the new Lutheran Church recently completed at a cost of $20,000. I. J. Burger picked eighty tons of cling peaches from a ten-acre tract of 4-year-old trees, receiving $100 per ton, or $8000 for the crop.

The Italian colony was started in the early part of 1920 from the raw land; now it is a garden spot. The first season the land was planted to tomatoes, melons and various vegetables. Since then all varieties of grapes, citrus and deciduous fruits have been planted and 15-months-old Emperor vines are now as high as the six-foot stakes, and bearing grapes. Recent visitors from Southern California found B. Angello enthusiastic over the growth of all vines and trees, and the future of the colony.

The English colony probably has been the fastest growing of all the colonies. About 600 acres are now planted to deciduous and citrus fruits, and Emperor and Thompson grapes, all of which are showing a remarkable growth. Another 160 acres will be set out next year. Several hundred people have journeyed across the water to make their home in this beautiful foothill section of California, and many more families are expected in the near future. John Paul Jones, entomologist for the Balfour-Guthrie Company, owns a vineyard in this tract which is 2 years old and from which he expects to take four tons of grapes per acre this season.

The F. C. Ensign Company, colonization agency, announces that a Hungarian colony will be formed west of Terra Bella on land suitable for alfalfa, deciduous fruits, grapes, melons and vegetables. Mr. Stephen Kovach of Oregon is the first settler, having purchased 160 acres and is now moving his stock, equipment and family to his new ranch.

such loads as this, and without the need of building a single foot specially to receive and bear this unusual load.

Each of these details tells a story of modern progress; each of these details illustrates the fact that the United States leads the world in qualiy as well as in mileage of its railroads; each of these details tells the story of fifty years of development of the West; each tells of the dependence of our development on the perfection of our transportation systems.

And the arrival of the "prosperity special" at Los Angeles, the Pacific Coast terminal of three great transcontinental systems and the most recent entrant into the race for third place among American cities, is of first importance to our farmers, our orchardists, our stock-raisers, our miners, our manufacturers, our merchants, who furnish the sustenance for the big and ever-growing population coming in from across the continent and from across the oceans.

It can hardly be regarded as less than a fitting culmination to the biggest six months in the development history of Los Angeles and evidence that we have not arrived at a stopping or slowing-up point; but are, on the contrary, squaring away as the prosperity special of the United States for another six months—or many more months—of "straight ahead."

The First Mortgage

One sign of the times—a sign which has received little public recognition—is the manner in which mortgages recorded at the county offices from week to week show not only an increase in number, but a decided tendency toward lower interest rates.

The situation augurs well for the continued progress of home-building in Los Angeles, for with interest rates lower, and with money more easily obtainable on first mortgages, a heavy handicap is removed from the small builder. Los Angeles has set some amazing records in building during the past two years, despite the barriers raised by a tight money market. With this obstacle removed—a process now going on with an encouraging degree of regularity—the outlook is very bright.

Probably to a considerable extent, the availability of money for building is due to the fact that the halcyon days of low bond prices are past, and the average investor, who is looking for security as well as a good rate of interest, is turning again to the first mortgage as a sound investment. With the equilibrium between the mortgage and the bond restored, home building should be accelerated.

PLAN SCHOOL

Plans for the new Santa Barbara High School are now being prepared by architects. The building is to be erected at the corner of Carrillo and Quarantina streets. The building and grounds will cost about $450,000.

PARK WILL BE OPENED NEXT WEEK

Kaweah Park at Three Rivers Has Conveniences That Should be Popular

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

THREE RIVERS, July 22.—Kaweah Park, on the Kaweah River, at Three Rivers, will be ready for an informal opening on Sunday, July 23, according to H. P. Moffitt of Three Rivers, who states that construction of a dance pavilion and concession stands is well under way. Formal opening will be held later in the summer.

Kaweah Park, situated midway north and south of the valley, on a paved highway within easy reach of the various cities of Central California and just far enough in the mountains to escape the extreme heat and to benefit from breezes of the high mountains, is expected to become one of the most popular playgrounds of the San Joaquin Valley.

It is placed at the junction of the main and south fork of the Kaweah River, and has within its boundaries the largest pool in the entire river, with most perfect facilities for bathing and boating.

The main building will contain a dancing floor with ample seating space, restaurant, kitchen, soda fountain, pool and billiard hall, bowling alleys, barber shop, shoe shining parlor, rest rooms with every convenience, at the command of all patrons.

A bath house containing thirty-five rooms and showers is also being erected. Kaweah Park has its own electric lighting plant of 1000-light capacity, thus insuring a well-lighted ground. Completed, space will be provided for parking 100 machines. This park is practically the base of road control into Sequoia and Gen. Grant, and conveniences will be supplied for cooking, with later arrangement for permanent campers, clubs, etc.

HERE TO MAKE CLOSE SURVEY

of the National Wool Growers' Association, with headquarters at Salt Lake, the following letter indicates the favorable attitude of the wool growers:

"The establishment of public stock yards at Los Angeles means a great deal to the live-stock industry of the intermountain country. The fact that the plan has been put into effect by parties who have directed the development of the Chicago stockyards is further indication of the confidence with which business men of large experience look for continued increase in population and industrial activity on the Pacific Coast. In all this the intermountain country has an immediate part and interest.

"California has been drawing heavily upon Utah and Idaho during recent years for live stock and meats. The establishment of a public stockyards to which live stock can be consigned by the grower or feeder for sale is a new departure.

"Such yards have not existed in California and practically all of the stock slaughtered there was purchased by traveling buyers at the ranch or feedyard.

"This did not permit producers to know values and market conditions so well as they should know them, nor did it afford the large educational influence that comes to shippers through seeing large numbers of live stock assembled at one point and bid upon by competitive slaughtering and distributing concerns.

"The enlargement and improvement of a market nearer home allow the products of ranges and farms to go into consumption with less expense and with greater net returns to the producer. It is a large step toward combining our raw materials of feed and unfinished live stock to make a finished product. This is a great advantage to the farmer, the ranchman, and through them to all business interests in the great western country of which the principal area must always be devoted to live-stock production."

TO PUSH WORK

From a letter dated July 7, written by W. W. Burch, publisher of the American Sheep Breeder, this extract was considered by Prof. Christie particularly pertinent:

"California is making rapid strides in sheep production and many purebred flocks are being established. It strikes me that the time has come when the packers should encourage in every way slaughter and consumption of meat at central points in the West. It doesn't make any difference who handles this business. The packers can probably do it better than anyone else.

"The same situation obtains in wool. There should be more manufacturing done in the Far West. It is perfectly absurd to pay freight on wool to the Far East and return freight on goods to be consumed. The possibilities for live-stock raising in Lower California are big."

Upon his return from Texas in about two weeks, Prof. Christie proposes systematically to get in touch with all commercial and live-stock bodies and organizations and to make personal inspection of the field in the six Southwestern States, with the agricultural department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce as the central point of communication and conference.

NEW RESIDENCE TRACT AT MONROVIA OPENED

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

MONROVIA, July 22.—Another new residence tract was opened this week by Stewart & Ainley, local realtors, who purchased the Park tract, lying near the foothills in the northeast section of Monrovia. The tract has nearly fifty magnificent oak trees, and commands a fine view of mountain and valley. It is five acres in extent. Improvements of gas, water, electricity, sidewalk, curb and gutters have already begun to be put in.

Rebuilding of Monrovia's granite City Hall to provide additional office room for the rapidly growing departments, was approved this week by the City Council. A new wing will be built to the building on the south, to house the fire and police departments, while the water department will be moved into the present fire hall and jail. The improvement is expected to cost $6000.

Motor Company Will Build on South Figueroa

The California-Oakland Company through its president, Reeve Gartzmann, and its vice-president, George M. Hailey, has taken a long term lease at 1927 South Figueroa, whieh will be the future home of this company.

Plans are being drawn for a modern two-story garage-type building to be erected immediately for the California-Oakland Motor Car Company. It will occupy the entire property which has a 74-foot frontage and a depth of 240 feet. It is expected that the building will be ready for occupancy in the early fall.

At the present time, this company operates a wholesale establishment at 1620 East Seventh street for the distribution of Oakland cars in Southern California, and a retail store on South Olive street. Both branches of the business will be housed in the new building on South Figueroa.

The lease was made through the W. Ross Campbell Company by E. R. Lewis of its sales and leasing department. The owner of the property, John G. White, was represented by Richard St. John.

TO START STREET WORK

Additional street work will be commenced this week in the Tica tract, on Huntington Boulevard, according to the subdividers, the Mutual Realty Corporation. Active sale of the property is reported, a number of hillside lots having been sold to prospective home builders, it is said. The majority of the purchasers in the tract have purchased with the view of building their own homes, the subdividers state.

Will Occupy Building on South Grand

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

A real estate deal of considerable interest to the automotive industry has been closed by the Murray-Gerber Company, realtors through A. R. Miller of the sales and leasing department. The deal involves a ten-year lease and the erection of a new building on the northeast corner of Fifteenth and Grand avenue, belonging to Meiling's Incorporated, for Bennett-Tormey and Company.

Bennett-Tormey and Company, who will occupy the building when completed, have secured the exclusive factory representation for the Hayes Wheel Company of Jackson, Mich., for Southern California and Arizona. The line includes wire, wood and disc wheels, and is standard equipment on a number of well known cars. The company will operate a modern sales and service station for wheel service of all makes. Bennett-Tormey and Company, also represent the Sunderman Corporation on the Pacific Coast, handling an exclusive line of hydraulic jacks, carburetors, glass spark plugs and other auto accessories.

The building now in course of construction was designed and is being built by John M. Cooper. It covers the entire property 60 by 100 feet with a two-story elevation on the Grand avenue frontage, faced with ruffle brick and enamel brick trim.

The company has secured temporary quarters at 1128-30 South Los Angeles street and will move to its new home about August 15.

Will Develop Many Ranches Near Delano

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DELANO, July 21.—Development in this section of Tulare county is being hastened by the concentrated attention of a syndicate of wealthy men. The Southern California Development Company has just been organized under the leadership of De Venney & Turner, owners of the Harrelson lands, and over 6000 acres of Tulare county developed grape and fruit land. Fifty men whose personal wealth exceeds $100,000,000 make up the list of shareholders.

Immediate development of the land in small tracts, planted with vines and fruit trees, with wells installed and care insured for the first three years, when they will be turned over to unit purchasers, is the plan of the syndicate.

Officers of the new corporation are: Harry R. De Venney, president and general manager, Beverly Hills; Orra E. Monnette, vice-president, Los Angeles; R. F. Anzell, vice-president, Chicago; Dr. Charles M. Pusey, vice-president, Fresno; Rodney L. Turner, treasurer, Delano. Directors are: H. Hawley, Delano; Orra E. Monnette, Los Angeles; Dr. Charles M. Pusey; R. F. Angell, Chicago; Rodney L. Turner, Delano; F. A. Keeler, Mason City Iowa; Jerry P. Shields, Bakersfield; Frederick W. Welsh, Los Angeles; W. A. Bonynge, Jr., Los Angeles; Harry R. De Venney, Beverly Hills, Cal.

TULARE, July 15.—Renewed building activity, which has been manifest here for some months, has within the past few days swelled the volume, and it is said builders are handling all the contracts they can care for at this time.

The most extensive work just recorded is that of the city hall, estimated at a cost of $14,000. A permit was issued to Flagg & Goble to remodel and extend their property on K street, which is to be occupied by the J. C. Penny and Martha Washington Stores, Incorporated.

A. Ramsey made application for a permit to improve his residence at the corner of Owen and J streets, at an estimated cost of $2300. John R. Waldo is to erect a handsome home in Auburndale Addition, to be of a most modern type, to cost approximately $10,000. Jack Lathrop is also erecting a handsome home in that part of the city. It is already well under way.

CHANGE IN RIGHT OF WAY IS PROTESTED

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

TORRANCE, July 21.—The importance of the controversy arising over the purported change of location of a right of way for the Santa Fe to enter the Los Angeles Harbor district, was examplified by a delegation composed of nearly 100 city and Chamber of Commerce officials, factory executives, and leading business men and women of Torrance, San Pedro, Wilmington, Long Beach, Keystone Acres, Harbor City, Moneta, Lometa, Los Angeles and the Third and Fourth Supervisor districts, who attended the meeting of the Los Angeles City Council last Monday to grant the Santa Fe Railway a franchise to enter the Los Angeles Harbor district over the route as originally proposed by them, which provides running a branch line off of the present El Segundo branch to the harbor district through Torrance.

LEASE NEW QUARTERS

The Western Novelty Company, jobbers and manufacturers' agents, have leased the storeroom at 406 South Los Angeles street. This growing concern, which is also the western representative of N. APPROVE PLAN FOR BOULEVARD

Wilshire Project Presented to Committee

Would Beautify Thoroughfare Its Full Length

The Archway is Suggested as Appropriate Name

the driveway would be widened ette Park and Alexandria avenue, from fifty-six to seventy-four feet, the first parkways would each be five feet in width, and the sidewalks would be eight feet wide. In addition a second parkway of fifteen feet owned or controlled by the city is suggested, but this is optional.

ALTERNATIVE TREATMENTS

From Alexandria avenue to Crenshaw Boulevard, two treatments are suggested. One of these calls for widening of the street by forty-two feet, and the other by seventy-two feet. The driveway would be seventy-eight feet wide, the first parkways five feet each, sidewalks nine feet, local service and equestrian lanes, eighteen feet each, and second parkways, also optional, of fifteen feet each.

The street would be widened to 200 feet from Crenshaw Boulevard to La Brea Boulevard. The driveway would be 100 feet in this section, the first parkways six feet each, the sidewalks nine feet, the second parkways seventeen feet, and the local service and equestrian lanes eighteen feet.

Type five, covering the district from La Brea to the Los Angeles Country Club boundary contemplates the widening of the street to 232 feet, with 100 feet given over to the driveways, six feet to the first parkways, nine feet for sidewalks, eighteen feet for second parkways, twelve feet for equestrial lanes, three feet for low hedges, and eighteen feet for local service drives.

Between the Soldiers' Home and Twelfth street, Santa Monica, by way of San Vincente Boulevard, the street would be widened to 230 feet. Of this, 106 is allowed for driveways, with space for the central railroad lines of the Pacific Electric; five feet for first parkways, nine feet for walks, fifteen feet for second parkways, twelve feet for equestrial lanes, three feet for low hedges; and eighteen feet for service drives.

WESTERN TERMINAL

The last section, adjoining and surrounding a proposed part at the termination of the boulevard, would have a total width of 232 feet. This section, in Santa Monica Canyon, would have double driveways, each sixty feet in width, and inner walk fifteen feet wide; inner parkways of five feet in width; first parkways, five feet wide; sidewalks, fifteen feet wide; second parkways, fifteen feet wide, and service and equestrian lanes eighteen feet wide.

The entire plan would necessitate the acquisition of only 167 acres of additional land in the entire length of the boulevard. The single main driveway, which would be used throughout the length of the boulevard with the exception of the short stretch in Santa Monica Canyon, is employed because of the greater degree of efficiency and service rendered by this type. Originally the plan contemplated the use of the double driveway, with a central parkway, but this was abandoned as being impractical. The divided road, it is pointed out, has an efficiency of only 75 per cent of an undivided road; it has less perspective beauty; and it is more dangerous to traffic.

Three types of ornamentation, arches, obelisks, and fountains, are suggested, these to be worked out with appropriate statuary and memorial tablets. These are placed at average intervals of six-tenths of a mile, or about one and one-half minutes of driving time.

The eleven arches, spanning the street, will be dedicated to California history, with the last one, at the Santa Monica terminus, dedicated to the Pacific Ocean. Seven obelisks, and a great memorial hall will be dedicated to American national history, and the seven fountains to human accomplishments, natural history and the elements.

SERVE USEFUL PURPOSE

The archways have both a utilitarian and an ornamental purpose, since the abutting towers, upon which the arches will rest, will afford space for police offices, first-aid stations and telephone exchanges.

Provision is made for a future subway under the boulevard for its entire length, and provision is made for exits and entrances to the subway, together with underground pedestrian crossings at the main street intersections, such as Vermont and Western avenues.

At the intersection of the present Wilshire Boulevard and Beverly Glen, the highest point on Wilshire Boulevard, Mr. Vermeulen has set aside a site for a future memorial hall to the Presidents of the United States, a magnificent monument, which would be visible for miles in every direction. A second important monument would be erected as a flag or service memorial in the grounds of the Soldiers' Home, and at the intersection of Wilshire and Santa Monica Boulevards, opposite the Speedway, he has selected a site for a convention auditorium.

Some of the more important contemplated monuments include an arch to the city of Los Angeles in Westlake Park, at the western end of Orange street; a Fountain of Progress at the intersection of Vermont and Wilshire; an obelisk to La Fayette in La Fayette Park; a fountain, Western Spirit, at Western and Wilshire; an arch to Cabrillo at Ardmore avenue; an arch to Fremont at Harcourt avenue; an arch to Marshall or the Gold Miner, at Crescent avenue; a fountain, Work and Play, at the Speedway; a fountain to Youth, at Lookout avenue, where a children's playground would also be located; and an arch to Balboa at Twelfth street, Santa Monica. The final monument, at the Western end of the boulevard, would be a magnificent arch dedicated to California.

SUGGEST NEW NAME

Mr. Vermeulen also recommended that the name of the boulevard be changed to The Archway, a name which he points out is consistent because of the principal characteristic of the thoroughfare, the arch. The name also has the advantage of being simple and dignified, says Mr. Vermeulen, and it avoids the use of the terms avenue or boulevard, terms which have no standard usage and which have been much used.

The report, covering twenty-two pages, goes into considerable detail as to the plan for developing the parkways and bridle paths, public utilities, which are to be all underground, flood lighting of the statuary and monuments; street crossings, disposal of railroad tracks, and the type of memorials to public men.

Mr. Vermeulen's plan was approved by the committee of the Community Development Association to which it was presented, and the report will be submitted soon to the entire board of directors of the association for action. In the near future it is expected to call a meeting of property owners, city and county officials, representatives of civic organizations, and representatives from Beverly Hills, the Soldiers' Home, Brentwood, and Santa Monica, before whom the plan will be laid in detail.

It is expected that out of this project will develop a demand for other great boulevards connecting with adjacent communities, such as Long Beach and Pasadena, and that this new boulevard will be the first of a series of splendid thoroughfares radiating from Los Angeles.

D. A. Hamburger, acting president of the Community Development Association, is leaving for Europe, and during his absence and pending the return of William May Garland, president of the organization, Henry S. McKee will take charge as active executive. The committee in direct charge of the Wilshire Boulevard project is composed of H. S. McKee, D. A. Hamburger, Henry M. Robinson, Andrew Chaffey and Harry Chandler.

TWO-THIRDS FOR HOMES

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SOUTH PASADENA, July 21.—Evidence that South Pasadena is retaining its rank as primarily a home city is indicated in figures which show that out of total building permits of $739,729 for the six months just past, $519,158 were for residences only. The accommodations therein represented mean a gain to South Pasadena in the half year of 126 new families.

An excelent class of residences is being built, the average being well over $4500. The majority of the houses represented in the figures are said to vary between $5000 and $8000 with a number of $10,000, $15,000 and $25,000 dwellings. A dwelling of the last named figure is now being completed on Garfield avenue by a member of the noted O'Melveny family of Los Angeles.

This week Caroline Ellsworth applied for a $12,000 permit for the business block and postoffice she is to build at Mission street and Mound avenue. This structure has been the subject of controversy between Miss Ellsworth and the postal authorities for several weeks.

E. T. Randall of Monrovia, formerly in business in this city, is to start work within three weeks on a business block on Fair Oaks avenue directly north of Mission street, to cost in the neighborhood of $10,000.

A recapitaluation shows that during the first six months of 1922 permits reached a total of $739,729 as against $261,411 for the same period in 1921, a gain of almost 300 per cent. The total for June of this year, $88,784, althought below the average of the five preceding months, was over twice the figure for June, 1921, $36,923.

Year's Crops Will Surpass All Records

With the fruit season in full blast throughout California valleys, all past records bid fair to be broken by the producers of choice California crops this year, says the news department of the California Real Estate Association in a recent bulletin. Word comes from the Imperial Valley that all past records in cantaloupe shipments are being broken. During June, 9400 carloads of cantaloupes and melons were shipped from the Imperial Valley.

California's almond crop this year will break all records. In Fresno county and the San Joaquin district, about 50,000 acres of new vineyards were planted this season. The California Peach and Fig Growers' Association is enlarging the capacity of its plant 200 per cent to handle the big crops in the Turlock district.

California apricot growers received approximately $4,000,000 for last year's crop. Growers of raisins in San Joaquin Valley last year harvested 200,000 tons for which they received over $40,000,000. The crop this year will be equally well received and the tonnage will be 10 to 15 per cent larger.

STORES WILL OCCUPY REMODELED BUILDING

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

TULARE, July 22.—Work is progressing rapidly on the alteration and enlargement of the Flagg & Goble Building, which is to be occupied by the J. C. Penny Company and the Martha Washington grocery stores in August. The estimated cost of the alterations will be about $14,000. When completed the building will add much to the attractiveness of North K street. Other improvements are also under consideration by property owners of that neighborhood.

W. C. Allen, former owner of the Club Billiard Parlor, has sold his business on J street to J. R. Martin of Visalia. Mr. Martin has taken charge of the establishment.

Mrs. Sarah Durbin, for many years employed in the Tulare Mercantile grocery store here, has purchased the small grocery business owned by A. Smith on South A street of this city. The Durbin residence on North F street became the property of Mr. Smith through the transaction and the family has moved into its new home.

PROPERTY SOLD

For a consideration reported to be $39,000, the southeast corner of Court and Spring streets was sold yesterday to J. E. Pagliano by E. W. Hadley. The property is 41 by 59 feet. At the present time a store building stands on the ground. One of the rooms in the building is occupied by Mr. Pagliano's business. The sale was made through the agency of F. A. Pattee.

Hancock Park

The Reason

The reason why Hancock Park does not advertise itself as being near or a part of any designated residential section is because Hancock Park cannot be compared with any existing residential community—

HANCOCK PARK with its natural rolling terrain, its superior elevation permitting an unobstructed view of foothills and mountains, to say nothing of its unsurpassed improvements, offers so much to the discriminating homeseeker that comparison is impossible—

HANCOCK PARK is outstanding as the most select residential location in Southern California. To see the type of homes already erected and to learn to whom they belong is proof sufficient—

COTTON MILL FUTURE BIG

So Says Machinery Expert of North Carolina

Tells of Industry's Growth in Gaston County

Sees Similar Expansion and Development Here

Progress of the Imperial Cotton Mills, Los Angeles' first cotton textile factory, toward September completion and inauguration made considerable headway during the past two weeks, in the purchase of its dyeing plant and much in the way of mechanical accessories, through the presence here of representatives of leading eastern manufacturers of these forms of equipment.

Through Gorge B. Cocker, president of the Cocker Machine and Foundry Company of Gastonia, N. C., was secured a complete warp indigo dyeing equipment, with a capacity of 10,000 pounds a day. Mr. Cocker describes this as the biggest indigo unit in the world and as a development of the past year, enabling the dyeing to be done at a single operation as compared with ten to twelve operations required by the most efficient system in vogue up to the present time; thus putting the Los Angeles plant ahead of any mills in the country in the matter of dyeing efficiency.

The order for tools and accessories outside of the spindles and looms, amounting to $40,000, was given to M. C. Sanders of the Greenville Textile Supply Company of Greenville, S. C. Both Messrs. Cocker and Sanders spent a week in the city—their first visit—and expressed themselves as impressed with the possibilities of this part of the country for cotton manufacture as well as production.

TELLS SOUTHERN GROWTH

Immediate shipment of these machinery purchases has been stipulated, and within five weeks of their arrival it is expected to start operation of the first cotton textile mills in Los Angeles.

Speaking for readers of The Times, Mr. Cocker, before leaving for a motor trip to the northern part of the State, related some of his observations on the development of the textile mill industry in the Southeastern States as an indication of what might logically be expected in Southern California.

He called attention to the yearly increase of the boll weevil menace to cotton production in the humid States and his conviction that the immunity from this pest here, due to the dry atmosphere in which the boll weevil cannot thrive, would cause the manufacturers as well as the growers to concentrate in this favored section.

Twenty-two years ago, said Mr. Cocker, there was not a mill or a spindle in Gastonia or in Gaston county, N. C., and when it was proposed to start mills in that section, the plan was discouraged by the New England interests which claimed it could never succeed, just as at present there are claims put out to retard the inevitable creation of a cotton-mill center here.

Today there are in the city of Gastonia thirty-eight mills and in the county of Gaston ninety-eight mills, with a million spindles, he said, and the industry has been a tremendous factor in the rehabilitation of the Southeast. For a period of eight years, he also declared, every one of these mills paid out annually as profits its entire cost, while disbursing an annual pay roll of $8,000,000 as against no pay roll at all prior to the establishment of the mills.

L. A. TO REPEAT

While such a condition of profits is unlikely to recur, Mr. Cocker prophesied a vast increase in cotton sales in Central and South America and across the Pacific; and as a necessary result of this increase, the concentration of mills close to the growing centers of the Southwest, just as they were concentrated previously in the Southeast cotton-growing regions.

He also regarded the favorable all-year climate and the development of the port parallel with rail transportation, as insuring the location here of the manufacturers of textile machinery and of manufacturers of cotton goods of every kind, which was impossible in the Southeast because of the unfavorable situation in these regards; so that in the case of Los Angeles the entire gamut of manufactures auxiliary to the growing of cotton, must inevitably follow the successful operation of the textile mills.

EIGHT MILLIONS FOR THE MONTH

July Will Exceed Record of Year Ago By Considerable Margin

While July will not break any of this year's building records, the month will show a handsome gain over any previous July in the city's history, according to the records of C. V. Welch, chief deputy building inspector.

Up to and including Friday, 2387 permits, valued at $5,149,000 were issued, a total almost equal to the full month of July, 1921, when permits to the value of $5,503,000, and to the number of 1770 were taken out. With eight days remaining, it is expected that the final figures will exceed $8,000,000.

MANY NEW FACTORIES ARE ADDED

Thirty-five New Additions to City's Industries Are Made During June

The summer months are naturally less active than the other seasons in the starting of factories or the initiation of industrial enterprises. The check-up of the Chamber of Commerce for June, however, indicates hardly any decrease of industrial activity, so far as the number of new plants is concerned, although the list includes none of magnitude. Missing from the list is the union stockyards and central manufacturing district, which is properly classifiable as an industry. The list as compiled by the chamber includes:

A. S. Electric Plating and Enameling Company, 704 Date street, plating, enameling; L. A. Tofu Manufacturing Company, 921 San Julian street, food products; Alvita Produce Company, Terminal Building, alfalfa products; Margaret Atchley, 742 San Fernando Road, wearing apparel; Babylonia Lamp and Shade Company, 213 Gladys avenue, lamps, shades; Batik Tile Company, 1432 North Spring street, tile; Mack Postograph Company, Laughlin Building, postograph machine; C. Second Plant for Oakland is Announced

OAKLAND, July 22.—Dr. Thomas Addison, district manager for the General Electric Company, today announced the immediate erection here of a second plant, part of which will be devoted to increased facilities for the manufacture of switch boards and the remainder occupied by meter and instrument laboratories, service shops and offices.

The company has operated an incandescent lamp factory in Oakland since 1910, employing about 650 people and producing 12,000,000 lamps yearly for the Edison and National Lamp Division's Pacific Coast trade.

The tract where the new plant will be erected comprises twenty-four acres in the vicinity of East Fourteenth and Fifty-fourth streets. The building is to be of steel, brick and concrete and will embody all of the best features of modern factory construction. It will be a model of illuminating engineering and will be completely wired and equipped throughout with the latest developments in electrical machinery.

This project represents an investment of $200,000 and is the result of the initiative of Dr. Addison, district manager for the General Eelectric Company, and E. O. Shreve, the local manager.

FOR UNIVERSITY

Plans have been prepared for a two-story building to be erected at the Southern Branch of the University of California, on Vermont, near Melrose avenue. The building will contain a physics laboratory, lecture room, radio room and forty showers on the first floor. Allison and Allison are the architects.

PACKERS UNION EFFECTED HERE

Announce Officers of Newly Organized Corporation

Plan to Enlarge Operations and Increase Production

Large Part of Products to be Marketed Locally

Stabilization of the fish-packing industry at the harbor is being effected by the big manufacturers through mergers and reorganizations designed to put the business in strong and capable hands with plenty of funds to develop uniform production, systematized sales and prompt distribution.

One of the factors in this movement is the sale of the Southern California Fish Company to Los Angeles business men and its reorganization as the Southern California Fish Corporation with the purpose of enlarging its operations and increasing production.

The corporation now is controlled by the following officers and directors who are giving its affairs a thorough overhauling, including the big canning plant in East San Pedro:

President, Thomas A. Morrissey, cashier of the Merchants' National Bank of Los Angeles; vice-president and director of sales, Carl E. Rosenberg, sales auditor and efficiency expert; secretary-treasurer, W. G. Salter, for many years identified with the tuna packing business of Southern California; general manager and superintendent, C. W. Clark, specialist in tuna packing; director, Clarence Bessing, Southern California manager for the Schmidt Lithograph Company and closely identified with the tuna packing; director and counsel, A. E. Nolan, who has specialized in fish-packing legal work.

These men are noted for their executive ability, salesmanship and financial astuteness and it is predicted that they will double the capacity of the plant within a year. Already new machinery has been installed and equipment added to facilitate production of high-grade goods at a steady rate of output.

That people in the East are keen to get Southern California goods is declared proven by Mr. Rosenberg, who states that orders sufficient to carry the plant well into the summer have been received in the two or three days following the telegraphic announcement to brokers in all the big cities.

"The fish-packing business is just getting on its feet again after serious reverses caused by general conditions following the war, and prospects are that it will develop into one of the big factors in the continued success of Southern California," said Mr. Rosenberg last night.

"The recent merger of four of the big plants has done much to build up a strong position in the industry, and the Southern California Fish Corporation is going ahead to develop business on a basis of high standard quality and lofty merchandising ideals."

Mr. Rosenberg is well known in Los Angeles as a sales auditor, efficiency expert and leader in the Rotary Club. He plans a comprehensive sales campaign, which will not only take in the eastern commercial centers but home territory as well.

He contends that Southern California should have the opportunity to secure a full supply of canned fish first before the surplus is shipped East. Heretofore the output has been shipped in carload lots to distant centers, while the local field has been partially neglected.

Mr. Rosenberg plans to put Blue Sea tuna and sardine brands into every home in Southern California not only as a means of increasing industrial expansion, but to provide the people with sea food of high grade and desirable qualities.

The tuna pack is now on and will continue through to about October 15, with the height of the season on in the summer months. The sardine pack will begin in February and continue through the summer months.

The corporation has a fleet of fourteen of its own fishing boats and has contracted for the use of eleven more, in addition to buying fish in season from independent fishermen.

Doctors Buy Residence on Sixth Street

Through the agency of Joseph R. Schiller, realty broker, Drs. Holleran, Owen, McHugh and Halloren have purchased the property at the southwest corner of Sixth street and Burlington avenue from Donald Barker. The lot has a frontage of 150 feet on Sixth street, and sixty feet on Burlington, and is improved with a sixteen-room residence. The residence is to be remodeled by the new owners who will establish their offices in the building. The deal involved a consideration of approximately $40,000.

Mr. Schiller also reports the sale of a lot, 50x125 feet, on the west side of Larchmont Boulevard, between First street and Beverly Boulevard to F. O. Johnson, who plans to erect at this location an attractive brick building, part of which he will occupy with a photographic studio. The building will also contain two shops. Harry A. Cronin was the former owner.

Big Ranch to be Developed in Vineyard

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

PORTERVILLE, July 21.—Porterville may be the headquarters for the Atlas Vineyard Corporation, formed to purchase and develop 160 acres of grape ranch land near Pixley, according to H. O. Smith, local realtor, who was elected secretary-treasurer of the company.

The Atlas Vineyard Company is now engaged in preliminary work of planting a quarter section to grapes. Pumping plants are working and an acre reservoir is being filled on the high corner of the ranch. Ranch headquarters are being repaired and various improvements made. The entire tract will be planted in the spring.

The ranch was formerly owned by John C. Waddell. A. R. Priestly, M. E. Griffith of Fresno, and T. C. Barnett of San Jose, are interested with H. O. Smith in the property.

LAND FOR SCHOOL IS PURCHASED

Redlands Adventists Acquire Big Ranch for Agricultural Academy

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

REDLANDS, July 22.—The Seventh-Day Adventists at Loma Linda, near here, are taking general charge of the establishment of the Agricultural Academy on the Hole Ranch near Highgrove. The deal for the purchase of the ranch has been completed, the Adventists paying $119,000 and the erection of the first building on the 300 acres is now under way.

All of the ranch is under water and cultivation. The church will first build two large dormitories, each thirty-six feet wide and 223 feet long. The buildings will be of mission design with stucco finish.

The two dormitories will be so located that the administration building, which is to be erected later, can be built between them and complete a group of three buildings. For the first year the administrative work will be carried on in the dormitories.

The plans for the administration building are for one 223 feet long, but much deeper than the dormitories. It will be of two stories, as will the dormitories, and of stucco finish. The dormitories are to be built so that wings can be added to them.

Announcement has been made that there will also be several bungalows erected for members of the faculty. Prof. J. T. Richardson, native son, will be principal of the school. He has spent several years in agricultural work in Africa. The maximum enrollment will be 200 and most of the students will live at the school.

About $100,000 will be expended on the first group of buildings. No contracts have been let, but the organization will buy material and workmen in the church will do the building.

GAS HEATER IS BIG NEW INDUSTRIAL

Moneta Avenue is Site of Expanded Plant That Has Had Rapid Growth

From only 400 square feet of factory space three years ago, to a two-story handsome new building, 50 by 127 feet, giving a floor space of 12,700 feet, is the record of W. H. Cain, operating his self-contained and exclusively owned business under the name of the W. H. Cain Gas Radiator company.

The new building is at 5209-15 Moneta avenue, adjoining the former shop, and the Cain home on a lot of the same size, on which Mr. Cain built a one-story plant tree years ago, after a number of years slow development work in the original tiny shop.

Within the past three years the Cain gas radiator business has grown very rapidly, through development of patents which give these Los Angeles gas radiators the distinction of being the only ones made in the United States, so mixing the gas and the air as to effect combustion of the carbon-monoxide gas and eliminating all fumes, odors and poisons, which have consittuted the drawback to this form of heating for many years.

This Los Angeles manufacturer and inventor has already secured five patents and has two more pending, covering this mixing feature and other exclusive improvements as the result of which the demand has grown so rapidly as to force the building of the new plant, and to convince the owner that the Los Angeles gas heaters, logs, radiants, radiators and combinations, can be easily brought into national distribution.

The front of the new factory on Moneta avenue is of ornamental brick and terra-cott, with three stores on the ground floor, of which one is being handsomely fitted up for a display room. The 127-foot extension is of mill and glass construction, with plating, grinding, and shipping and storage rooms on the first floor, and machine shop, assembling rooms, stock rooms and designing rooms on the second floor. The factory employed thirty-five hands in the old plant and reached a turnover of nearly $100,000 last year; and in the new plant it is expected to increase the working force to sixty-five, and to double the output within the next twelve months. The new building was occupied last week for the first time and will get under way in good earnest beginning tomorrow.

The Cain jet system of combustion, which is the name under which the inventions are applied, is a feature of the entire line of gas heaters, logs and radiators, comprising two dozen styles, many of which are highly ornamental and artistic.

With the completion of the new factory, and facilities for turning out double the number of heaters, it is the purpose to go after distribution in a much greater territory than heretofore, says Mr. Cain; and as the use of gas heates is confined to no climate or district, he says that in a few years the Los Angeles types, being covered by his patents, will become known wherever gas is or can be used as a fuel for heat; and because of their safety and odorlessness, the popularity of this form of portable heaters will become general.

Judged by the speed of growth in three years, this gives promise of a large and important industry in the local metal trades, while it adds one more to the success of this industrial center, producing its own capital out of its own production.

NEW BANK WILL BE OPENED AT MAYWOOD

Maywood is to have a new bank, according to information received by the Laguna Land and Water Company, Maywood selling agents. It will be located at the corner of Slausen and Cudahy, and will be known as the Maywood State Bank.

Los Angeles capitalists are back of the new venture, and the Maywood bank will be a branch of one of the larger banking institutions here, it is reported.

"Of all the South American republics none is more worthy of study by American interests than Venezuela, not only for trade, but as a new field for the development of natural resources, raw material and engineering projects, Mr. Bell says.

FAMOUS PINES IN THIS STATE

Lumberman Calls Attention to This Forest Asset

Is Big Industry in Northern California Counties

Much Used in Manufacture of Veneers and Panels

California sugar pine and white pine are important products of the northern part of this State, and serve with our famous redwood to give California status in the lumber industries. C. J. Laughlin, manager for the Long-Bell Lumber Company, in the Loew State Building, states that Southern Californians will do well to add these pines to their list of products in which California leads, and to boost them in the interest of their Golden State brothers in the northern counties. Of these pines Mr. Laughlin says:

SUN-KISSED PINES

California white pine is a massive straight-trunked tree from 125 to 140 feet average height, clear of branches for forty to sixty feet.

The wood has many uses for which it is admirably adapted, among them being sash, doors, factory purposes, packing cases, piano boxes, candy cases, orange and lemon boxes, bee hives, and numerous others. Perhaps one of the uses which is more interesting to the average person is the manufacture of California white pine doors, which are used throughout the United States, and because of their quality and ease in hanging and painting are greatly in demand.

MAKE VENEERS

The manufacture of rotary-cut veneer for the door panels is especially interesting. The very best of the logs are selected and placed in concrete vats filled with water. During the first twelve hours the temperature of the water is brought up to 190 deg. Fahrenheit. This temperature is held for twenty-four hours; then the heat is turned off and the logs allowed to remain in the water another twelve hours to equalize the heat throughout the log, and allow them to pick up all possible moisture to bring about an equal moisture content throughout the log.

The bark is then peeled off and the log swung to a huge lathe, where it is turned over and over against a knife which is set to cut certain thicknesses, and great long sheets of steaming veneer are peeled off. These are cut to desired lengths, stacked on cars with strips between and put into steam-heated dry kilns where they are dried.

In making this veneer into panels, the two outside pieces are laid with the grain of the wood running opposite the grain of the middle piece or core, and the three are coated with water-proof glue, put into a clamp and pressed, taken out, sanded to make them smooth, and are ready for the doors or commercial purposes.

LOFT AT SEVENTH AND MAIN LEASED

Through R. A. Rowan & Co., the Owl Drug Company has leased the entire loft of the building at the southwest corner of Seventh and Main streets for a long term of years to Painless Parker, Inc., dentists. The total rental was reported at $35,000.

Extensive alterations and improvements will be made by the lessees. Operating-rooms will be built, and new furniture and equipment will be installed. The proposed improvements will cost about $40,000.

RIVERSIDE IS MAKING BIG RECORD

Building Activity and Postal Receipts Gain; School Bonds Sold

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

RIVERSIDE, July 21.—Building in this city will go well over the million mark this year, if the present average monthly valuation is maintained. On July 1 the total had climbed close to the $600,000 mark, and the month to date is in excess of $75,000. Riverside took twelfth place among Southern California cities in building valuation for the month of June.

Business and residence property continue to move at a gratifying rate. Among the notable transfers of the week was the sale of the Nevada Building, near the corner of Ninth and Main streets, to Fred Stebler, for a consideration close to $50,000.

Postal receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, amounting to more than $95,000, were the greatest in the city's history.

Plans are being worked out for the development of the largest subdivision project ever placed on the market in the city's history. A project of special interest because of the change that will be effected in the appearance of the property, is the decision of C. P. Hancock to abandon his brickyard on North Market street and convert the plot into high-class residence lots. The first brick made at this yard, where 50,000,000 brick have been manufactured since 1902, were used in the construction of the Glenwood Mission Inn.

The sale of $225,000 of high school and junior college bonds this week, making a total of $500,000 with the elementary school issue sold last month, will add materially to the building total for the year. Among the first buildings to be erected will be a brick or concrete structure to replace the Lincoln school at Sixth and Mulberry streets. The Lowell school on Victoria avenue will be enlarged by the addition of two classrooms, and five classrooms will be added to the Irving school at Fourteenth and Victoria. Two additional classrooms will be allotted the Longfellow school on East Seventh street.

The citrus crop has brought the growers a fine return, the output this year, despite the frosts of January, being only 300 carloads under last year's shipments to date.

TO EXTEND ROAD

Supervisors Approve Continuation of Sacramento Valley Boulevard

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

MADDOCK (Sutter County) July 21.—Farmers here are much pleased over the fact that Sutter County Supervisors have definitely decided to join the movement for the extension of the Sacramento Valley Boulevard.

This action was taken at Yuba City recently by a vote of 4 to 1, and means that ultimately the Natomas Boulevard from Sacramento north, will be extended up the river to a point opposite Karnak in Sutter Basin.

The next move will be to get a bridge across the Feather River, thus opening traffic directly into the great Sutter Basin area.

Not only will the road be extended from the present north point of the Natomas Boulevard, which is opposite Elkhorn, but it will be brought up to a point near Nicolaus, connecting with the present county highway system.

One of the chief proponents of the road was Peter J. Shields of Sacramento, a nation-wide authority on agricultural topics, and a progressive farmer who has a river bottom place in Sutter County.

PREPARE FOR BUSY SEASON

Many Inquiries Are Coming from the East

Plans Completed for Several Fine Homes

School Building Proceeding on Large Scale

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PASADENA, July 19.—Inquiries continue to pour into the real estate offices here for the winter season, and in increasing volume, and brisk business continues everywhere in lot sales and small houses, with few deals of any size reported. Building permits so far this month have far surpassed the same month last year and a large number of bungalows are going up in all parts of town.

The Frank Meline Company has nearly completed a ten-room Colonial house for Miss Helen McGill at 737 South Pasadena avenue in the Orange Grove section. This house was practically designed around Miss McGill's fine collection of colonial furniture, of which a prize piece is a table on which Gen. George Washington once played whist. The same company is also putting the finishing touches on an eight-room Spanish house for the Misses Catherine and Mary Bryce at Madeline street and Pasadena avenue.

Plans are under way in the Meline offices for a ten-room Spanish house for Mr. and Mrs. Westman in Altadena, to cost $20,000, and for an art gallery addition to the home of Mrs. Ida Huntington at Glendale. Mrs. Huntington has a Murillo and other valuable paintings. Her home is on Matilaha Road.

The greatest building activity just at present is on the school buildings. The new Andrew Jackson, Thomas Jefferson and Junipero Serra schools are nearing completion and will be ready for the opening sessions September 12, while Washington school will not be completed until spring. Actual construction work on the latter was started within the week, much time having been taken by grading. The next in order is the new William McKinley school, preliminary plans of which have just been approved.

Building permits of the week include: First Methodist Church, Colorado and Oakland, foundation, $12,000; L. G. Stanford, 280 South Chester avenue, six-room house and garage, $5000; Walter W. Gerlach, 464-468 East Colorado street, three-store building, $21,500; Mrs. E. F. Holmes, 141 North Grand avenue, alterations to house, $37,000.

Milk Company Lets Contract for New Plant

A contract has been let by the Consumers' Milk Company to the United Construction Company for the erection of the first unit of its new plant on Jefferson street, near Hill. The building, which will be 50x150 feet, will be of Class A construction throughout, and will cost about $175,000. Clifford A. Truesdale, head of the department of Architecture at the Southern Branch of the University of California, and a member of the American Institute of Architects, designed the building.

Temporary quarters are to be opened soon by the Consumers' Milk Company, which will start operations prior to the completion of the new plant. Two prominent Long Beach men were recently added to the staff. Ed S. Acres, former secretary of the publicity and convention bureaus of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce will manage the ice cream plant of the company in Long Beach, and W. R. Farnell has been elected to the board of Directors. Mr. Farnell is also a director of the Golden State Bank and president of the Perfect Castor Manufacturing Company.

Phone Service at Visalia is to be Extended

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VISALIA, July 21.—New service will be rendered and many additional telephones installed by the long-awaited construction gang of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, which has arrived here for a stay of over two weeks. Estimated improvements in the Visalia system will require an expenditure of $25,000. The amount of cable will be practically doubled, but no enlargement of office equipment will be made at this time.

New cables will be extended in all parts of the city, making it possible to have new telephones installed about August 15 or September 1. The construction gang of ten men is under supervision of Fred String, foreman.

M. B. Charles has completed final negotiations for the purchase of the Sierra Park and the adjoining automobile park from R. F. Cross and R. E. Hyde for a consideration of $25,000. Wallace and Bush, contractors of San Jose, who constructed the swimming pool, received $12,500 for the tank and improvements upon the property. Mr. Charles has been operating the park since the opening of the season and intends adding amusement features from time to time.

DINUBA GAS COMPANY IS ENLARGING PLANT

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

DINUBA, July 22.—Fifty thousand dollars is being expended by the Riverbend Gas and Water Company in improving gas service in Dinuba and vicinity. Among improvements outlined by George W. Wiley, manager of the gas company, are a 100,000-foot gas holder and a new 200 horsepower boiler. Distribution mains are also being increased in size and extended. The contemplated improvements exceed the entire cost of the plant when it was purchased by the company seven years ago.

The price of the lots includes street work, sidewalks, curbs, gas, water and electricity.

NOTICE
ADVANCE IN PRICES
MARSHALL MANOR LOTS
Tuesday, July 25, 1922

The supervisors cut the prices of this fine property from the original list—25% to 40%. Big lots 50 by 155—ranging in value from $900 to $1000—were cut to $650 and $700. Other lots were cut in proportion. The sale, since the announcement, July 1st, has been steady and consistent. There have never been any big crowds or crush to take care of—as our appropriation did not permit of spending big amounts to attract the public. But the fact remains—out of 413 lots in the original tract—only approximately 100 remain to be sold—the lots have been sold largely to those acquainted with Southwest realty values. In order to give all prospective purchasers an opportunity to share in these wonderful values—the prices now existing will remain in force until 6 p.m., Tuesday, July 25, 1922, at which date, there will be a slight advance in the price of some of the lots. All the $700 lots unsold will be repriced to sell at $750. Pacific avenue lots, now $1000, will be advanced to sell at $1200. Be sure and take advantage of these prices today—before the advance—Tuesday, July 25.

DAILY TRADE TALK

Week in Review; Conditions at Home and Abroad; Cotton; Crops; Business News

BY CHAPIN HALL

The ability of our industries to do an improved business in spite of serious labor troubles and a poor European outlook is the outstanding feature of the present situation, according to national trade reviews. The current economic thought of the country, as represented by these business organs, shows an almost universal confidence in the administration's ability to reach a sane solution of the coal and rail controversies and a general tendency to discount the seriousness of Europe's maladjustments.

Price movements are particularly encouraging to the manufacturing and merchandising interests of the country. In June, Dun's index number rose to 173,743, against 169,997 June 1 and 164,444 January 1. The foreign index numbers, too, are beginning to rise and this is a safeguard against any bad break in American prices. The general belief is that business will not be disturbed by any unsettlement of prices during the remainder of 1922.

The position of several of our staple commodities has improved materially. Cotton is now at a price level where it can be profitably grown provided the production per acre is not too heavily reduced by damage from insects and other causes. The status of copper is greatly improved as a result of the record-breaking reduction in surplus stocks. The recovery in sugar has been surprising. This week raw sugar sold at its highest level for the entire year, a development that was entirely unexpected by the sugar trade only a few months ago.

Sound conditions also prevail in steel, textile, leather, chemicals and many other branches of industry. Boots and shoes are showing continuous gains from their bad slump. Wool prices are much higher than a year ago, and the woolen manufacturing industry is active.

Weak spots are, of course, noticeable, but there are not many new ones. The rubber-tire business has taken a turn for the worse, owing partly to disappointing sales, but mostly to cutthroat competition. Automobile sales are declining, as they usually do at this season. Wheat exports have been low, indicating that the world is economizing on its wheat consumption, but of late the export totals have shown a sharp upturn from the lowest levels. Foreign trade remains unsatisfactory.

On the other hand, many evidences of general prosperity are steadily manifesting. Freight car loadings continue to make an excellent showing, unemployment is diminishing, and the demand for all sorts of goods and products is expanding. The nation's banks are in an unusually strong position, which indicates that the crop movement and the autumn trade should be financed with the greatest possible ease.

THROUGHOUT THE STATE

Harvest conditions throughout California are excellent, and practically all of the fruit crops are turning out better than was at first anticipated. It was feared that the heavy frost early in the season had damaged all of them, but the only one to suffer materially was the cherry crop.

The Wells-Fargo Nevada National Bank, of San Francisco, is authority for the statement that opening prices for canned and dried fruit are, on the average, above those of 1921. The carry-over has been cleaned out and it is expected that prices will hold firm.

There is some fear on the part of producers and shippers that the rail strike may leave them with insufficient refrigerator cars, and this is the most serious aspect of the packing and shipping situation at the present time.

Owing to the demand for labor in the rural districts there is little unemployment anywhere in the State except as labor is affected by the strike. The wholesale and jobbing trade continues to show improvement in practically all lines, and market and trading conditions appear to be more nearly normal now than at any period since the war.

Collections in all lines are reported good.

A decline in the number of business failures reflects the gradual readjustment of business to normal trading conditions. While the volume of liabilities is still large industry is being re-established upon a safer price basis, and in many cases it has been possible for borrowers to pay off past-due indebtedness.

GUESSING THE MARKET

Most market forecasters are wrong more than half the time, but the bulk of expert opinion now available favors the idea that the next month or six weeks will develop a narrow and irregular range. There are some Pollyannas left, and these point to the recent upward swing to bolster up their belief that tomorrow will be better than today. There are, however, a number of factors which will militate against a continued strong market. Labor troubles, unsettled foreign conditions, shortage of coal and subnormal demand in some lines does not make for unlimited strength. Yet in the face of such conditions, as well grounded a reviewer as Theodore H. Price, who is quoted elsewhere in this column, has the temerity to say that conditions are improving as a matter of fact. One guess is just as good as another and sometimes a good deal better.

The situation as summarized in Bradstreet's Review published yesterday in New York says that industry is more irregular, with the railroad strike and through it the coal tie-up, throwing deeper shadows upon manufacturing interests whose need for fuel is weekly becoming more pressing. The refusal of the coal miners' unions to accept arbitration has been a big disappointment to the country and this feeling has been accentuated by knowledge of the fact that the railway shopmen's strike has been so conducted, by delaying both loaded and empty cars in transit, as to deprive essential industries of badly needed fuel.

Coal strike authorities report something like a scramble for fuel, with accompanying feverish price bidding for supplies, which has proved too big a burden for some of the less favorably situated consumers. So far the iron and steel trades have been hardest hit, especially in the neighborhood of the most strongly unionized mines.

"Aside from strikes the outlook is generally favorable, especially as western crops have held all of their recent promise."

Weekly bank clearings, $7,061,177,000.

ACTIVE BOND MARKET

An active bond market and rising prices next fall are predicted by Harold B. Reed, of the local offices of Blair and Company, who has just returned from a six weeks' tour of the East and Pacific Northwest. The market is at present convalescing from a bad case of indigestion brought on by the large influx of new issues a few months ago. Signs that the recovery is in progress are found in the advancing prices of Liberties and seasoned issues. In a short time, according to Mr. Reed, this improvement will be handed on to the newer issues and the dealers' shelves will again be bare.

The basis for this predicted activity in bonds and stocks during the coming months are the cheap and easy money rates which continue to sag daily. On top of the internal monetary ease, there are the impending repayments of the foreign debts which will bring even more capital into the country. Great Britain's refunding operations are already under way and any payments made to the United States government will probably mean the retirement of a large block of Liberties throwing investors into the market for other securities.

The July reinvestment demand was a disappointment to many dealers this year who have not noted the change in conditions that has taken place since 1920. In former days, nearly all bonds were dated for interest payments on January and July, but in the last two or three years, Mr. Reed points out, issues have been coming out in such irregular profusion and at all times of the year that the amount of cash distributed at the old-time interest dates has been materially lessened. In addition, investors are no longer saving up their funds for bond purchases at certain specified periods but are buying as soon as money is available in order to get in before interest rates go still lower.

COPPER IMPROVES

Copper consumers are placing contracts for the red metal to cover their needs as far ahead as October and November, according to trade reports. Such contracts, however, are being made at or around the present spot price, which is 13 3-4 to 13 7-8 cents a pound. It has been many a day since the trade has witnessed future buying, and the development of this demand has improved sentiment in producing circles. One of the reasons for the recent sluggishness of the market was the failure of consumers to make known their needs over a specified time, thus creating uncertainty in the industry as far as operations were concerned. With buyers coming into the market for delayed deliveries and with spot demand continuing on a good scale, predictions are again being made that a stiffening of prices will be seen. In addition, there has also been increased foreign demand, but, due to keen competition for foreign business, prices for export metal show little change. Germany, France and England are still the principal buyers in this market, and Germany, despite the condition of her finances, is able to obtain all the metal needed.

CONDITIONS IMPROVING

Theodore H. Price, editor of the New York Commerce and Finance, in a comprehensive review of trade says that conditions are improving, and "it seems somewhat gratuitous to look for trouble." Automobiles, he says, are still selling about as fast as they can be turned out. No one seems to know what becomes of the used cars. They are like used pins. The price of wheat is about the only thing the farmer complains of.

The security markets are firm again. Under the lead of the Liberty issues, which are all above par, bonds are firm and railroad stocks show a tendency to discount labor troubles and are sharply higher on the expectation

Stock Market Reacts to Rail Strike News

BY FRANKLIN K. SPRAGUE
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—The course of today's stock market differed little from that of Friday, prices moving irregularly throughout the two hours of trading. Once again it was evident that the market has lost much of its enthusiasm and the more serious aspects of the strike situation were realized. There were scattered advances here and there, but except in the case of specialties quotations moved within narrow limits, with a certain degree of heaviness apparent, considering the list as a whole. Again it was noticeable, however, that prices did not give way sharply under such selling pressure as existed. The undertone was actually strong in the face of the week's developments.

With regard to the two strikes which are in the eyes of most people at the moment, and which are receiving particular attention from the financial community, developments continued to be of a character that showed a wide breach between the companies and the men. When all is said, Wall street seems to be still of the opinion that some basis of settlement will be arrived at before many days have passed. But perhaps more important than this in creating a more favorable view of the outcome of the difficulties was the disposition of several of the roads to make separate agreements with the men, as was done in the case of the Pennsylvania. It may be that ultimately this may be the chief mode of settlement which will bring to an end the rail strike. In relation to the coal strike the idea of rationing supplies of coal could hardly be looked upon with other than some degree of alarm since such a plan, if put into effect during the coming months, might cause a discrimination against industry and a reflection of enforced inactivity in income statements.

The foreign exchange market again held within narrow bounds and the volume of transactions was relatively small. Marks declined ⅝ to .19½ of a cent. Continued pressure on marks can undoubtedly be expected until such time as the reparations question is settled.

WEEKLY FINANCIAL REVIEW

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—The financial and commodity markets maintained a fairly even tone during the better part of the week, regardless of the severe handicaps imposed by the crises in the coal and railroad strikes and further slowing down of industrial operations.

Prices of stocks were irregular at their worst, with an occasional display of pronounced strength in several of the seasoned rails, notably cotton carriers and some of the high-grade specialties under professional control.

Steels and equipments were in demand, partly to cover more or less extensive short contracts, but for the most part because trade conditions seemed to justify hopes of a revival of activity in those industries.

Coppers, chemicals, textiles and numerous subsidy issues derived their tentative support from the same reasons, but oils were variable.

Motors also lost ground, their reversal being largely ascribed to the precarious financial position of several prominent companies, which it was feared, might necessitate reorganization or drastic capital readjustment.

Unusual conditions ruled in the money market, rates for call loans developing unexpected firmness, which time funds, especially the shorter dates, eased perceptibly with more liberal purchases of mercantile paper at an average of 4 per cent for all maturities.

Regardless of Wall Street's traditional indifference to labor troubles the week in the financial market offered cumulative evidence that the prolongation of the coal and railroad strikes had finally left its impress on trade and industry.

Figures issued by the Department of Commerce at Washington and authoritative mercantile agencies plainly indicated that the improvement noted in June had not been maintained and that the immediate future is more obscure.

These conditions were partly attributed to seasonal slackening, but they were accelerated to a marked extent by higher production costs, prospective reductions of railroad earnings and an enormous shrinkage of buying power through labor's loss of wages.

The stock market lapsed into its customary midsummer dullness, but values in the transportation and coal groups were not materially affected. Reactions were more pronounced in the oil and motor divisions, some of those issues showing sharp depreciations.

Predictions that the oil industry is approaching a state of overproduction and that further cuts in raw and refined products are inevitable gained wider currency. Reversals in the automobile list were accompanied by well-defined reports of impending reorganization and capital readjustment.

Steels, equipments, coppers and kindred industrials denoted good support at moderate concessions. Forecasts of the quarterly statement of the United States Steel Corporation, which will be issued next Tuesday, were of an optimistic character.

Anomalous conditions ruled in the money market, call loans evincing a firmer tone, while virtually all time offerings, bank acceptances and merchants' paper eased and were in better demand by interior as well as local banks.

International exchanges showed temporary unsettlement, especially Central European rates, but later advices which suggested an understanding between England and France regarding Germany's obligations to the Allies affected substantial recoveries.

"Legal details of this issue subject to approval of____"

YOU see some such an expression as this in virtually every bond circular you receive. It is at once a tribute to the eminence of the attorney or attorneys named, as well as a protection to you.

One of the most important considerations in a bond issue is the Trust Deed. This document defines precisely the character of the obligation and security behind it, and prescribes the manner in which both interest and principal shall be paid.

It is a document that must be flawless in the protection it affords the investor. For that reason, eminent counsel—specialists in preparing and examining trust deeds—are always employed by reputable investment houses to approve the trust deed.

Whether we underwrite, or buy and re-sell a given issue of bonds, we regard this as a most important matter. Legal counsel passing on the trust deed must be satisfactory to us in every case.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—Tacit approval by the Federal government of the independent steel mergers provided the only feature of today's dull and otherwise featureless session.

Extreme gains of 1 to almost 3 points were scored by Bethlehem, Lackawanna, Republic and Midvale steels, but this advantage was largely forfeited on realizing sales.

Motors manifested much of their recent reactionary trend, Studebaker being subjected to further selling pressure with several of the less prominent issues of that group.

Rails were listless but final quotations were mainly towards lower levels, equipments, coppers and related shares moved within the narrowest limits. Mexican Petroleum again featured the oils, its early strength, however, soon being dissipated. Sales amounted to 275,000 shares.

Weekly trade reviews bore out recent statements of a halt in general business due chiefly to the coal and railroad strikes. Distribution of merchandise fell below the corresponding period of last year but collections were higher.

A contraction of $84,000,000 in actual loans and discounts was the noteworthy item in the weekly clearing house statement. This was accompanied by a decrease of $95,600,000 in net demand deposits and a cash gain of $31,564,000, increasing excess reserves to almost $44,000,000.

REDLANDS BUSINESS PROPERTY IS ACTIVE

SEVERAL COMMERCIAL BUILDINGS ARE BEING REMODELED AND IMPROVED

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, July 22.—Business property in Redlands is again showing activity. Several of the business blocks here are being remodeled, and other work is contemplated. Work was started this week on remodeling the old Grand Theater building block. The stage will be torn out of the theater, the floor raised, the front rebuilt and Howland & Holiday, one of the large harness and auto top firms of the city, will have the building on a long lease. Sering & Cortner have leased the adjoining room, and will remodel it, greatly enlarging their furniture store.

Work is also well under way on the remodeling of the Hellman Bank building to increase the size of the working quarters of the bank. The block on Fifth street and State street is also being remodeled and will be made into offices which are all rented.

L. M. Smith, who purchased the Creighton block just north of the Hellman Bank, is planning to make several improvements in the property which contains store rooms, a rooming house and office rooms. A. J. Wilson has purchased the building just west of his big oil, grain and fuel plant on West Citrus and will remodel it for storage.

START BRIDGE WORK AT RIMPAU HILL

David Barry & Co., agents for Wilshire Crest and Rimpau Hill, report that Roberts & Robinson, engineers and contractors, have a large force at work installing reinforced concrete bridges in the Arroyo de Los Jardines, the contract price being $27,000.

These bridges span the wooded spring brook in the Arroyo. On Wilshire Crest a few of the lots are laid out with great depth, so as to have the building site on the hilltop and the spring brook through the garden. The beautiful Spanish residence being built by the Milwaukee Building Company for the Los Angeles Times, the first prize in the Times contest, overlooks these gardens.

WHAT'S BEHIND ACTIVE STOCKS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

Sears Roebuck, 79 3-4

NEW YORK, July 22.—Sears, Roebuck & Co. is another merchandising organization, the full value of whose assets as a going concern is not found in an appraisal of tangible assets. Good will is of great value to such a company and this is carried in the 1921 balance sheet at $30,000,000. Net tangible assets applicable to the common stock as of December 31, 1921, were $71.74 a share.

The $100,000,000 common stock is preceded by $8,000,000 of 7 per cent cumulative preferred, and a funded debt of about $30,000,000. According to a recent announcement the company plans to retire this obligation in full next October. Despite a loss of $16,435,000 in 1921, due in a great measure to depreciation of inventories, net earnings for ten years ended December 31, 1921, averaged 14.80 per cent annually on the average amount of stock outstanding. Gross sales for the first six months of 1922 aggregated $8,-568,000 compared with $89,415,000 in the first half of 1921 when prices were higher.

Except for the period 1917-21 these sales were the largest since incorporation in 1906. The preferred stock has received 7 per cent since 1907, the common received 7 per cent from 1909 to the third quarter of 1917, then 2 per cent quarterly up to the first quarter of 1921, the last payment being in scrip. Stock dividends of 33 per cent in 1911, 50 per cent in 1915, 25 in 1917 and 40 in 1920 were also paid. Range of stock since 1907 (prices not adjusted for stock dividends:) High, 243 in 1920; low, 20 in 1907; yesterday's close, 79¾.

LOS ANGELES, July 22.—The market on Valencias continues strong with practically no change in prices over a week ago. Buyers in the large marketing centers are eager for supplies and are willing to pay fancy prices for best grades, desirable sizes, notwithstanding liberal receipts of local summer fruits that are offered at reasonable prices.

F.o.b. quotations are as follows: Fancy grade sizes, 200s and larger, $9 to $9.50; 216s, $8.75; 250s, $8; 288s, $7; smaller sizes, $6.25 per box. Choice fruit generally 25 cents per box less than above prices.

Growers in the Upland-Ontario district are figuring on at least 75 per cent of a normal crop of oranges for the coming season. They report that where they were first inclined to be skeptical, a more careful examination of the trees revealed plenty of fruit on the inside, and while a 50 per cent crop for San Bernardino county as a whole may be correct, the Upland-Ontario districts will make a decidedly better showing.

An official estimate of the bearing and nonbearing acreage of citrus fruit in California, compiled by the Agricultural Statistical Service of the State Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the Federal Bureau of Markets, reveals the fact that there are approximately 257,973 acres. Commercial plantings only, were taken into consideration and covered plantings to and including the year 1920. On this basis there were at that time 228,927 bearing acres of oranges, lemons and grapefruit and 27,070 acres of nonbearing trees of these three varieties.

It is estimated that new acreage planted in 1921 approximated, oranges, 1705 acres; lemons, 220 acres, and grapefruit, 47 acres. This would bring the total estimated acreage in the State to date to 257,973 acres. The acreage of oranges, lemons and grapefruit, both bearing and nonbearing to and including 1921 is as follows: Oranges, in bearing, 179,465; nonbearing, 16,589; lemons, in bearing, 45,814; nonbearing, 9168; grapefruit, in bearing, 3550; nonbearing, 499.

LEMONS

The demand for California lemons is only fair. The generally cool weather in the East is not conducive to a good demand for lemons and until real summer weather sets in, not much change in the situation is looked for.

F.o.b. quotations are on a basis of $5 to $5.50 per box for best stock.

There are on hand and available within the next thirty days, approximately 120,000 boxes of foreign lemons.

The damage to the Sicily lemon crop by high winds of early spring will not amount to more than 20 per cent it is now believed. Early in the season it was reported as a 50 per cent loss. This season's crop of foreign lemons is expected to aggregate 30,000 carloads. Approximately 20 per cent is exported to the United States.

Invest in a Producing Company — An Attractive Opport

Become a Partner in an Oil Company With a Wonderful Record of One Hundred Per Cent Success!

The Company Already Has Seven Producing Wells

GET out of the ranks of indecision. You have read and heard of hundreds of persons making money—profit—success in oil. Now, take the time to read a few facts about the Huntington & Northern Petroleum Company.

The company has holdings in the heart of and alongside of the Huntington Beach Gushers.

Read this excerpt from the Petroleum Record:

"Deeper Sands at Huntington Rhoades Oil Company Makes Important Discovery in Southwestern Part of Beach Field.

"At Huntington Beach an important development of recent date was the completion of a 1500-barrel well in the southwestern part of the field by the Rhoades Oil Company. This part of the field has been scoffed at by operators because all wells heretofore drilled there were small producers and yielded heavy oil. But the achievement of the Rhoades Company upsets all expectations and is the signal for greatly renewed activity in that particular part of the field.

"In the Rhoades well the top and heavy oil sand was shut off and the drill sent deeper. At 2683 feet the next sand was pierced and the company was rewarded with a 1500-barrel well flowing 23-gravity oil. Gas pressure continues to increase in the well and the output of the oil is going up also. It looks like the well will produce 2000 barrels steadily before long."

Now then, the following statement cannot be emphasized too strongly—The Huntington & Northern property is approximately

ONLY 300 FT. SOUTH OF THE RHOADES WELL.

Better hasten to join the Huntington & Northern Petroleum Co.

The Huntington & Northern Petroleum Company has a record of one hundred per cent success.

It has absolutely no indebtedness.

The company already has seven wells drilled in the Kern River district — Every One a Producer. Nineteen more wells are to be drilled by the company in that field.

The Huntington & Northern Petroleum Company has also taken over three desirable and proved drilling sites in the Huntington Beach Field and also has holdings in the Los Gatos Field and Imperial Valley.

And this is the reason why you are offered an opportunity to secure stock in the company. It needs some extra money for further development work and plans to sell 25,000 more shares at one dollar per share par value to extend operations in the Huntington Beach district.

Remember that Huntington Beach is the wonder oil field of California. With only about 100 wells so far, it is third on the list of producers in this State, producing more oil than the famous Whittier-Fullerton district, which has about 1100 wells.

Think over that last statement!

The directors of the Huntington & Northern Petroleum Company believe they cannot possibly drill on their Huntington Beach properties without bringing in a big well. This opinion is conceded, also, by the largest oil drilling companies in the field.

An investment in Huntington & Northern entitles you to profits from every well which the company now owns, or which it will drill on any of its leases. To give you a clear idea of what those calculations are based on very conservative estimates. Indeed, one may expect very, very large profits and returns from an investment in this company.

The Huntington & Northern Petroleum Company is managing its business in the same way as the Standard Oil Company operates; that is, by selling stock to shareholders and dividing the profit in proportion to the original investment.

Fifty per cent of its profits go into future developments and the other 50 per cent is immediately divided among the shareholders.

The Huntington & Northern Petroleum Company is operating under the corporation laws of California and on permit from the State Commissioner, which assures protection of investors' money. The company fully conforms to all the requirements of these judicious statutes, and invites, nay, welcomes an investigation of its business by prospective investors.

The total capitalization of the company is only $285,000, which is unusually low for the field in which it is operating. It is conceded that the company which has the smallest capitalization and owns the most valuable property is the one that will pay the largest returns. That's why the dollars you invest in Huntington & Northern should grow to larger proportion and with greater speed than in an ordinary company.

From the foregoing you will readily understand you will get a square deal in an active oil company already owning producing wells and going after more in the best-known oil fields.

Buy all the shares you are able to purchase, but do it at once! The erection of the drilling rig is already under construction at Well Site No. 1, Huntington Beach. Drilling is expected to be completed in ninety days. Then you will be not only a stockholder in the company's Kern River Oil Field properties, but in a potential Huntington Beach Gusher.

The names of the officers and directors of the company are as follows:

President, W. R. McKenzie; Vice-President, H. L. Rodman; Treasurer, Ned W. Williams; Secretary, Harold C. Morton; Director, Thos. W. Coverson; Director, F. R. Gilbreth; Director, F. E. Creamer; Director, L. B. Goff; Director, J. E. King; Director, James B. Fagan.

BOND QUOTATIONS

Profit Takin

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 22.—Week-end profit-taking was noted in today's bond market, but Liberty issues held the greater part of yesterday's record quotation.

Foriegn loans were irregular, British, French and other European issues easing slightly, with firmness for Japanese first 4½s. Trading in rails and other domestic issues was nominal at fractional changes from yesterday's final prices. Junior rails of the western and southwestern divisions were the firmest features. Mercantile Marine 6s lost half a point.

FBF & Co

To You Who Have Invested in CALIFORNIA Oil Fields

The Fosters Wish You All Good Fortune!

Your properties are in the Golden State—ours are in the Lone Star State, the two greatest oil-producing commonwealths of America.

We both belong to the same vital industry—the production of oil —and therefore are of the same fraternity.

The dividends which the Fosters pay California unit holders from the golden sands of Texas come as a veritable stream of gold to add to the accumulation of wealth from the production of California's oil fields.

Your interests and our interests are identical and you have our most cordial good wishes.

O-TEXA

A money-making opportunity—one of the finest that even Texas and the Fosters can make possible.

Orange — Breckenridge — Burk-Burnette — Electra — Mexia — Bunger! Names of world-wide fame, esteemed wherever petroleum performs its mighty service to man!

These are but a few of the fields that have made Texas so mighty as an area of oil production. They have created millionaires by the thousands, while the wealth they have produced mounts into the billions.

Among these stars of oildom, Bunger shines with a unique brilliance. It is known as the field of the five oil sands, and is prized by men in the inner circles of the Texas oil industry for the steady, dependable and enduring character of its wells, and for the high grade of its oil.

Linked with the latest and one of the most important developments in Bunger is the name of the Fosters. Several months ago they pioneered an extension of the Bunger field, secured big acreage there, and commenced drilling activities.

Mighty Mexian No. 7 was their reward. A 3000-barrel producer of 42 gravity oil!

Mexian No. 7 was the culmination of one great Foster money-making opportunity and the forerunner of another. Swiftly realizing how definitely this great gusher proved the presence of a vast pool of oil in this district, the Fosters promptly formed a new syndicate to drill on acreage immediately adjacent to Mexian No. 7.

To this great money-making opportunity—one of the finest that even Texas and the Fosters can make possible—they have given the name of O-TEXA.

This is O-TEXA

Two 10-acre leases valued at $200,000.

Two wells guaranteed by a $70,000 Bond deposited with the Commissioner of Corporations of California to be drilled immediately. The contracts are let, the crews engaged and a race started between them to reach the great pool of wealth-making oil under the fifth producing sand of Bunger.

Great, black splotches of oil from Mexian's gusher mark the spot on which O-TEXA Well No. 1 is being drilled. For O-TEXA Well No. 1 is an off-set to Mexian No. 7, drilling just 330 feet inside the barbed-wire fence that separates the two leases.

It is the twelfth off-set well to be drilled by the Fosters during the past seven months. Every one of the eleven that have preceded it has been equal in volume to the well it off-sets.

O-TEXA Well No. 2 sits on the same 3000-barrel structure a quarter of a mile on the other side of Mexian. Her prospects are quite as well defined and attractive as those of her sister well.

There are, all told, but 2500 O-TEXA Units. Every unit is a title to ownership of oil—a perpetual, indivisible, unalterable right to one barrel out of every 2500 O-TEXA receives from all its wells, on both its ten-acre 7-16ths leases. No other syndicate can ever share in the production from O-TEXA'S twenty acres, no matter if O-TEXA drills ten wells and obtains oil worth tens of millions. The Fosters agree to market the oil and remit to unit owners their pro-rata share of the returns each thirty days.

This Offering To End Suddenly

O-TEXA is the sixth money-making opportunity the Fosters have offered the public of California since last summer. Three of these enterprises, with wells producing no more than 200 barrels of oil a day, have paid regularly monthly dividends for the past five, six and eight months, at an average rate of more than 70% per year. The 4th and 5th syndicates have just brought in producing wells, and will commence paying dividends within the next 30 days. We predict that the offering of O-TEXA units will end with startling suddenness. We have been prepared for a speedy over-subscription of O-TEXA ever since it was announced. It is for this reason that each day we have issued a warning against any delay.

There are still a few O-TEXA units at $100 each. We shall therefore continue to accept orders tomorrow morning, filling them in the turn received, and reserving the right to reject all over-subscriptions with a return of your check.

File your subscriptions early!—in person—by mail—or telegraph.

The Fosters

Among the largest independent producers of oil in Texas.
Have drilled and completed 21 deep oil wells in the past twelve months.
Owners of leases, production and drilling equipment valued at more than $1,500,000.
Sponsors for five oil syndicates, representing an investment of more than $1,000,000.
Now offering their sixth syndicate, O-TEXA.

Grain Prices Decline on Weak Market

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 22.—Heaviness with a decline to the lowest prices of the season for December wheat and to the lowest for all futures of oats, with prices down to the lowest of the day and week and at the close there was only a fractional gain from the day's lowest point. Export business was good but failed to bring in enough general speculative buying to offset the effect of hedging and speculative sales. Closing trades showed losses of 3¼ to 3⅝ cents on wheat, ⅝ to 1¼ cents on corn, ⅛ to 1 cent on oats, ⅝ to 1⅜ cents on rye, while lard gained 12½ cents and short ribs 30 cents for the day.

Movement of prices throughout the week was irregular, with losses on wheat 4 to 5⅝ cents, corn ⅝ to 3 cents, oats 2⅝ to 3⅝ cents, rye 1⅛ to 3⅜ cents, December leading in all grains. Lard is off 17½ to 20 cents and short ribs 20 to 22½ cents as compared with a week ago.

Wheat was under pressure from start to finish. There were a few small rallies which met increased selling pressure, and, while July showed the most strength, September and December were weakest. December was under pressure, breaking from $1.12¾ to $1.10⅝, with the finish $1.10½ to $1.12⅝, with July at 1.11⅝.

A feature of the trading was the selling of July and buying of September by cash houses and of selling of September and of buying of December. There was nothing new on the strike situation. Crop news was generally favorable. Export business was good and seaboard was a liberal buyer of September and July without affecting prices.

A little buying of corn was on early reports of temperatures of 100 to 108 the last two days at Garden City, Kan., which is in the western section. It strengthened values for a time, but the break in wheat and general selling pressure carried the price down to the lowest of the season, 60⅛, with practically no rally at the last.

Oats were under pressure from speculators and liquidating longs, with December getting the poorest support and heaviest selling, dropping to 35½, with the close at 35⅝. There were export sales of 225,000 bushels with total sales of 445,000 bushels.

Rye was bought by exporters and sold by local traders and northwestern hedgers. Prices declined and closed around the bottom.

EVENING-UP MARKS WEEK'S COTTON CLOSE

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 22. — The undertone was steady and prices were little changed in today's abbreviated cotton market. Better weather reports offset bullish statistics. It was a typical Saturday affair of evening-up on the part of local professionals and outside operators, with price changes limited. Trading was mixed, southern interests acting on both sides and Wall street and New Orleans selling. By the end of the first hour the market was down 5 to 17 points from Friday's finals, and there was no material change in the last hour. The close was steady, somewhat up from low, off 9 to 16 points net.

Spot quiet, 15 points off, 21.95 for middling upland.

Southern spots were:
Galveston, 22.40, 10 points down.
New Orleans, 21.75, 50 points down.
Savannah, 21.80, 14 points down.
Augusta, 22.50, unchanged.
Memphis 22.50, unchanged.
Houston, 22.20, 10 points down.

STOREROOM LEASED TO LIGHTING COMPANY

The Solar Lighting Company, Inc., has just secured a long term lease through O. R. Elsner of the J. W. Lewis Company on the storeroom at 217 East Fourth street, in the new one-story brick building owned by Mellus Brothers and Company. The Solar Lighting Company handles all kinds of commercial lighting fixtures, and represents exclusively the Solar Illuminating Company of Chicago. The new quarters will be used for a sales and display room as well as for the purpose of assembling fixtures.

Another lease recently consummated through Mr. Elsner is on the brick warehouse building at 2145 Bay street, which has been leased by Rosenburg and Company, dealers in machinery, pumps and motors. E. R. Bosbyshell Company were the lessors.

Santa Fe Springs

Everybody knows about the sensational gusher production at Santa Fe Springs. Everyone has heard about the 4000-barrel "Agee," the 4000-barrel "Bell," the 4100-barrel Santa Fe No. 1 etc., etc., etc.

Suppose you were convinced that several companies or syndicates proposing to drill at SANTA FE SPRINGS or elsewhere had an equally good chance to bring in big similar barrel wells. Wouldn't you in that case want to invest in that Syndicate which would give YOU the chance to own when developed the greatest number of barrels of oil each month, or each day, or its equivalent in money? Don't read any further until you have either answered the above question "yes" or "no" (though, of course, you will answer "yes.")

24 Barrels Out of Each 10,000

That is the number of barrels you would own at the well on each $100 investment under the Syndicate-plan and present capitalization of VENTURA-TEX, providing we get a 10,000 barrel a day production from A-N-Y source.

If your (4) 4000-barrel wells were brought in—and who can say we have not the same chance Agee, Bell and others had who now have 4000-barrel wells—it would mean that you would own as above 38.40 barrels a day out of each 16,000.

24 Barrels of Oil Are Worth About $48 Today—38.40 Barrels Are Worth About $76.80 Today

So suppose you cut the present price of oil in half, your share of the Syndicate's daily gross oil income would be worth in dollars and cents from about $24.00 to $38.40 a day on each $100 investment in units at their present price at $50 a hundred units. The figures are astonishing, but such figures are at the base of the Rockefeller, Cheney, Canfield, Humphrey and other oil fortunes.

All Ventura-Tex's Eggs Not in One Basket

In addition to the SANTA FE SPRINGS ground above alluded to, the Syndicate owns the 160-acre "West" lease in Ventura County (upon which final details of the contract for drilling to begin forthwith are now being settled)—owns the 173-acre "Cunningham" lease in Ventura County (where high-gravity shallow production is to be had cheaply), and owns 2702 acres of leases in 16 of the livest counties in Texas.

Your units share in all profits of all kinds made on any and ALL of these properties, including the

5 Acres With 4 Promised Wells at
SANTA FE SPRINGS

Where is the proposition to beat it? Where the proposition even to approach it?

A Big Dividend-Paying, Big Oil-Producing Company Is My Great Ambition

I have not gone into the oil business in any light-minded take-a-quick-shot-at-a-huge-profit way at all, nor to make money from stock sales.

I AM IN OIL TO STAY

I can see nothing that Mr. Sinclair—for example—who a few years ago was an unknown drug clerk, it is said, has done, that cannot be duplicated or surpassed. Today Mr. Sinclair is at the head of one of the largest independent oil companies in the world.

He has reached the position with the company which he himself "hand-raised" because primarily he acquired and developed property after property—he didn't stop with ONE WELL.

I Cannot Be Annoyed Confining Myself to One Well Either

If one oil well is a good proposition, why are not a dozen or a hundred or a thousand good wells better? Better for unit holders—better for me?

I Am Building and Financing a Big Organization and please believe me when I say I am doing it—I AM—the idea is big, the scope of present plans is big—and I am selling units now at the rate of

Over $300,000 a Month, Real Money and only getting fairly under way.

Ample capital, plus insight, plus foresight, plus honesty, plus energetic, safe business methods, will produce the big dividends.

Join Us NOW and Make Money

Put your skepticism, fear and prejudice away, they are all foolish blighting qualities—it takes courage, wit, faith, money and daring to make big quick money. The sooner you "get aboard" Ventura-Tex the happier I predict you are going to be.

Pearson's Oil Interests

---My interests have not been confined entirely to Mexican properties. Tampico hasn't all the oil in the world---as the public may have been led to believe by newspaper reports.

---MEXICAN PETROLEUM has been one of the sensational market stocks. Its sensational rise led to a substantial advance in a half dozen other prominent oil stocks.

—The U. S. A. has plenty of hidden wells and little and big Tampicos are being opened up under the American flag.

—If Signal Hill, Huntington Beach and Santa Fe Springs aren't indications that gusher oil fields are being opened up in California, giving us real money-making opportunities—not from stock promotion or market manipulations, but from the production and sale of oil—I want to take a back seat and let someone else predict as to the future.

—If the Mexia—Orange—Breckenridge—Pioneer—Burk Burnett—Palo Pinto—all Texas gusher fields having been developed within the last three years—aren't indications of a big Tampico field being brought in in Texas—somewhere—I don't know an indication.

—Oil is a power—a tremendous power. It creates power and makes you all-powerful.

El Paso Pacific Oil Syndicate

—We have acquired at a large cash outlay valuable leases in California and Texas.

—These leases are the property of the EL PASO PACIFIC OIL SYNDICATE.

—A thousand-acre lease is situated in Garza County, Texas—our well is now down nineteen hundred feet and drilling will be continued under contract.

—The most sensational lease consists of two drilling sites at SIGNAL HILL, CALIFORNIA. Contract has been let—and bond put up for the completing of our SIGNAL HILL well—this lease is entire surrounded by production and adjoins one of the Shell Oil Company's biggest producers at SIGNAL HILL. (SIGNAL HILL now has a production of approximately seventy-five thousand barrels daily—it is today the biggest new field in the State of California.

—The Syndicate's well at Huntington Beach is producing approximately one hundred and thirty-five barrels daily. This is based on the average monthly production from December, 1921, to June, 1922. This approximately a three-acre lease in the heart of production.

WHEN'S A PEARL NOT A PEARL?

Japanese Cultured Variety Gets Setback

Official Report of Experts Calls Them Spurious

Not Possible to Disguise to Those in the Know

Making the oyster cream, by injecting a chip of mother of pearl as a core of the growth of a pearl, can never get results equal to the quiet tear the oyster sheds on its own initiative, is the conclusion to be drawn from the report of official investigators who looked into the truth of reports that the canny Japs had found a way to glut the pearl market.

Very widespread interest was aroused just about one year ago in the London pearl market because of disclosures regarding real and cultured pearls, reports Consul-General Skinner, London, to the Department of Commerce. Numerous articles in the press indicated that Japanese merchants were introducing these cultured pearls upon a considerable scale and that the success of the Japanese in producing these pearls has been so remarkable that experts with great difficulty, if at all, could identify them.

Fear was expressed that these cultured pearls might become so abundant as to seriously affect pearl values generally. It was considered in the trade that a critical position had arisen as a result of which a special committee was appointed to deal with the matter. The action of this special committee is now announced publicly by the London Chamber of Commerce, as follows:

"The special committee, after full consideration, decided to issue an official statement relative to the position of natural pearls and Japanese cultured pearls.

"The statement, inter alia, directed attention to certain published articles as being of considerable interest to the trade both in England and France and announced that on account of the insertion of foreign matter placed in the oyster from which such cultured pearls were artificially produced, it would be a 'false representation' to sell them as pearls, without the distinctive description of 'cultured.'

"Also a warning to the effect that any person or persons knowingly representing or offering for sale such Japanese cultured pearls as pearls would render themselves liable to prosecution for false trade descriptions; and pointed out that the Chambre Syndicale de Paris had issued a notice in the Moniteur Officiel, warning the public against the description of 'Fine Japanese pearls,' employed by certain merchants for the sale of that article.

"Copies of the statement were sent to the Chambre Syndicale de Paris, and to the Jewelers' Association in New York. Correspondence passed with the Chambre Syndicale de Paris on the subject, and the Honorable Secretary visited Paris and discussed the question with the president of the chamber, while he received a visit from the president of the Jewelers' Association of New York.

"In view of sensational paragraphs in the press, a statement was drawn up for publication in order to reassure the public on the question. It pointed out that cultured pearls had been on the market for some considerable time and were well known and were sold as such; that the Japanese cultured pearl was merely a bead of mother-of-pearl covered with a coating of pearl substance; that it differed in appearance and in no way compared with the oriental pearl; that it was only produced in small sizes and was easily distinguishable; that mother-of-pearl bead, however treated, could be of little value, and that the highest authorities in the trade were of the opinion that the true oriental pearl would always maintain its value as a gem on account of its unique beauty and rarity."

PREPARING FOR MEETING

John C. Wallace, secretary of the Santa Ana Realty Board, and vice-president of the California Association of Realtor Secretaries, has been appointed general chairman of the local board committee to arrange for entertaining the California Real Estate Association at its eighteenth annual convention in Santa Ana, December 7, 8 and 9. Among the features of this convention will be the contest of local board secretaries for the achievement trophy to be offered by President C. C. C. Tatum of the State association. Many California cities are also planning to send their best realtor orator to enter for the Fred E. Reed trophy in the five-minute home town contest. An attendance prize will be given. Newspapers which make a feature of their real estate development pages will be invited to enter a display competition, showing the constructive work that the newspapers have been doing in conjunction with the real estate boards during the past year. A suitable prize will be awarded for the best newspaper realty page.

Another feature of the convention will be a women's section. Many women realtors belong to the California Real Estate Association and a great many more are members of local boards throughout the State. It is planned to have this section at the convention under the direction of some woman prominent in local board and State association activities.

The Santa Ana Realty Board's entertainment committee will plan for the entertainment of the visiting delegates. One of the big themes at the convention will be legislation and how to improve the present real estate license law in the interest of rapidly growing California. William H. Akin, chairman of the legislative committee, will have charge of this important conference at the convention. Freeman H. Bloodgood, president of the Santa Ana board, who was instrumental in the enactment of realty legislation and was the first State Real Estate Commissioner, is a member of the legislative committee.

It is believed that this State convention will be attended by realty delegates from all the eighty boards that are affiliated with the California Real Estate Association.

VAN NUYS ADDS NEW BUILDINGS IN JUNE

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VAN NUYS, July 15.—Building permits issued in the Van Nuys community during the month of June reached a total of $97,800, which brings the amount for the first six months of the year to $433,840.

During the month of June, permits were issued for the construction of four business structures with a total value of $59,500, and fourteen new dwellings with a value of $26,050. Poultry and dairy construction also made a good showing. This growth in buildings has been made without any special boom features and is the result of the advent of many new settlers to Van Nuys.

Six new holes have been completed in the Hollywood Country Club course on Ventura Boulevard, and they were put in play for the first time July 4, when the club opened a big sweepstakes tournament. A large number of leading golfers of Southern California started on this tournament.

The new Hollywood course will be considerably more difficult than the one that has been in play for the past two years. Six hundred yards have been added to the length, most of the green is undulating and the rolling contour of the foothills has been taken advantage of wherever possible.

Redlands Sets Building Mark in Six Months

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, July 22.—Building is showing a decided increase here as the building permits for the past month were for an expenditure of 50 per cent more than for the month before. During June of this year $35,000 was spent for building. This includes four new homes that will cost about $24,000.

The largest permit was for the remodeling of the Hellman Bank Building. This work has been started. The entire ground floor of the building is to be remodeled and the stairway to the second and third floors changed.

During the month there was completed one of the most interesting houses in the city, that of W. H. Lines on Sunset Drive. It is interesting because of the Spanish type with twelve rooms built around an inner court. All the iron work, the grills and the big bands on the doors, also hammered headed nails of iron, were forged by Mr. Lines's father in a little shop as the house was being built.

The building for the six months of this year has now passed the $125,000 mark, which is a gain of about $30,000 over last year at this time.

PERMITS ISSUED

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

DELANO, July 22.—Permits have been granted by the Board of Trustees for buildings, as follows: W. K. Hatfield, 16x20 brick building, to be used as a temporary dwelling; De Vanney & Turner, class C brick building to cost $20,000; Standard Oil Company permission to wreck stable and wagon shed; Y. Masaki, a frame building 20x24, to be used as restaurant; James Constable, 14x18 garage for Mrs. Martha Fletcher; E. Curtis Clark permission to move dwelling; E. H. Ramsey permission to attach electric sign to building; O. A. Clasen permission to erect a frame garage. Several permits asked for were referred to a special committee of H. Hawley, W. R. Smith and Frank Panero.

DAILY TALK ON TRADE, FINANCE

of increased traffic and earnings in the fall.

A stock exchange boom led by the railway stocks is quite possible, and if it comes the psychological effect will not be limited to the security markets. The transportation industry is America's greatest business and when it is profitable our national prosperity is almost certain.

Of course there will be reactions. Neither men nor markets ever progress continuously in one direction, but it seems safe to plan with reasonable discretion for a healthy expansion in business that will last at least until election day. This, it may be said, takes account only of the next four months, but he who can now see more than four months ahead must indeed be clairvoyant.

INTERLOCKING STOCK

There is much local interest in the recent recommendation of the Federal Trade Commission to Congress asserting that a "monopolistic situation" with respect to the gasoline market prevailed over the country, due to interlocking stock in the several Standard Oil companies.

"Today," says the report, "the entire country is divided into eleven Standard gasoline marketing territories in which a Standard marketing company is the dominating factor and in which there is no real competition between the various Standard units. This monopolistic situation is possible under the terms of the Standard Oil dissolution decree, by which the different Standard companies are, for legal purposes, supposed to be strangers to each other, but there is, as is generally known, an interlocking stock ownership in the different organizations, which has perpetuated the very monopolistic control which the court sought to terminate.

"The commission is of the opinion that this situation cannot be effectually remedied by existing law and that adequate relief can only be secured through additional legislation. It recommends, therefore, that Congress pass a law prohibiting common stock ownership in corporations which have been members of a combination dissolved under the Sherman law."

FOREIGN TRADE

The United States is holding its own in foreign trade, and on the Pacific Coast, particularly in Southern California, the export business is constantly showing important gains.

A preliminary statement issued yesterday by the Department of Commerce gives the value of imports and exports of the country for the fiscal year ended June 30. Total export value aggregated $3,770,000,000, and exceeded the value of imports by over $1,160,000,000.

These figures are considerably below the corresponding amounts for the preceding year, the department explaining that the decrease does not represent a corresponding decline in volume of trade, but is due to a great extent to the fall in prices.

For purposes of comparison, 1914 exports—the last prewar year—were slightly over $2,133,000,000, with imports for the same period $1,890,000,000. The value of exports for the month of June, totaling $333,000,000, is the greatest since October, and imports of $260,000,000 is unsurpassed during the whole twelve months, the figures for June being below those of previous months except April and May.

While exports of gold stand at $27,000,000, the movement in silver was comparatively light, with exports at $70,000,000 and imports $62,000,000.

MORELAND STOCK

The Moreland Truck Company is offering through its own securities department a new issue of $500,000 of its 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock and $500,000 of its common stock. Both issues are being sold at their par value of $10 a share and are being offered to the public on a partial payment basis. According to the company's statement yesterday, average net earnings of the company from 1912 to 1920, inclusive, before Federal taxes, were over 38¼ per cent on the capital stock. The present capitalization before this new issue is $964,987 outstanding with an authorized capital of $2,500,000.

The company states that its business has so grown in volume and possibilities that it has outgrown its capitalization. The purpose of the present additional issue of stock is to provide more working capital for the expansion of production and to properly further cultivate the large field of motor truck business in the West.

At the present time the company operates eight directly owned and controlled factory branches in California, one in Washington, has agencies and dealers scattered over the States of California, Washington, Oregon, Utah and Arizona. It also has representation in seventeen of the foreign countries bordering on both sides of the Pacific.

GRAIN MARKET

The activity in the Los Angeles Grain Exchange during the past two weeks has been featured by the strength in spot barley which has climbed from $1.27½ to $1.32½ a hundredweight since July 1. The reasons back of this upward move, according to George H. Martin, a local grain trader, has been the shortage of deliveries from the interior and a smaller harvest than was expected.

Harvesting of barley has been under way in Southern California since the latter part of June and in Imperial Valley since May. While operations are still in progress, there is a general belief in the grain trade that the volume of the yield will be considerably under what was expected earlier in the year. Another factor in the strength of the market is the reluctance of the growers to sell their product at present prices. This attitude has been taken by the California Farm Bureau, the leader of the co-operative marketing organizations, and is being generally followed by the independents. As a result shipments to market are very light and a slight stringency has developed in making July deliveries.

POSTAL RECEIPTS

Postal receipts of the fifty largest postoffices for the month of June just passed amounted to $22,168,830, an increase of $2,417,139, or 12¼ per cent, compared with the month of June, 1921, and an increase of $2,378,920, or slightly over 12 per cent, compared with June, 1920. The increases compared with June, 1921, range up to 27 per cent, with only one city, of the fifty, showing a decrease, which decrease was less than 4 per cent.

HIGHWAYS

For highway construction during the current year the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture estimates that there will be available in the States approximately $800,000,000, which includes the Federal as well as local funds. The States having available the largest amounts include California with over $53,000,000, Pennsylvania with more than $52,000,000, Illinois and New York with more than $47,000,000 each, and Texas with almost $43,000,000.

COTTON MARKET

Very little cotton remains in the California fields at present and local brokers are resting on their oars until the new crop comes in in September. Significant developments are equally lacking in the news from eastern and southern cotton centers. Trading on the New York market last week revealed the usual mid-summer dullness with price movements tending downward. The close yesterday was about ⅛ a cent a pound lower than that of the previous Saturday.

OFFER NEW ISSUE

A syndicate headed by Blair & Company will bring out tomorrow the unsubscribed portion of the new issue of $12,500,000 Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company fifteen year 7½ per cent convertible gold bonds, series "A," which was originally offered the stockholders of the company on a pro rata basis. The stockholders' option expires tomorrow and the public offering will be made at 98 to yield approximately 7 3-4 per cent. The bonds are convertible at the option of the holder into voting common stock after July 1, 1924.

BANKERS COMING HERE

Seven hundred eastern delegates to the annual convention of the American Institute of Banking at Portland are returning home via Los Angeles and will arrive in this city early this week. Clarence Talman of Baltimore, newly elected president of the institute, is accompanying the eastern delegations on their trip through California. Arrangements are being made by local bankers for the entertainment of the visitors.

CONFECTIONER LETS CONTRACT FOR HOME

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PASADENA, July 21.—Burnell Gunther, candy manufacturer of Los Angeles and Chicago, has let a contract for the erection of a $50,000 Italian villa on his property at Mendocino avenue and Glen View Terrace. The contract was let to the Postile Company. Announcement of this action was made by the Hogan Company, through whose agency Gunther bought the Altadena Country Club Park property. This is described as one of the best corners in the tract. It has a frontage of 557 feet and consists of six and one-half acres. The home will be completed during next December.

Real estate dealers report that the sale of lots for building purposes continues. A greater demand for lots than for houses seems to exist. Building permits are keeping up the record pace which has been set through the year. The permits for the past week aggregated about $100,000, making a total for the year of more than $4,200,000.

INGLEWOOD CENTER OF INCREASING ACTIVITY

INVESTMENT COMPANY TO OPEN NEW TRACT; BUSINESS BUILDINGS STARTED

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

INGLEWOOD, July 21.—The Los Angeles Investment Company has filed an official map of Tract 5357 with the Inglewood City Council, and, has declared its intention of opening units six and seven during August. This new tract, situated north of Fairview Heights, consists of about thirty-seven acres and will provide something more than 250 building lots. Modern homes will be erected for applicants and lots sold to those desiring to build their own houses.

Inglewood is enjoying an almost phenomenal growth, having, according to conservative estimates, more than doubled its population in the last twelve months. The business section is keeping pace with the increase in the residental districts. Bids are being asked for a one-story brick and concrete building at the corner of Kelso and Market streets, to be used for a public market. Calvert Brothers are building a brick and concrete structure south of the Parent Building on Market, which will be occupied by five modern stores.

The Smoot-Holman factory, manufacturers of white enamel ware, opened in Inglewood on July 1, and it is expected that it will be running full capacity by August. This product is being shipped to the Orient, as well as to all parts of this country. Last Monday a shipment went out of 6000 plates, and every day sees shipments of a like nature on their way.

A Chamber of Commerce is being organized, and Inglewood is preparing to become the fastest growing city in the southwest.

Monrovia.

FOR SALE—MONROVIA.
IMPORTANT SUBDIVISION OF ACREAGE.
Thirty-eight different tracts ranging from two acres to five and one-quarter acres, are for the first time today placed upon the market. These acres lie within the corporate limits of Monrovia and Arcadia, being a little over a mile from the center of the business section of both of these flourishing cities. The tract probably should have been subdivided years ago, but instead has been held as a farm up to the present time. The owner has received many flattering offers for small parts of the farm, but steadfastly refused to sell except as a whole.
This farm is now subdivided, and the first five buyers will buy at $25 per acre below the price established by the owner, The Monrovia Acres Company.
JUST A FEW OF THE CHOICE MONROVIA ACRE OFFERINGS:
LOT 6—Includes the farm-house, 4 large live oaks, family orchard, all kinds of fruit, 74 trees, 2¾ acres, $6975.
LOT 8—39 walnut trees, family orchard, 43 trees, 4 acres, $6800.
LOT 38—No plantings, 3 acres, $4500.

ANOTHER SUBDIVISION.
We have just subdivided two foothill acres into 10 lots, splendid land, paved street, within 15 minutes' walk of the postoffice in Monrovia. $15 a front foot.

Acreage for Subdivision.

FOR SALE—

I WILL DOUBLE YOUR MONEY.

$1650 PER ACRE.

I am organizing a syndicate to take over and subdivide 28 acres of land within three and one-half miles of the City Hall. I make the following statement without fear of contradiction: It is positively the last piece of unsubdivided level land with transportation within the four-mile circle that can be had for less than $2500 an acre. It is easily worth $2000 an acre for subdivision purposes RIGHT NOW. At the price paid I can undersell every competitor and every possible competitor. I have had experience in all phases of subdivision work. I am buying the property on very easy terms. We don't need much money. You will have to hurry if you want to get in. The Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank as your trustee, will protect all parties concerned. Phone for appointment. 821752.

MOTOR TOURISTS GET A WARNING

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, July 22.—A warning to motor tourists from outside States who visit California to obtain a nonresident registration certificate has been issued by Charles J. Chenu, director of the State Motor Vehicle Department.

Chenu says the motor vehicle law requires that visiting motorists obtain a nonresident certificate within twenty-four hours after entering California. Those who do not comply with the law must take out a regular State license.

The Correct and the Incorrect in Highway Illumination

The owners of gas-consuming vehicles in Los Angeles are peculiarly interested in the headlight problem at the present time. Chief of Police Oaks has announced first an educational campaign and then an enforcement of the State law regarding headlights. Above we have two examples of correctly adjusted headlights. The pictures were taken at night and show rays of light thrown against an adjusting screen. In one case a string adjusted at the legal height bisects the rays of light. The other case shows the ribbon light, also legal, shedding its rays below the string. The middle photo shows the blinding headlight and the frequent result. Another case of incorrect adjustment—the cock-eyed headlight—is shown below. The pictures were taken by the Auto Club.

With the tentative dates of the Auto Show set for November 4-11 and possibly 11-18 Young had visions of a jam if Thanksgiving fell on the 23rd. It was too close to the Auto Show but Young couldn't change the speedway date. What was he to do?

In his perplexity Young appealed to Burt Roberts, who occupies the mahogany swivel chair donated by the Motor Car Dealers' Association for their executive secretary. Burt had been playing golf and was the last guy in the world to appeal to.

LATE ROAD DOPE FOR MOTORISTS

Auto Club Issues Official Bulletin on Routes That Receive Most Travel

Changes in highway conditions recently throughout Southern California have caused the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California to issue an official bulletin on road matters for local motorists.

Here is the latest information on roads which thousands of auto owners are using for their summer vacations, as issued yesterday by the Auto Club:

SAN DIEGO COAST ROUTE

In splendid condition throughout, although it is necessary to make a detour 5.7 miles in length between Tustin and Irvine Station starting at Culvers Corner. This detour is plainly indicated with Auto Club detour signs.

BIG BEAR VALLEY

On Tuesday a rain storm occurred in the San Bernardine Mountains, which proved very beneficial to the roads leading to Arrowhead Lake and Big Bear. The rain was of sufficient quantity to settle the dust and the beneficial results in this respect will be in evidence during the next three weeks, during which time the roads leading to the valley will be in splendid shape.

TOPANGA CANYON

The workings of a steam shovel on the road along the beach above Santa Monica has made the road difficult to negotiate. This road improvement work will seriously affect pleasure travel through Topanga Canyon. The steam shovel will be working for some few weeks on the beach road, necessitating a detour on a control basis. The road through the canyon from the State highway down to the beach is in splendid shape.

TIOGA PASS ROAD

This road leading from Yosemite Park to Mono Lake is in very good condition at this time.

SAN GABRIEL CANYON

Owing to construction work it is not in the best of condition at the present time.

LONG BEACH TO HUNTINGTON BEACH, VIA WESTMINSTER

Rough and dusty detour between Westminster and Huntington Beach, balance of road is O. K.

VISALIA TO COALINGA

Now paved the entire distance from Hanford to Lemoore.

MT. WILSON ROAD

Open and in fairly good condition. This road is operated on a control basis now on Sundays and holidays.

MOON MAKES BIG FORWARD STRIDES

DETROIT, July 22.—June proved another record-breaking month for the Moon Motor Car Company sales. Business now on the company's books will necessitate capacity output for the next thirty days at least. Sales in June were 194 per cent greater than June, 1921, and were 90 per cent more than the same month in 1920, the big month of that year. Unfilled orders on the first of July were 15 per cent greater than the number on the books on June 1.

HUDSON BUSINESS IS ON THE BOOM

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DETROIT, July 22.—The Hudson Motor Car Company reports sales for the past six months as 95 per cent of those for the same period of 1920, with every indication that sales of both Hudson and Essex for 1922 will surpass those of 1920, banner year in the Hudson history. July sales are expected to be about 18 per cent greater than they were in July, 1920, with some shortages still continuing, in almost all parts of the country. August production will be more than 50 per cent greater than that of the same month in 1920 and 200 per cent in excess of August, 1921.

FRED LELAND BACK FROM THE YOSEMITE

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Leland and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mellon have just returned from a two weeks' vacation trip, which took them into the Yosemite Valley and down the Coast through Santa Cruz, Monterey and other scenic points en route. Leland is proprietor of a drug store at the corner of First and Broadway and Mellon is vice-president of the Sun Oil Company. The party journeyed in Leland's Studebaker sedan and reported all absence of mechanical grief. They brought back several interesting pictures of Yosemite Valley.

CHIEF EXPLAINS PLANS

Educational Campaign for Proper Headlighting, First, Then Strict Enforcement

BY CHIEF LOUIS D. OAKS,
Los Angeles Police Department

The educational campaign instituted for proper headlighting of all motor cars within the jurisdiction of the Los Angeles Police Department will get under way shortly with the announcement of locations for a number of official headlight adjusting service stations. A sufficient lapse of time will be granted after that announcement, in order that automobile owners be given a chance to get proper lighting on their cars, after which there will be no excuse for a violation of the State laws.

Realizing that motorists have been without proper instruction as to the legality of various lighting equipment, there has been a lack of enforcement of the law. There is no question but what the authorities could not offer a means for properly equipping automobiles not only here, but throughout the State as well, and the car owner, who is not at heart a law-breaker save in exceptional cases, has gone on and on without complying with the law in regard to lights.

A series of short talks given the enforcing officers by illuminating engineers working under the direction of the California Automobile Trades Association has served to enlighten them as to the feasibility of the law and the ease of compliance. These engineers have been, and still are, locating a sufficient number of stations in this city so that the great multitude of car owners may be readily taken care of without any delay.

While these announcements may appear to some as a warning of an increase in the number of raids conducted by this department, they are merely instructions. In due course of time, however, all car owners who have not taken advantage of the opportunity will be liable for arrest and prosecution.

As a matter of fact, a majority of motorists seem unaware of the fact that by complying with the law, they will be provided with a light for their cars that will be better than they have been ac-

TIRE WORLD IS DEMORALIZED

Increases and Reductions in Prices Confusing

Manufacturers and Dealers to Get Together

Differences to be Ironed Out at Conference

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

AKRON (O.) July 22.—Were it possible it would be correct to state that the automobile tire price situation is becoming more demoralized. During the last week the Mason Tire and Rubber Company reduced prices of its entire line 28 per cent, and announced a new tire for Fords, an air-bag cooled, oversized, nonskid cord at 77.80 to the public.

The American Tire and Rubber Company at the same time announced a 5 to 10 per cent increase in the price of all its cord tires.

The Mason Tire and Rubber Company in making the announcement of its cut, which was accompanied with the statement that quality is to be absolutely maintained, stated that the time has come to hit bottom on tire prices.

TO STOP CUTS

"Special discounts, dealers' inducements and the other ways now used to cut prices quietly must stop. The prices must be placed at bottom and the entire world know the price of tires. That is the only way in which we can prepare for a large fall business on spring dating business," D. M. Mason, vice-president and general manager of the Mason vompany, said.

The American Rubber and Tire Company announced that the dealers approve of the increase in prices which have been announced.

"We went directly to our dealers and placed our problem before them. We showed them how it is impossible to maintain quality with present prices, and asked them what they wanted us to do. They are closer to the trade than we are, and their judgment would rule us, we said," according to H. L. Hauk, general manager of the company.

"That the same quality tire could not be made for present prices at present costs as could be made a year ago is certain, we said. Do you want us to cut quality and at the same time cut prices, or do you want us to increase or at least maintain quality and raise the price just a little?

"The answer from practically all our dealers was that they wanted a quality tire; that sales on a price basis will not be satisfactory to the great number of automobile owners who have been purchasing quality tires for many years, and for that reason we have increased prices just enough to maintain present quality.

ANOTHER QUESTION

"Whether we will be able to hold all of our dealers, or whether our dealers will be able to hold their clients, is still a question, but in the interest of good tires at a fair price we have taken the chance to increase. It is still too

TO SCANDINAVIA

DETROIT, July 22.—H. M. Salisbury, export manager of the Maxwell-Chalmers companies, announces the appointment of Paul Rested as special representative of the companies in Scandinavian countries. Although a native of Denmark Mr. Rested has lived in the United States for a number of years.

We can easily show you that the Durant Six motor actually develops almost fifty per cent more horsepower than the average motor of similar size. That accounts, of course, for the excellent performance of the Durant Six under any test.

A NEW MOTORING LURE

Big Pines in the Swartout Valley is Purchased by County for Summer Playground

Swartout Valley, located on the southeastern slope of the San Gabriel Mountains, and about five miles (as the crow flies) northeast of Mt. San Antonio (Baldy,) should possess a new lure for motorists now that a 500-acre tract in the scenic spot has been purchased by Los Angeles county for a summer camp.

Situated in the Angeles national forest at an invigorating altitude of about 6000 feet, it has been visited by comparatively few because it has been little known, and also because of poor road conditions in that immediate locality. Road conditions are to be improved and even now work is well under way, while plans for the improvement of the mountain playground are receiving the consideration of the county's Board of Supervisors.

VALLEY IS BEST

At this time Swartout Valley is the more easily reached from Los Angeles and vicinity via the Valley Boulevard, Etiwanda cut-off to the Cajon Pass Highway, as far as Cosy Dell, and then over a fairly good dirt road of about thirteen miles through Lone Pine Canyon. The drag up this canyon, which is extremely warm in the summer, is one constant pull, for in that distance the road rises from 3000 feet to about 6000 feet. From Los Angeles the distance is about 100 miles.

The valley may also be reached now via Mint Canyon, Palmdale, Little Rock, Llano and Sheep Creek, and over a road through the edge of the desert that is well marked by the Automobile Club of Southern California. There is a bad stretch at Little Rock Creek, where washed-out culverts as a result of winter rains, necessitate traffic following the creek bed. However, there is nothing dangerous about this particular stretch, providing the pilot is O.K., and the bus has the necessary power when called upon. It is about ten miles farther by this route, and the heat during the day is terrific at this season.

Road building now in progress by the county, will link Swartout Valley with Little Rock, via Shoemaker's Canyon and ranch, which will reduce this mileage to about eighty-five miles and eliminate a considerable portion of the desert going.

Last week a Peerless eight touring car was sent into the Swartout Valley by Smith Brothers, Peerless distributors for Southern California, in charge of W. F. Lloyd, superintendent of the service and shop departments, to get some first-hand information regarding the best route to be traveled by those wishing to go there and other useful data concerning the new county resort. Both routes were used and camping equipment was taken along for a night's stay at Big Pines, in the center of the valley. At comfortable touring speed about five hours are required to make the trip via the Valley Boulevard, and about six hours by way of Palmdale.

FOR CAMPING

Big Pines, a camp site on fairly level ground and under the big pine trees, is admirably suited for camping parties. There is an excellent supply of pure ice-cold mountain spring water with some tables and benches and a number of stone fireplaces. Toilet arrangements have also been provided. It is necessary to secure a fire permit from the ranger, whose log cabin is situated under the trees to the left of the road and near the valley's entrance.

The valley and mountain sides are well wooded and heavily carpeted with a layer of pine needles. The temperature during the day is cool and at night decidedly crimpy—at least for Angelenos at this season. There is plenty of fire wood near at hand and it comes in very handy during the evening. Judging by the experience of the Peerless party, three blankets are none too many to take along. Be sure you have plenty of grub, for clambering about the mountain sides in that altitude makes you ravenously hungry.

There is a well-defined trail to what is known as Inspiration point and which is located southwest of the camp site at an elevation of approximately 8000 feet. One is well repaid for the climb for the panorama that is spread before one's eyes from this rocky elevation is nothing short of magnificent. Baldy, its seamy side still dotted with last winter's snow, lies about five miles to the southwest; farther north and below one the San Gabriel flows its twisted course toward the west, and still farther north North Baldy raises its almost prepitous eastern front about four miles away. It's great stuff!

Along the trail there are opportunities to view the vast stretch of desert usually partially obscured [illegible] haze. Rattlers are to be found among the hills, so one should go prepared. There are some excellent hiking stretches under the pines and sycamores up and down the valley, while Wright's apple and pear orchard of sixty odd acres, tucked away among the mountains, is interesting.

"It is the scenic mountain play grounds, such as this one, that only emphasize the importance of the automobile," said Lloyd. "Without it, they would practically be inaccessible, because of distance and lack of transportation."

MARMON EXECUTIVE ON A COAST VISIT

Among the recent visitors to Los Angeles is H. H. Brooks, general sales manager, Nordyke and Marmon Company, makers of the famous Marmon 34. He is on a general swing of the entire territory visiting all prominent Marmon dealers.

"It is a most reassuring thing to get a general survey of the business conditions of the entire country, as I have been doing on my trip," says Mr. Brooks. "My travels have carried me practically from coast to coast and while there is no denying that business is still somewhat soft in spots, the almost universal buoyancy is most gratifying."

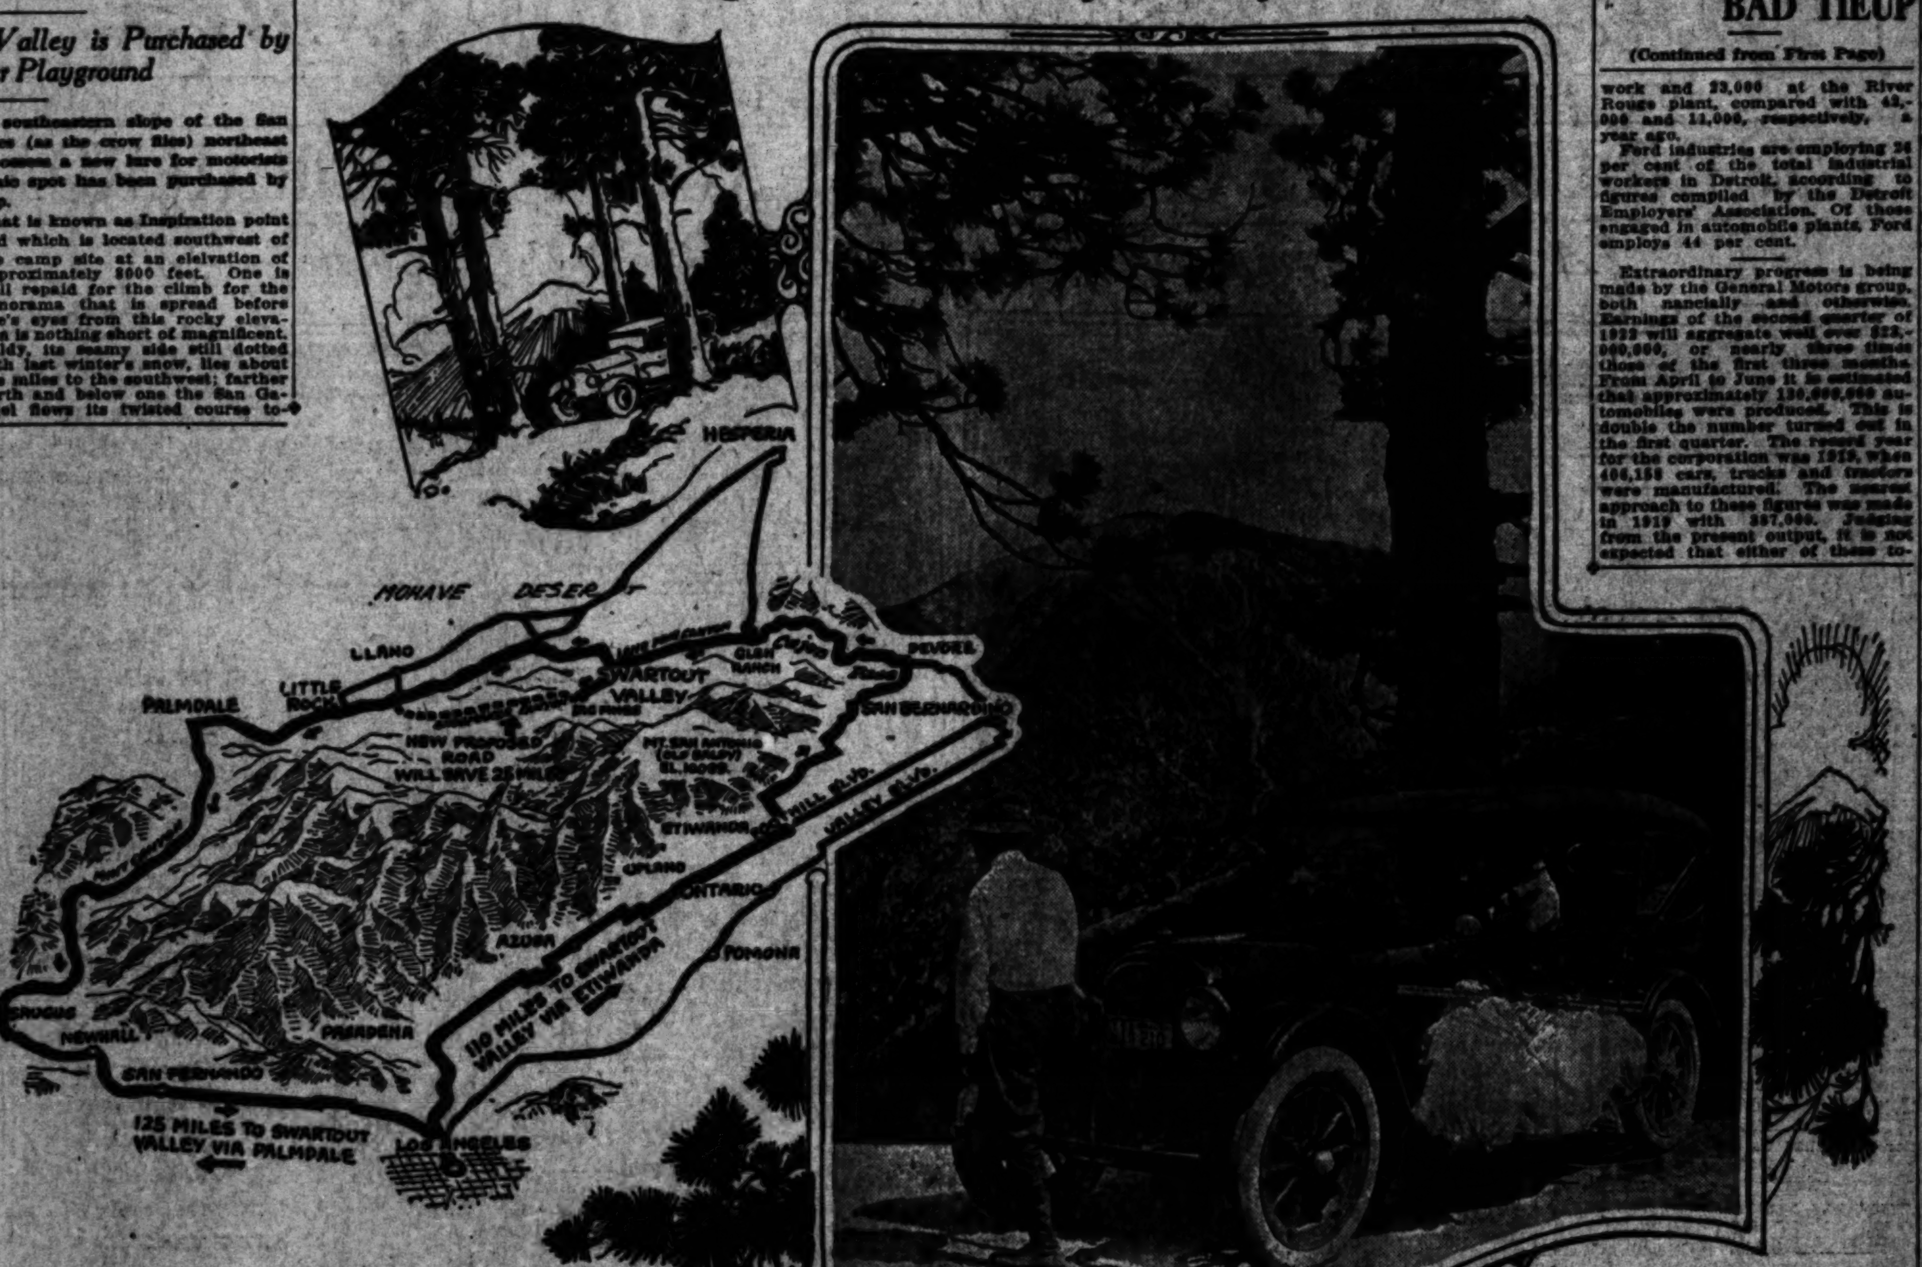
NASH MOTORS LISTED ON GOTHAM EXCHANGE

NEW YORK, July 22.—Listing of the Nash Motors Company on the New York Stock Exchange this week is regarded as a strategic move. The increasing strength of this company has escaped the notice of many of the sharps, who base their judgment of industrial values entirely on the records of the market, because the stock of the Nash company has been very closely held. Income of the Nash company for the first five months ending April 30, after charges and Federal taxes, is placed at $2,173,014.

AMERICAN MAKES

The United States Consul at Amsterdam reports that 60 per cent of the passenger cars in Holland are American makes, says Harry Lord of the Lord Motor Car Company, distributors of the [illegible]. This country is represented by sixteen makes, France by twelve; Germany by eleven; Great Britain by two and Holland has one only. The reports say that 75 per cent of the low priced cars sold were American makes.

A Welcome Change From the Daily Battle for Existence



Where the Stately Pines and Cool Mountain Streams Make One Forget the Bustling City

Five hundred and sixty acres of natural beauty have been purchased by Los Angeles county in the Swartout Valley for use as a public playground. At present an excellent road branching off from the Cajon Pass highway takes one to this place of rugged surroundings and giant solitude, but a still better road, and a shorter one, now in the course of construction by Sheriff Traeger's detention huskies, will bring the motorist in from the Palmdale side via Little Rock Creek. The photo above shows a back view of Old Baldy from Big Pine Peak. Below, the desert of Joshua trees one encounters in leaving the valley via the Hesperia, Llano and Valyermo to Palmdale route. The new road will eliminate this hot desert stretch. Just outside the confines of the new Swartout playgrounds land has been leased from the government on which Los Angeles County Supervisors and other employees of the county have erected log cabins. However, no cabins can be built on the playgrounds, it is understood. A Peerless party took in this locality last week.

TRADE FEARS BAD TIEUP

work and 23,000 at the River Rouge plant, compared with 42,000 and 11,000, respectively, a year ago.

Ford industries are employing 24 per cent of the total industrial workers in Detroit, according to figures compiled by the Detroit Employers' Association. Of those engaged in automobile plants, Ford employs 44 per cent.

Extraordinary progress is being made by the General Motors group, both financially and otherwise. Earnings of the second quarter of 1922 will aggregate well over $22,000,000, or nearly three times those of the first three months. From April to June it is estimated that approximately 130,000,000 automobiles were produced. This is double the number turned out in the first quarter. The record year for the corporation was 1919, when 406,158 cars, trucks and tractors were manufactured. The nearest approach to these figures was made in 1919 with 387,000. Judging from the present output, it is not expected that either of these totals will be reached this year, but making allowances for a decline in demand for the final quarter of the year, production should reach the neighborhood of 350,000, according to those close to the corporation.

Designed to greatly reduce hauling costs, three new models of truck tractors have been placed on the market by the General Motors Truck Company of Pontiac, Mich. The tractors are expected to meet a growing need in the transportation business for an adequate power plant to haul "semi" and "full" trailers, carying a load as high as fifteen tons, say company officials. The new tractors are to be put out in five-ton and fifteen-ton models and are designed to meet every need which can be asked of a truck-tractor.

Ford Motor Company has begun to manufacture its own plate glass, already having in operation the first modern glass plant ever equipped especially to make glass for automobiles. As is customary when taking over the manufacture of a new product Ford has applied his own principles of production and as a consequence the methods and machinery used in making Ford glass are a radical departure from established practice. The Ford continuous conveyor system features the operation so that when the glass leaves the furnace, until it becomes a polished windshield, it is always on the move.

Complete reorganization of Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Company finances is under way. In order to lay a foundation on which the new financial structure can be erected a thorough housecleaning of the factory has begun, and all high-priced materials have been disposed of. Lower prices on current buying are favorable to plans for increased output. The recent price cut of $1250 on all models is the first result of the change in policy. This reduction is to be followed by an extensive campaign to increase sales. Pierce-Arrow is one of the few standard companies which is not at capacity. Too much factory capacity for the volume of sales has

MORE MOTORCYCLE COPS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, July 22.—The State highways of California are to be policed by motorcycle patrolmen operating under the direction of the State Motor Vehicle Department.

This announcement was made by Charles J. Chenu, director of the Motor Vehicle Department, who believes there is a great need for such patrolmen.

Chenu plans on appointing four motorcycle patrolmen as a starter, and if the scheme works satisfactorily, he says the force will be increased.

It will be the duty of the motorcycle patrolmen to enforce the motor vehicle law, furnish information to tourists, provide aid in case of accidents, and in other ways to make travel on the highways "safer, saner and more pleasant."

"Many times autoists are run off the road, run into or in some other way unlawfully interfered with or molested," says Chenu, "and the services of a State officer in such cases should prove of great value. I would like to have enough men to patrol every mile of the highway, but I cannot do this at present."

Chenu also announced that shortly he will request all peace officials of California to centralize their efforts to put a stop to motorcycles speeding on the highways and through cities and in violating the laws in other respects.

CALIFORNIA FOND OF RICKENBACKER

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DETROIT, July 22.—The demand for Rickenbacker cars from California, alone is sufficient to keep the wheels of the plant busy. At present the factory is turning out thirty cars a day, California would take fully 50 per cent of this output, or fifteen cars daily if the Rickenbacker Company could meet these requirements officials say. The plant is working at capacity with 1500 orders on the books. Oklahoma, Nebraska, Texas and the Dakotas are especially heavy buyers of the Rickenbacker line.

STRIPS THE THREADS

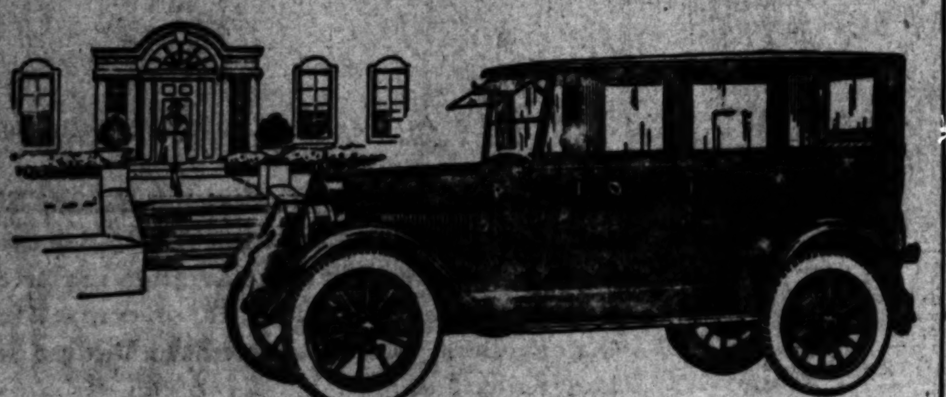
There is danger of stripping the threads on the bolts or nuts when the handle of the wrench is too long for the capacity of the jaws, warns William G. Fisher, sales manager of the McGill Motor Company, distributors for the Gardner light four. The mechanic's "S" wrench is the safest for all use, as it has a handle of the proper length which is scientifically proportioned to the work which the tool must do.

GRAY EXPANSION GREATLY NEEDED

DETROIT, July 22.—Business continues unabated at the Gray Motor Car Company's plant with expansion of facilities greatly needed. A production schedule of 500 cars has been set for July according to President Frank L. Klingensmith, former vice-president and treasurer of the Ford Motor Company. In August production will be at the rate of fifty cars a day. Shipments of Gray cars have been heavy in West and Southwest. Many dealers are arriving at the plant each day to secure cars and driving them home rather than take a chance on the present uncertain railroad situation.

FLORIDA WANTS PAR-KAR COACH

ST. LOUIS (Mich.) July 22.—The Par-Kar Coach Company of St. Louis, Mich., has received an order for thirty-five coaches from the Florida Southern Transit Company, which company operates out of Jacksonville in all directions. This transaction involves an expenditure of $190,000 cash on the part of the Florida Southern Transit Company. Ten coaches are to be delivered by October 1, the balance of the order to be delivered at the rate of ten per month.



The VELIE SEDAN Is the Handsomest Car on the Street

Regardless of price, 1922 has not brought forth a Sedan that surpasses the Velie in distinction, quality and completeness of equipment. Has seating room for six.

Upholstery of plaited mohair velvet. Head-linings and carpets to match. Dome light, two rear corner reading lights, silk curtains, fixtures and hardware in dull silver, vanity-case, smoker's set, heater—in fact the equipment is complete.

The Sedan is but one of four new Velie models. All powered by the marvelous Velie motor. Everyone is talking enthusiastically of the Velie. The factory is working overtime to keep pace with the increasing demand. See them and you will know the reason why.

The rays of light, improperly focused, do not pierce the darkness and do not pierce the lights of approaching vehicles, with a consequent hazard for both cars.

Officers of this department will furnish cards bearing the locations of these service stations when the announcement is made. There the car owner will face his machine toward the adjusting screen, and instructed as to the best head lamp equipment for his particular vehicle by the attendant, who will be competent in every respect for this service.

Nothing is compulsory, but the owner will be expected to comply with the law. When this is done, a certificate testifying to the legality of his lights and to his proper intentions, as well, will be issued. The service of the Trades Association is backed up by the Motor Vehicle Department of the State Treasury Department.

CUSTOM-BUILT BODIES PLEASE FASHIONABLE

When people speak of a custom-built job for an automobile, it is natural that they should think of high class distinctive work for touring cars, but it is equally as possible to have real high grade, and really distinctive jobs for the motor-truck whnch carries Milady's finery around, as it is for the millionaire's foreign-built chassis.

Modistes, milliners and others who cater to the whim of the woman of fashion and money must have the proper kind of delivery wagon to handle their deliveries, and many turn to the custom-built body for that, said Robert Thompson of the Robert Thompson Company, top and body builder.

Liberty Beauty to be Enhanced by New Changes

Important changes in appearance, enhancing both beauty and value, and which are said to make these cars still more attractive, are announced as forthcoming in certain of the new models of Liberty sixes, according to an announcement received from the Liberty factory, at Detroit, by D. H. Thomason, head of the Southern California Liberty distribution organization, bearing his name, here.

Increased efficiency at the factory with a greater production that has become necessary with the constant rising demand has permitted the offering of even more attractive values, according to Thomason, who states that the demand will show an even greater increase with the first showing of these cars.

"Steel disc wheels, which have become the choice of a great many motorists, have been adopted as standard for the touring model," Thomason states. "The wheels will be finished in a deep, rich, blue, handsomely striped, in harmony with the Liberty blue body of the car. A newly designed filled cap and water indicator have been added to the car's equipment. A more important change, however, is noted in the upholstery, which in future is to be done in the new smooth style, eliminating the dirt-catching tufts and pleats of former upholstering methods. Fine oil-tempered springs of the coil type for cushions and backs are securely held in place, and liberally covered with the finest of curled hair, as a foundation for the genuine pebble-grained, black leather used in the standard touring model. The same quality of seat construction is followed in the Cavalier models, but in their case, soft, pliant Spanish leather of the finest grade is used, in tones to match the body colors.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

BY JAMES W. MARSH

Question: Will you be so kind as to give me some advice through The Times Question and Answer department. I have a Maxwell 21, which of late has been missing fire irregularly. I have ground the valves, cleaned and tested all of the spark plugs and drained the carburetor and gasoline line, still it acts the same. The car starts easily and will run all right for a mile or so then it suddenly chokes up and nearly stops. If I throw out the clutch and open and close the throttle a few times it will start up and perhaps run all right again for a little while. As soon as it starts to run after clogging up it shoots a lot of black smoke out of the exhaust pipe. I have tried all sorts of adjustments on the carburetor but that seems to make no difference for any length of time.

M. F. L.

Answer: The trouble does not seem to me to be in the carburetor, as you say the car runs for a time correctly. If it was in the carburetor the trouble would be constant at any given speed. If the engine would run fast with open throttle and not run with closed, or would run with closed throttle and not with open I would say that the trouble was probably in the carburetor, but in your case, as I understand, it shows up at most any time. This indicates that some moving part is out of order. A valve stem may be bent, the stem may stick in the guide; this may be the cause of your trouble. An acceleration causes it to loosen and work again for a time. Another possible cause is badly burned or poorly adjusted breaker points. The Atwater Kent closed circuit system, with which your engine is equipped, has a very light breaker spring; it may not be strong enough to close the points correctly and this may be the cause of the irregular action.

Q.: I have a four cylinder Buick which seems to miss fire in one cylinder every second cycle. What could cause the engine to do this?

H. B. P.

A.: The most probable and common cause of this trouble lies in the head gasket. Upon inspection you will find a burned spot in the gasket between two cylinders. This burned spot is thinner than the rest of the gasket and the burning gas passes from one cylinder to the next at this point. Following the explosion in the missing cylinder the gas remaining after exhaust, mixed with that which leaks through the gasket is sufficient to prevent combustion that cycle, but the residue of gasoline left of the unburned charge makes a clean enough mixture to burn the following cycle. A badly seating exhaust valve can produce the same action. Analysis will show you why.

Question: Is there anything better than Prussian blue for testing the fit between valve and valve seat when grinding valves?

R. H. Y.

Answer: I think there is; the following method has been used by the writer for a long time and been taught to many who have used it with uniform success: Grind the valve either by hand or special tool until the surface of the valve and seat show a smooth clean well-ground surface all the way around. Carefully clean out all grinding compound, wipe the parts carefully, and with a medium lead pencil make a series of marks across the ground line on the valve about a quarter of an inch apart then place the valve carefully in place and with the grinding tool turn the valve about a quarter of a turn. Remove the valve and note if each line has been rubbed. If all lines show that the valve has touched the seat all the way around you may be certain that the valve is properly seated. If one or two lines remain untouched the valve must be reground. Repeat the process until the desired results are obtained. Be careful not to grind the valve too much. Inexperienced workmen are inclined to grind valves too much.

Question: Is there any way to prevent a leather-faced cone clutch from grabbing? I have a Studebaker 18 and unless I put neatsfoot oil on the clutch almost every day it grabs badly.

J. H. L.

Answer: If you will cut four or five strips of tin about a half an inch wide and two and a half inches long and insert them between the leather and the cone it will relieve the trouble. Space the strips evenly apart. If the clutch slips with six pieces in remove a couple and try again.

ACID RESISTING

Recent investigations have shown that the addition of small quantities of wax to a varnish that is resistant to water or acid fumes will make it considerably more resistant, says the Popular Mechanics Magazine for August. Various kinds of wax may be used, and as the amount of wax added is small it has no appreciable effect on the toughness or other desirable qualities of the varnish.

AND THERE came a man.
OF PROSPEROUS mien.
AND GAZED on it.
FOR SO long a time.
THAT I went out.
AND HE asked of me.
IF IT was my car.
AND I said it was.
AND I bragged of it.
AND TOLD the tale.
OF THE many miles.
IT HAD carried me.
AND I'D had no grief.
BECAUSE OF it.
AND SPENT no coin.
EXCEPT FOR grease.

AND HE was impressed.
AND LIKED the car.
AND LIKED its looks.
AND WANTED to know.
IF I'D object.
IF HE seated himself.

NOT THE hip, of course.

early to know what the general reaction will be," Mr. Hauk said.

As far as can be learned, the larger companies do not intend to increase prices at the present time. The downward tendency in tires with commensurate reductions in prices bringing the original cost of tire equipment lower seems to have satisfied the larger number of automobile tire buyers throughout the country, and now that the margin of profit has increased somewhat on tires because of the lower quality, the larger manufacturers seem to be ready to hold to the present course.

That some headway is to be made in correcting some of the evils which have been fought against by the National Tire Dealers' Association, headed by R. F. Valentine of Cleveland, is indicated by the report that a conference of automobile tire manufacturers and tire dealers will be held late this month in Cleveland, in which many of the grievances of the tire trade are to be discussed.

The dealers' association has tried for the past six months to arrange conferences with the manufacturers to have the two branches of the industry work in closer harmony. Not until the President recently laid before the public the fact regarding which the dealers complained did the manufacturers deem it necessary to recognize the association in any but a perfunctory manner.

Now, however, it is indicated, representatives of the two bodies will sit about the counsel board and discuss the problem from all angles.

It is almost admitted in the tire industry here that the dealers have a just cause of complaint. Tire companies loaded them up with tires when they felt that the bottom would drop out of business two years ago. The manufacturers have better ways of judging business as a whole than have the smaller dealers. When the bottom dropped out of business the dealers were caught with larger stocks in proportion than were the manufacturers who had unloaded.

Time after time the manufacturers have announced that price cutting was done. Comparatively large stocks of tires were sold to the dealers. Almost as quickly as the dealers had the new stocks in their warehouses one of the major companies cut the price, offered a new cheaper tire or offered special inducements to buy tires.

The result has been that the dealers have been at sea and have been caught holding the bag. This is the dealers' chief complaint and to a large extent the leaders in the industry here acknowledge the truth of the charge more by failure to deny rather than by an open avowel of the truth of the statements.

The dealers ask that they be permitted to help mold quality and price policies. The dealers are the men who stand closer to the public, while the manufacturers stand closer to the large business interests. A combination of the two powers, the dealers state, and the manufacturers now acknowledge, will make for greater steadiness in the automobile tire industry from top to bottom.

NEEDS WHEELS ALIGNED

Many drivers have difficulty in backing because they do not know when their wheels are in a straight line, but this can be easily remedied by a suggestion made by W. F. Beel, of the Lexington-Los Angeles Company, distributers of the Lexington Minute Man six. His advice is to have the wheels properly aligned, and then put some distinguishing mark on the bottom of the steering wheel, like a small notch underneath, so that the steering wheel can be set in place and the driver will then know that his wheels are straight.

"KIDDING" IS REPREHENSIBLE

Mistake to Jolly Beginners in Car Driving

Few Pilots Really Learn to Steer Properly

And Much Grief is Caused from Shortcoming

BY R. A. VINE

It usually has been the rule to jolly the person who devoted long hours to learn driving under an instructor. This practice of "kidding" is one that human nature succumbs to; hence the individual starts out alone on the congested highways, underestimating the need for proper knowledge, and joins the ranks of our careless maniac-drivers, endangering not only themselves, but the lives and property of others. The mere knowledge of how to start and stop a car serves only as preliminary training. It is from this point that the greatest care should be exercised, to learn the proper way to handle your car at all times.

Probably the most neglected part in the training of drivers is that of steering. A great number of accidents are caused through inability to turn the wheels rapidly enough in either direction, at the same time signalling to the oncoming traffic, as to what course you intend taking.

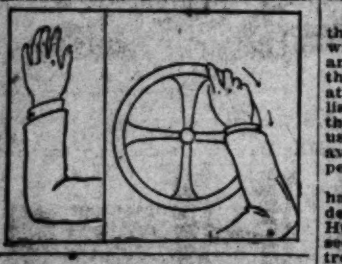
The traffic laws in this State specify clearly that motorists must signal when changing the course of their car or when coming to a stop. This law in itself requires one hand and arm to obey it. The natural conclusion is this: No car should be driven unless its course of direction can be guided with one hand.

NEEDS EXAMINATION

Any machine that this rule eliminates should be examined for under-inflated tires, bushings loose, bearings worn, steering worm worn, etc.

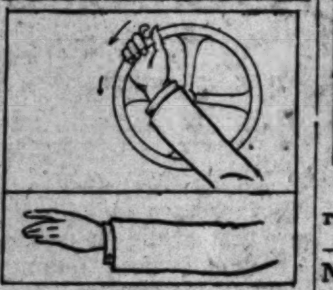
The above statement is, no doubt, drastic, but demonstration proves its truth and practicability. I shall devote the balance of this installment to suggesting the proper way to steer you car and signal at the same time.

Assume we are driving a left drive car. In making a right hand turn, the left arm is extended out and up, as a signal, at least seventy-five feet prior to the corner. (This applies to all signals, except in emergencies.) The wheel should be grasped high, with the right hand, and turned to the right, as corner is reached,—the speed of the car being lessened at the same time. The left hand should remain at the signal position until the corner is rounded, then it falls high on wheel and straightens out the course of your car, then right hand relinquishing its hold when the left hand takes control.



This method completes your turn in two movements, whereas the ordinary way of using both hands, after a hurried signal, taking two or three holds on the wheel to accomplish a turn, never allows you full confidence of control and makes more work for the driver.

For the left turn the signal is that the left arm shall be extended straight out and held there until car has taken its complete turn. This time the right hand is crossed over and under the wheel and pulled down to the left as corner is reached. To straighten out the course of your car following a left turn, let go of the wheel, and take new grip high and pull down to the right, as in right hand turn. Note that the left hand plays no part in a left turn, except as a signal, yet you have perfect control of your car.



Steering is a knack, not bull strength. Once acquired and your driving pleasure increases greatly.

In down town traffic, cars should be guided with the right hand, keeping the left ready for immediate use as a signal. Remember that you can do nothing with two hands on the steering wheel that cannot be accomplished with one, thereby leaving the other in reserve as a signal. Try these suggestions out and it may aid you greatly, regardless of your past experience.

Happy Reports on Gas Saving of Hupmobiles

Between Anaheim and Santa Rosa, O. H. Renner of the Southern California city, driving his Hupmobile loaded with passengers and camp equipment asserts that he averaged 24.4 miles to the gallon of gas, in a communication just received from him by the Greer-Robbins Company, Hupmobile distributors for California, Arizona and Nevada. Renner is now sojourning in the Redwood National Park, Santa Cruz Mountains.

"This is the season that we get the most reports, both verbal and written, on Hupmobile performance, because so many owners are their vacations in the mountains or at other resorts," said Billy Williams, Hupmobile salesmanager for this firm. "Hupmobile owners are usually 'bugs' on gasoline mileage averages and on such details as pertain to loke upkeep costs."

The Greer-Robbins Company is hardly able to keep up with orders on its books for the model R Hupmobile, particularly in coupes, sedans and roadsters. This year's tremendous business shows a marked increase in the number of enclosed cars sold, said Williams.

Plenty of Room in This Utility Coupe

Space for a Steamer Trunk and a Couple of Suit Cases

The manufacturers may build chaise longues with Chevrolet coupe models of the future, but at present a 36-inch trunk of the steamer variety and two suit cases will fit in the back compartment.

NASH AFTER NEXT MILESTONE MARK

START ON THE WAY FOR THE SECOND HUNDRED THOUSAND IN CAR PRODUCTION

Breaking production records at the big eastern factories now can be taken as a matter of course. Despite the important bearing that increased production has upon the entire automotive industry, the demand for popular cars has become so keen that buyers are keeping the factories working double capacity in order to supply their wants.

Manufacturing possibilities, of course, are only feasible through the exercise of greatest efficiency in all branches of production and such plants as the Nash Motor Company of Kenosha, Wis., present an amazing array of monthly increases that are the cause of wonder of all plant executives.

Passing the mark sought after by all manufacturers, the 100,000 car produced, Nash employees have started the number well on toward the next milestone in hundred thousand figures with an even greater increase for the second quarter of 1922 in sales and production than shown during the first this year. Robert S. Breyer of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors for Southern California and Arizona has received word from the factory that the second quarter of this year shows an increase of over 30 per cent in sales over the first quarter.

TO ERECT A NEW TIRE STRUCTURE

Charles E. Bayless, general manager of the Liberty Tire and Rubber Company, has purchased the northeast corner of Eleventh and Los Angeles streets on which he is erecting a modern two-story structure which is to be used as the new home of the Liberty Tire Company. The new building is equipped with two 400-ton rubber presses, rest rooms, drive-in service to accommodate thirty-five cars, and all the latest features that go to make for up-to-date tire service.

FOR PROFESSIONAL MAN

The wants and requirements of the business and professional men and women were given first consideration in the construction of the type of coupe recently placed upon the market, which is being featured here.

The new Chevrolet coupe, is called the "Utility" because of the many uses it has, and the many advantages it offers those who wish to travel quickly, but light, and yet who desire to be closed away from the dust and dirt, declares the Los Angeles Chevrolet Dealers' Association. This car was designed solely and wholly for salesmen, doctors, lawyers, or others who must answer quick calls and carry a large amount of baggage with them.

In order that the baggage may be carried, and that salesmen may be assured of ample space for samples and advertising matter, the rear compartment is one of the largest that will be found in a small automobile. It has sufficient space for a thirty-six inch steamer trunk and two suitcases. This means the salesman can carry his samples, advertising matter, books and a couple of suitcases with ease. The amount of luggage which is required to fill the space was determined by equipment loaned by the Indestructo Luggage Shop, 244 West Fifth street.

EXPECTING BIG THINGS

The White Company will be manufacturing trucks at the rate of 10,000 yearly by October of this year, if the present rate of increase of production is maintained, according to advices received here.

The company is making more trucks now than ever before in its history, and if the gain continues through the summer months, even though in former years a lull was experienced at such times, according to O. R. Fuller, president of the White Auto Company, White distributors.

"The sales show a 40 per cent gain for the second quarter of this year as compared with the first one," said Mr. Fuller. "The sales this year for the second quarter were 22 per cent higher than they were for the same period of last year.

"That business conditions generally are improved is shown by the increase in orders. The second quarter of this year shows a gain of 26 per cent over the first three months, while it was 37 per cent over the corresponding period of 1921. This taken into consideration with the financial standing of the manufacturing concern shows a flourishing condition of business. The White Company has $3,500,000 in cash on hand, and only $1,200,000 in notes payable. The fact that the company has not found it necessary to discount any of its customers' paper speaks a volume in itself."

ENGLAND HAS HER TROUBLES

Traffic Situation in the British Isles is a Cause of Some Vexation

Motoring questions which have been vexing the industry and the police of this country have been equally annoying to those concerned with the regulation of traffic in England, according to a report of the interdepartmental committee on motor traffic, comment on which is contained in the Motor and Cycle, trade supplement to the Overseas Daily Mail.

The comment on the report was found by Harry Lord of the Lord Motor Car Company, distributors of the Velie, with the Velie-built motor, who says that motoring problems seem to be much the same the world over.

"The one great difference in control of speeders that can be found between the policy adopted in this country and the one urged in England is the abolition of the speed laws for private motorcars and motorcycles of a certain capacity in weight," said Mr. Lord. "The use of traps by the police has aroused English comment, and one writer to the paper in question argues that officers stationed at dangerous crossings will be of more real benefit than many placed in traps. The obvious fact that the traps do not catch all the guilty ones was fully brought out.

"The revocation of licenses of those who are involved in careless accidents is urged. It also is recommended that when a driver has had his permit revoked and then goes out and drives before his restricted period has been passed, the fine be heavy and that a jail sentence be given due consideration. That question has been greatly to the fore here.

"From this we can gather that human nature is greatly the same the world over, and that the problems which we find vexing are undoubtedly proving equally as annoying to the English law makers."

AUTO CAMP SITES

For the benefit of automobile tourists a list of camp sites along the Lincoln Highway has been compiled and is given in the August issue of Popular Mechanics Magazine. Many communities provide free camping grounds that are elaborately equipped. At all the points listed special grounds have been set aside for the free use of campers, and tourists are made welcome and treated with consideration.

COURTESY STUNT IS A WINNER

Girl Driver Meets Up With Road Cranks and Converts Them to Idea

The courtesy idea certainly appeals to Los Angeles motorists, according to Miss Maud Hughes, driver of the Cleveland six courtesy car, which has been setting an example of courtesy on the Los Angeles streets recently. "I am sure that everyone wants to be courteous and I think that the white car just gives the needful reminder. The other day out on Wilshire and Vermont I started across Vermont and then noticing that a street car would beat me over, I stopped and backed enough to let traffic through with the car. The first man who drove through gave me such an appreciative wave of the hand that I knew he got the courtesy idea.

"Driving out to Sunland the other day on that narrow stretch of cement, I found myself blocked by a man who insisted on holding the center of the road. I honked and honked but it did no good. Finally I passed his slow moving little car by going off the pavement. The way he turned his head with such a snappy gesture I was sure he was going to say something cutting; but I just smiled and waved. His scowl broke into the biggest grin you ever saw. He saw the word "courtesy" on the side of my car, and when I looked he was hugging the right side of the road just as lawfully as one could ask.

"Just today at one of the busy corners I paused to let another man have his right of way, and he gestured so politely for me to proceed, that of course I had to smile my appreciation. And I am sure that the smile cheered him as much as it did me, and I'll bet he was courteous all day long."

Don P. Smith, general manager of the W. P. Herbert Company, states that innumerable letters and phone calls have been received congratulating the officials on this courtesy idea. "Many of the people, said Mr. Smith, have merely read about it in the papers; others have seen the car; quite a few have gone out of their way to be courteous and have won one of those dazzling smiles that the Cleveland courtesy girl knows how to bestow.

SPRINGS REQUIRE SOME ATTENTION

In the minds of most automobile owners, springs are "just springs." They are left comparatively alone to perform a duty faithfully when, as a matter of fact, they are an important part in the assembly of any automobile. The fact that they are mainly inaccessible and because their proper care and attention makes for unpleasant and dirty work, very few owners make any attempt to lubricate their springs. Unless an offending squeak or a broken leaf actually compels attention, little thought is ever given to their condition.

"Through the installation and use of the new Alemite Lubricating Spring Covers in conjunction with the Alemite High Pressure Lubricating system, the care of springs has been transposed from a dirty, difficult and tedious job, requiring many hours of disagreeable work to a clean, simple and short time operation," declares C. A. Roesch, head of the Alemite Lubricator Company of California, State Alemite distributors.

Construction of Valve the Big Feature

It would be interesting, if possible within a short space, to trace back the complete development of the racing car from the time of the first race of the then horseless carriage to the present-day habitues of the roaring road, the former a heavy, cumbrous and clumsy mass of metal, the latter a small, lithe and powerful chassis with a smart streamline body that cuts wind resistance to a minimum.

It would be interesting if for only one thing: to prove the advancement of engineering design and to show the ancestry of power, that giant housed under the modern automobile hood. To many, the motor still appears as an inanimate casting of metal, but a great many who have followed the racing game are conversant with facts that testify to a great increase of power.

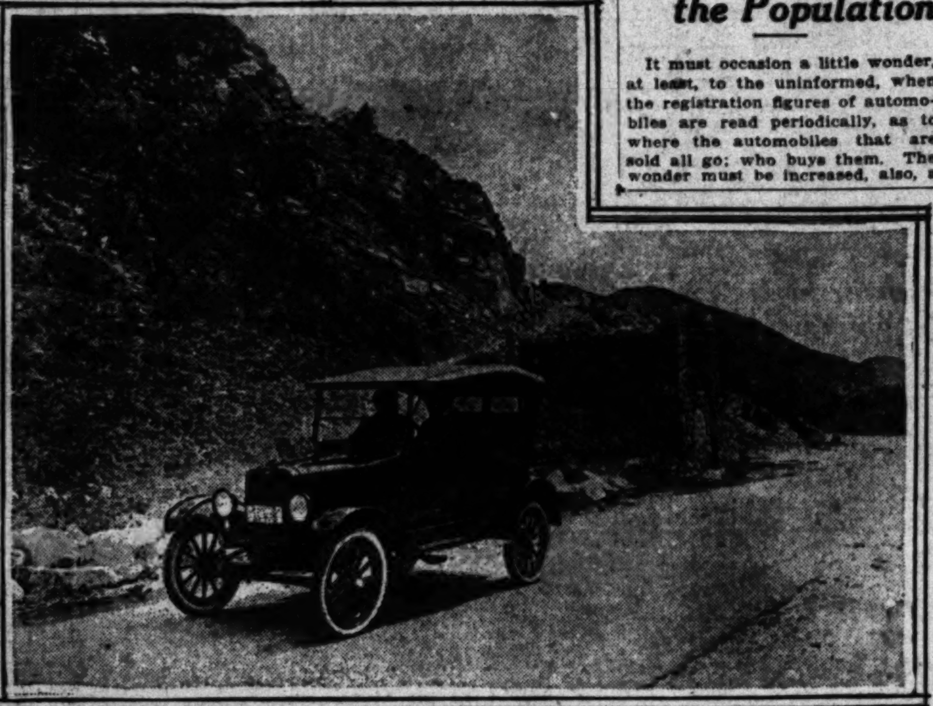
The outstanding feature of the racing motors of today, whether of the 183-cubic-inch design or of the newly developed 122-cubic-inch job, is the valve construction that represents a study involving years of time and thousands of dollars in experimental work, but of fruitful effort that has developed 90 and 100 horsepower at the command of the average motorist.

"By ingenious combination of theory, science and practical knowledge into an overhead valve and camshaft action, engineers in the Duesenberg factory have created an automobile power plant that has set the pace for modern construction throughout the world. This principle is followed by every racing car that is used today because of the extreme power, stability and dependability under the most gruelling tests," says A. J. Shafer, of Shafer-Harrigan-Cleveland, Inc., Duesenberg straight-eight distributors for Southern California.

NEW BUILDING FOR NASH MOTOR PLANT

An evidence of the popularity of the Nash four line throughout the country was the addition of a new metal-working shop to its plant in Milwaukee, Wis., where the production of Nash motors is entirely of the four-cylinder models, according to word received by officials of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors for Southern California and Arizona. Details of the new building disclose the facts that it will be three stories in height, 100x400 feet, and that it will materially facilitate production of capacity output. The factory is rushed at the present time to take care of present orders for cars it was stated here.

Auto Camps Boost Traveling



Thousands Avail Themselves of Motoring Convenience

Cajon Camp, elevation 3000 feet, and in the picturesque Cajon Pass country, is one of the most popular camps in the south. An Overland four is seen on the highway just outside the entrance to the camp.

ROAD COURTESIES HELP

As our boulevards become more and more crowded with the ever increasing number of vehicles there are a few courtesies which, if followed will make motoring more enjoyable and a great deal safer, according to Hal Baker, sales manager of the Western Auto Supply Company.

"Far too few motorists blow their horns when passing other vehicles. But there are not a few drivers, mostly possessors of small machines, who take great pleasure in making an awful racket when they are about to pass another machine. They seem to enjoy seeing the car ahead of them swerve quickly to one side of the road, believing, from the large noise made, that a fast machine or a truck is almost upon them and demanding the greater part of the road to pass. There are many and varied makes of horns used, but for pleasure cars, a horn which seems to ask for the right of way rather than demand it would seem proper.

"While we are on the subject of passing machines, it is hardly polite to 'step on the throttle' and squeeze between two cars both going in opposite directions. Not only does it wrack the nerves of the passengers in your car, but it causes the occupants of the other machines needless worry because a fraction of an inch might mean a terrible accident.

"The car entering a main thoroughfare should always slow down regardless of right of way. This is not only an act of courtesy in saving the many machines traveling along the main boulevard the sudden breaking of their machines and burning up rubber, but it is also an act of thoughtlessness which slows down the whole line of cars for the sake of a few seconds gained on the part of the individual."

STABILATORS ARE INTRODUCED HERE

Watson stabilators, manufactured to resist the recoil force of springs, are being introduced in Los Angeles and the Pacific Coast by the Watson Stabilator Company of 1714 South Flower street.

Automobile Use Increases With the Population

It must occasion a little wonder, at least, to the uninformed, when the registration figures of automobiles are read periodically, as to where the automobiles that are sold all go; who buys them. The wonder must be increased, also, a hundred fold when the people are told that a nation-wide average shows that there is an automobile in operation for every ten people in the country. And it must occasion a still greater wonder in California, where there is one car to every five people, approximately.

Who gets the cars? Why, the answer is simple. First, the constant increasing population must be taken into consideration; then add to that the fact the more people are becoming interested in automobiles and automotive transportation, and you have it. Summed up by Lester Fitts, sales manager of the Willys-Overland Pacific Company, factory branch here distributing Overland fours and Willys-Knight sixes, use of motor cars increases with population, but in a little greater proportion because of the fact that, you must remember, there are still a few people who are not motor car owners.

A nation-wide census that has been kept diligently by Overland officials reveals the rather startling fact that two-thirds, or more than 65 per cent, of the people who have bought Overland cars this year are people who have never owned automobiles before. Two-thirds represents almost the increase in production of the cars. It was declared in the same announcement that the use of Overland cars by farmers has increased 90 per cent over the previous year. Add to this the fact that Willys-Knight is experiencing a greater popularity than ever and registers a great increase in sales and production, and you have a few facts that indicate a healthy condition of the Willys-Overland interests all over the United States.

TAILORED BODIES DRESS UP MOTORS

ADD DISTINCTION TO THE GENERAL ENSEMBLE OF AUTOS

For centuries men and women who wish to appear well groomed have had exclusive tailors and modistes to turn out their garments so that they fitted and so that the wearers might present their best appearance on all occasions.

It was only natural for persons who had admired and possessed exclusiveness in clothes and homes to seek that same distinction in their motor cars and thus the custom-built body is for those who crave things built to suit their fancies and requirements particularly, observes Robert Thompson, of the Robert Thompson Company, top and body builders.

"While builders of automobiles have met a great many requirements in their fine cars, they must, of necessity, make cars to suit the great body of buyers," said Mr. Thompson. "It is like ready-made clothes. They are good, and some are excellent, but they lack the distinction, the air, that comes from garments moulded by the best of tailors.

"Those who seek something in the car body line which meets special requirements, or who desire a body distinctive, can have their wants supplied by having the body built as they wish. Such bodies can be built on almost any chassis and any design that suits the owners."

HAS YOUR VOCABULARY BEEN MUCH ENRICHED?

It has been said that the automobile vocabulary a thousand fold to the vocabulary of the common people; not in new terms for metallurgy or edifying others, but rather in terms frowned upon by and like organizations and services. It would not be exactly brilliant, moreover, to doubt the foregoing statement. There are even some preachers who can give personal references as to its veracity.

Surely the manufacturers fight against this use of irreverent, and also irrelevant language as far as their products are concerned, even though most of them do, themselves, indulge in rather warm language at times. But they know it is not for their own welfare that the continuance in a large degree of this practice should be registered. If you bought something, then had to swear at it to make it work, you wouldn't necessarily want another one, would you?

But the best efforts of men sometimes go wrong, and some points of nature cannot be overcome. "It's not your fault," declares C. A. Roesch, head of the Alemite Lubricator Company of California, distributors of the Alemite products, "that inferior grease may cake in bearings and that dust collects in open cans of grease, but the fact remains that dirt will sometimes get into bearings and if left there your bearing goes on chipping and grinding until you get first, a ruined bearing, and second, a repair bill."

Records Endure

The four Lexington records established over a year ago still stand as achievements of this powerful Ansted motored automobile. Here they are:

Ensenada, Mexico

A stock Lexington travels at the rate of 89.55 miles per hour at the beach at Ensenada, Baja California, Mexico.

Crestmont Grade

A stock Lexington touring car conquers the twisting Crestmont grade in high gear.

Second Gear Record

A stock Lexington touring car with four passengers establishes a second-gear record from Los Angeles to San Diego. Time: 3 hours, 55½ minutes.

Baxter Street Hill

Lexington is the only motor car to climb Baxter Street hill in high gear. This was done with stock gear ratio; car making 65 miles an hour on straight-away after climb.

NASH

Power With Economy

The tremendous reserve power of the Nash Six has been proven on many occasions. Road records — L. A. to Phoenix; L. A. to Salt Lake City; L. A. to Bishop, and many others, have shown, not only great reserve power but wonderful ability to stand hard usage.

Together with this power the Nash possesses economy of operation in a remarkable degree. Average owners obtain 18 to 20 miles on a gallon of gasoline, and the consumption of lubricating oil is unusually low.

RAY McNAMARA'S Tips for Summer Trips

COPYRIGHT 1922 BY THE CHRISTY WALSH SYNDICATE

In order to avoid the possibility of mechanical trouble and as a matter of safety in preparing your car for touring, a careful inspection should be made of the running gear and chassis in general. Again we must refer to the instruction book in order to follow the chassis details closely and to form a better acquaintance with the car. Every instruction book contains important information pertaining to proper care of the several assemblies that go to make up a complete chassis.

Most important is the steering gear and its connection. See that all parts are securely locked by cotter pins or lock washers as the case may be. Have some one work the wheel in each direction while inspecting for loose connections. This is important as loose connections cannot be detected unless the wheel is turned. Points to observe closely are, the bolts or rivets that fasten the gear housing to frame, bolt or nut that holds drop arm to steering gear, ball and socket joints on drag link, tie rod bolts, steering knuckle king pin and arm nut and cotter pins.

VERY IMPORTANT

Steering gear and connections should be lubricated carefully before starting and if traveling over wet roads, lubricate all connections exposed to splash of road daily. This is important in order to have easy operation of steering for a tight steering gear over long distance makes driving difficult, causes sore muscles and undue wear and rattles will develop.

Springs should receive careful inspection. See that spring clips are pulled up tight and properly locked. This is important as loose clips will cause breakage.

Inspect spring bolts and shackles carefully. Lubricate bolts thoroughly, see that bolt nuts are adjusted properly and properly locked in place by cotter pins. This is also important in order to avoid spring breakages. When adjusting the side play in spring ends and shackles, do not pull the nuts up tight, as this will bind the spring ends, causing hard riding and possibly breakage. After adjusting spring bolt nuts always test by having another person jump on the running board, thus putting the spring into action, then watch the shackles and bolts to see that action is free.

Remove hub caps, see that rear wheels are tight on axle shafts, and that nut is locked securely in place. See that front wheel bearings are free, rather have a little shake in the bearings than any tightness. Then see that nut is properly locked and pack well with grease per instruction book when replacing the hub cap.

Check front wheel alignment carefully per instruction book. It is very necessary that the front wheels toe in slightly, at the front, generally one-fourth to three-eighths closer in front than rear when measuring with a rod between the felloes at a point fifteen to sixteen inches above the ground. This is very important as misalignment causes front tires to chafe and wear out rapidly, also causes hard steering. This condition develops sometimes in accidents or when driving hard into curbstone or ditches. Misalignment can be detected by tread of front tires wearing flat or chafing. If you do not have the facilities to check this, see the service man.

LOCK SECURELY

Rear axle—See that all bolts and nuts on housing are properly locked in place. Leakage of oil indicates a bad gasket over oiling or loose nuts. This condition should be remedied, as a leak from the inside means that splash from the road grit and dirt can work into the axle housing, causing excessive wear.

Universal joints—See that metal universal joints are properly lubricated and free from oil leaks, and in the case of metal or disc joints see that all nuts and bolts are properly locked in place.

Transmission and clutch should receive attention per the instruction book, particularly the clutch, as some clutches operate in oil, others do not. The dry clutches require certain attention when slipping or grabbing, which the operator should be familiar with. The same applies to oil clutches. The instructions pertaining to these are very important. You may need them in a pinch.

Battery—The water level in the battery should be watched closely on touring. Water evaporates rapidly due to warm weather, but more rapidly due to long daily tours, when the generator is charging at high rate without using the lights. Therefore, inspection should be made at least twice a week on tours, until you become familiar with the rate of water consumption. See that all battery connections are tight and clean. Follow your instruction book closely on this end and other electrical apparatus, such as starting motor generator and ammeter.

Brakes—These are another of the very important items pertaining to safety and should be inspected and adjusted carefully. If brakes have been in service a long time, it is well to have them relined and adjusted before starting on a long tour.

Tires—There is very little pleasure in touring if one has to suffer a lot of delays wrestling with old worn-out tires. Tires with fractures in the fabric should be replaced with new ones. Do not put weak tires on front wheels. This is dangerous as blow outs at speed on front wheels interfere with steering control and are often the cause of serious accidents.

On account of the difficulty in getting tubes repaired over night and the chance of more than one puncture on a day's run, it is good practice to carry two extra inner tubes in addition to the spare tire.

Other chassis items such as body, fenders, splash and pan bolts should be inspected and tightened in order to prevent rattles from developing.

KISSEL OWNERS BOAST OF CARS

It is believed to be a generally admitted fact that automobile owners today are giving more attention to their tire and gasoline mileage than ever before. In fact it is now becoming the custom to boast about the economical upkeep of one's car, according to D. Girard Chessman, manager for H. J. Wurzburger Co., local Kissel distributors.

"I am continually getting postal cards and letters from owners on trips," said Mr. Chessman, "in which they state they are getting such and such a number of miles to the gallon of gasoline. I have one letter from an owner just returned from a 3000-mile trip, enclosing a sworn statement that he is getting 19¾ miles to a gallon."

Apperson Winds up Its Economy Rambling

Finishes Test in a Blaze of Well-Earned Glory

Three spins about different portions of the State, in which every kind and type of road condition was encountered, resulted in the Apperson averaging 30.85 miles per gallon of gas for 725 miles.

Toledo Police Chief Pays Us Friendly Visit

Southern California can be toured by visiting dignitaries only via motor car. That seems to have become a custom, particularly in recent years, as the highways, perfect for miles in this State, afford enjoyment to motorists that cannot be enjoyed elsewhere in the country. And as practically everybody comes to California at some time or another, this State has played host to practically all of the country's noted men and women.

Among recent visitors in Los Angeles was Chief of Police Jennings of Toledo, O., well known to thousands in criminology circles as the youngest police chief in the country, who, after attending the recent International Police Chiefs' Convention in San Francisco, spent considerable time in Southern California with his family, touring the beaches between Los Angeles and San Diego.

Toledo, O., his home town, being the location of one of the country's greatest automobile factories, the Willys-Overland plant producing thousands of Willys-Knight and Overland automobiles daily, Chief Jennings made one of his first visits here to Lester Pitts, sales manager of the local factory branch, the Willys-Overland Pacific Company, and was presented with a Willys-Knight touring car for his personal use while in this part of the country.

Chief Jennings' own car, in Toledo, is a Willys-Knight of practically the same model as a majority of Toledo residents are Willys-Knight and Overland boosters.

TIRE MAN SPEAKS OF SPECIALIZATION

In days gone by the corner store used to carry everything from a ten-penny nail to a woman's corset, but as business gained in volume the day of the specialist approached, and now one goes to a coal yard for fuel and to a drug store for drugs. The day of the great carry-all in the merchandising line has passed.

Consequently it is natural that persons desiring tires should go to a tire store where an exclusive business is conducted, and where all the clerks are specialists, declares Gordon Williams, manager of the Stephens Tire Stores Company, the firm that specializes on the Stephens Cord and the Overland fabric tires.

APPERSON RECAPITULATES

During the first six months of the current year the Apperson has been "ramping around considerable" with the result that the car has amassed several and various rather nifty records. It is only natural then that a resume should be pounded out for the benefit of those who are interested in eight-cylinder cars. It also should be remembered that whenever there is a champion he or she is entitled to a fanfair now and then. For example think of Charlie Paddock et al.

In January a Beverly model was taken out of the storehouse, dusted off and put in the hands of one Charlie Baale for grooming. Now Charles is quite a gent, having been rolling 'em fast for a long time over tracks and roads, but the task set him in this instance was no easy mark, the same being to capture all endurance and speed records.

After one of the most trying tests that can be foisted upon man or machine, the car came through with the following official A.A.A. records, which seem in a fair way of standing for some time.

1002.5 miles in 12 hours.
1492.5 miles in 18 hours.
1928.75 miles in 24 hours.

After rolling off the above records, Baale and his relief, Douglas Phillips, showed that they were made of real stuff, and also that there was an endless supply of endurance in the Apperson by piling up the following records:

1000 miles at 83.5 miles per hour elapsed time.

1500 miles at 83.2 miles per hour elapsed time.

2000 miles at 80.3 miles per hour elapsed time.

In addition to this, just to show that everything was still O.K., the crew wheeled off some time records for their own pleasure. These last records were not under the official sanction of the A.A.A., but were accomplished before a very critical gathering of motor-wise newspaper men and race officials.

2757 miles in 40 hours straight running.

86.25 miles in 1 hour.

Having completed this, the next thing was to put on some sort of economy test.

The run was made under absolutely touring conditions and was stretched over a period of three weeks, the car being under seal for the entire period, the average being 30.85 miles per gallon for 725 miles.

RECLAIM BARREN GROUND

Five Machines Take Part in an Interesting Experiment in Torino, Italy

An interesting attempt to render marsh lands fertile by means of mechanical cultivation took place quite recently at Sand Dona di Piave, in Italy. Because of the great difficulty of working it, this ground had been abandoned for years. The upper layer, about ten inches deep, offered a certain amount of consistency by reason of the presence of roots and decomposed vegetable matter, but immediately below this workable earth very soft bog land was encountered in which men and machines were liable to become completely embedded. The problem was to cultivate the upper layer without striking through to the semiliquid matter beneath it.

On all the five machines taking part in these trials it was necessary to fit additional attachments to the wheels, in order to decrease the pressure per unit of the area, and the plows had to be hitched up very closely behind the tractors, the maximum distance being ten inches. It was found, too, that even the vibrations of the engine tended to make the tractors bed in the soft ground. The Fiat tractor was classified first and received a gold medal. The others in order of merit, each of them receiving a silver medal, were Moline, Cletrac, Romeo and Moline.

The following table shows that excellent results were obtained under most disadvantageous conditions and indicates that with modern methods even abandoned marsh lands can be rendered fertile.

RESULTS OF ITALIAN TRIALS

	Area sq. rds.	Depth ins.	Time min.
Fiat	6111	9.4	127
Moline, 18 h.p.	4730	8.6	149
Cletrac	5172	8.8	176
Moline 12 h.p.	960	8.2	28
Romeo	2735	7.4	70

SPEED COPS HAVE SIMILAR MACHINE

If when touring over the Kern county roads, a Wills Sainte Claire is seen rapidly approaching from the rear, motorists should be careful and not indulge in a speed contest; for be it known that the speed enforcement officers have a Wills Sainte Claire which they use for chasing motorists who desire to travel too fast, and as the said Wills is capable of something like seventy-five miles an hour, they catch cars which they chase.

ROOM FOR FOLKS IN YOSEMITE

Departure of the Holiday Throngs Leaves a Breathing Space for Others

With the departure of a few of the great throngs who visited Camp Curry in Yosemite Valley over the Fourth of July holiday, breaking all attendance records in the famed natural playground, there is now room to take care of everybody, whether they desire to camp out or stay in the bungalows or hotels, according to word sent here from Mrs. D. A. Curry, manager of the world-famous resort, that has added greatly to the popularity of the valley.

Government figures for attendance show that thousands more have visited the valley this year than last, and the recent holiday, occurring as it did, so close to the week end of July 1, brought the attendance up to a total far beyond expectations of the valley inhabitants. There were more people in Yosemite Valley, it was stated, over the Fourth of July than ever before in its history. These came by train and other accommodations, as well as via automobile routes.

"Yosemite is a wonderful sight at the present time," said Mrs. Curry. "I have been living in the valley for many years and have never seen the waterfalls as beautiful at this time of year before this year, nor with so much water flowing over the cliffs of Yosemite, Vernal, Bridal Veil or the Nevada Falls.

"Both the Wawona road and the Big Oak Flat are in good shape for motor travel. Wawona was opened the first of the season and travel has been tremendous by this route all season. The Big Oak Flat road, because of the fact that it was only recently opened, does not show the marks of very heavy travel, and is in wonderful condition for a mountain road.

"There is still plenty of time before the closing of the season in September, to see the Yosemite Valley. There will be an influx of visitors all season long, and the many improvements this year at Camp Curry have served to make the resort even more popular than it has been. This has been the source of comment for many visitors who have been here before."

ACID FOR ELECTROLYTE

In preparing electrolyte for storage batteries nothing but chemically pure sulphuric acid and distilled water should be used. Commercial grades of acid and ordinary drinking water contain enough metallic impurities to cause disintegration of the active material, inducing sulphating and ruining the battery in short order.

APPOINT BOCK AS MANAGER

Ten Years in Service, New Executive Will Handle U. S. Rubber Branch Here

H. O. Bock, for ten years in the employ of the United States Rubber Company, has been appointed manager of tires for the company's Southern California branches, according to an announcement made by J. B. Magee, manager of the branches. The new executive has a wide acquaintance throughout his territory and has had a thorough training under Magee's watchful eye. He has conducted special selling campaigns with signal success.

H.O. BOCK

Before taking active charge of his department, he visited the company's tire factories in the East, so that he might learn at first hand the latest developments in the manufacture of tires. At Detroit, he spent considerable time in the immense plant where Royal cords are made. An addition to this plant has twelve stores and covers sixteen and one-half acres. The original building and addition cover about twenty-five acres and is the second largest structure in that city. While in the East, Bock visited relatives in Chicago and Colorado Springs, combining business with pleasure.

"The tire and automobile business is booming in the East," he said. "As soon as a new acquaintance learns that you are from Los Angeles, he begins firing questions at you, and many of them are inspired by something other than curiosity. It is surprising to find so many who evidently are interested in this city as a place to live in."

YOUNG ROBBINS TO JOIN ORGANIZATION

A. C. Robbins, Jr., well known in the California automobile trade and until recently connected with the retail organization of the Greer-Robbins Company interests in San Francisco, is in Los Angeles. He is a son of A. C. Robbins, of the Greer-Robbins Company and president of Union Motors, Inc., and will be connected with the retail selling organization, according to an announcement made this week. He has hundreds of friends in the industry and is being congratulated upon coming to Southern California in his new connection.

It is difficult for the Cadillac owner to convey even a tithe of the gratification he finds in his car. His enjoyment is derived from so many admirable features.

It springs not merely from his car's beauty, nor from its comfort nor its lightness of movement, grateful and wonderful as these characteristics are to him.

It proceeds from something even more than the dependability, the power, the swift acceleration or the basic economy of his Cadillac.

Rather, his satisfaction is a blend and a combination of all of these attributes, resulting in a pleasure and a contentment in his purchase too deep and lasting for comparison.

And added to it, and perfecting it, is the consciousness that he possesses the automobile that the world accepts as the standard of excellence.

NATURALIST DOPE FOR YOSEMITE VISITORS

Two new plants appeared in Yosemite Valley this season. A prickly poppy, which is common on the desert east of the Sierra, and a water-loving knotweed. This knotweed, or polygonum, which is the handsomest of its tribe, has taken possession of the swamp back of the Pillsbury studio, and now lifts dense clusters of bright pink flowers above the water grasses. No doubt the seeds of the poppy were carried in over the Tioga Road with some auto party last summer. It is to be hoped that this lone cousin of the Matilija poppy may start a colony.

MARIPOSA LILIES

The mariposa lily is one of California's most famous flowers. In the Yosemite Valley there are three species. A small white one comes in May, and is soon lost in the rapidly growing grass. During June the pale flowers of the Nuttall mariposa are abundant in the meadows. When this mariposa is gone venustus, the beautiful, lifts delicately tinted lilies above the tall meadow grass. Mariposa is a Spanish name meaning butterfly.

BLACK-EYED SUSAN

One of the most showy and most interesting flowers now blooming in the fields about the valley is the black-eyed Susan. This plant is a native of the Mississippi Valley, but owing to its ability to adapt itself to conditions brought about by civilization, it has managed to bobo its way both east and west, and is now a common flower over most of the United States. It also has found its way into European flower gardens, and now travelers from far-distant lands may meet here in the valley an old friend. The wide range of black-eyed Susan coupled with her loveliness tends to make her a general favorite.

BEING PAINTED

Great interest is being manifested by the public in the painting of the large relief model of Yosemite Valley, which may be seen at the Yosemite museum. The topography is represented on so large a scale that the actual views may be obtained by sighting over the various points. All trails and roads will be represented as soon as the scenic effects are reproduced in natural color.

LIVE RATTLESNAKE

A live rattle-snake, captured by Mr. Robins at Waterwheel Falls, may be seen at the museum. Five other species of Yosemite snakes also are in captivity and will be shown on request to any visitors.

MULE DEER OFTEN SEEN

Mule deer are often to be seen near the public camps. A fawn, lost from its mother, was recently taken to the Rangers' clubhouse where it has found a good home. It should be remembered that this is the only species of deer found in the park.

VALLEY ELK IN PADDOCK

Six specimens of the Valley Elk, a former abundant resident of the San Joaquin Valley, are to be found in a paddock north of the museum. These animals are displayed through the interest of the California Academy of Science, which has been interested in saving the small remnant of this species to be found near Buttonwillow, Kern county.

GOPHERS AND MOLES

Many burrowing animals are best known by their workings since they are seldom seen above ground. The earth wounds of both gophers and moles are often seen in the meadows. The familiar ridge left above the tunnels of the mole often helps in the identification of this mammal. In the high country earth cores mark the winter work of the gopher, when snow covers the ground.

TANAGER'S NEST FOUND

Although the Western tanager is a fairly common bird in the valley it is not often that a nest is located. On one of the nature guide field trips last week, a nest of this bird was located, and all had a fine chance to see the parent birds feed the young in the nest.

CHICKADEES COMMON

The mountain chickadee with its clear whistled "O dearie" has been seldom seen or heard on the floor of the valley this year. Those who take the trails to the higher country often ask about the song of this bird. A pair feeding young in the nest were located at Glacier Point.

BIRD ON CLOUD'S REST

Nearly every hiker to Cloud's Rest meets a large jay-like bird gray, black, and white in color, which cleans up the leftovers from the lunches. This member of the jay family which lives near timber line, is known as the Clarke crow or Clarke nutcracker. It was first discovered by the Lewis and Clark Expedition to the Northwest.

BIRDS THROUGH NESTING

The middle of July sees many deserted birds' nests and many young birds following their parents, calling for food. The food call of the black-headed grosbeak is often confusing to the bird student for it is very unlike the usual call of the adult.

CANYON WREN HEARD

As the season advances, bird students will hear the interesting song of the canyon wren, a bird that inhabits the rocky walls of the valley. Its song is almost a chromatic scale, starting at a high pitch and descending by a series of slurs to a much lower pitch.

FEEDS OVER MEADOWS

One of the most brightly-colored of the swallows summers in the park. Many adults with young now feed over the meadows.

LARGEST OF WOODPECKERS

Several persons have been fortunate enough to see the pileated woodpecker or "cock of the woods," the largest of our woodpeckers. The resounding call of the giant woodpecker should be a more familiar sound during the coming month.

TRAP GUN AND ROD

BY TOM MARSHALL

"Will try anything once." A stock declaration made by every person at some time in their life. They have kidded themselves into being mother of the thought. A proposition which frequently necessitates a square back-down. Standing with both feet squarely planted on terra firma, I was watching those thrilling aerial gyrations, noting the apparent ease and safety with which air pilots operate and direct their airplanes.

Milling around in my ivory dome was the thought. I would enjoy a trip into that Celestial zone, where those much touted streets are paved with gold and the continuous tingling of harps is ever heard. It became necessary to convince myself, an escapade of that character, would not be the direct means of placing in my hands one of those string instruments and electing myself a life member of that Celestial harp orchestra.

IT KNOCKS

Opportunity, eventually knocked at my door. It became necessary for me to make that trip above the clouds or remain on earth a "welcher." I had made by declarations too strong. I made the flight. My friend Tony Jannus, who was later killed in Russia, was considered one of the most capable and reliable aviators in the business. He suggested taking me on high as his plane guest, that we might study wild bird life en route. A proposition which appealed to me. He was flying a hydroplane, which accommodated one passenger. His plane lay on shore, ready for action, aside from adjusting his motors, which seemed just a little out of tune. I was reclining in the extra seat, with no detaining straps. My distrustful frame of mind, was bolstered materially, when he advised me that out boat was equipped with air compartments, capable of floating our engine and two men.

Tony positively agreed, he would stage no sensational evolutions or stunts for my benefit. When he headed out from shore, a comber was headed in, which we cut under, before leaving the water for mid-air. Once through that on rushing wave, our plane jumped with a zoom, we were off. It was deafening, with our propeller making 1500 revolutions per minute, conversation was eliminated and the sign language substited. We soon reached a height, where our wet clothes, induced a preceptible chill, which very much detracted from comfort.

The passenger steamer Arrow headed for Put-in-Bay, looked like a life boat. Tony then tipped his planes, shut off his engine and we started a long volplane or glide, toward a bank of ducks, assembled about a mile out on Lake Erie. They were complacently resting on those gently undulating waves, unsuspecting of danger, failing to see us descending from the clouds, with a whirlwind pace. When you have been drifting around in dream land, have you ever experienced the sensation of falling from a precipice or height? There you have it.

QUICK INVENTORY

You take a quick inventory of your past life, framing a line of conversation for St. Peter, which is an attempt to justify or excuse some of your remembered escapades which might weigh heavily against you, when life's books are balanced. As we raced down from the heavens, a sea gull was leisurily flying ahead of us. He saw the rapidly advancing plane and let out an additional link, he was sure "stepping out." With every stroke of his wings, we gained, he was now beating the air, in his vain attempt to evade. When within a few yards of him, he clamped his wings to the body, diving as a king-fisher would for a fish. We then rushed along, just above the water's surface.

There had not been one monotonous moment on our trip, fear and uncertainty had disappeared, every minute was enjoyed. We had the undisputed right-of-way, no traffic laws or Fords rushing from the side streets. We dashed toward a large flock of blue bills, who no doubt thought they were assailed by the Piasah bird, which is pictured in Indian legends, as a bird of unusual size and ferocity. When those "feathered aces" left the water, they were turning aerial hand-springs, in vain effort to out wing us. They "towered" at the same time making turns and dips, too quick and fast for our machine to follow.

It would have been possible to fire several shots, at those retreating ducks, accuracy, would never have crowned your efforts. Their flight was fast and erratic, like a bird dodging a hawk. If a scratch shot had been made and a bird killed, Annette Kellerman would have been the only reliable retriever. A speed of fifty miles must be maintained to keep the machine in mid-air and correctly operate the steering levers. That is too fast, even on a slow bell, for accurate shooting. It is now a strict violation of the Federal migratory bird treaty act, to pursue or shoot water fowl from an aeroplane. Having thoroughly enjoyed my flight, I am ever ready to repeat.

Question: In shooting double targets, is there a set rule about which target should be shot first? Have you anything that you could offer which would improve my scores on doubles? They are very unsatisfactory.
Easton, Pa. FRED GREGORY.

Answer: Arriving upon the ground watch the flight of the doubles as thrown. Make a study of wind conditions, the targets dip or jumps influenced by prevailing zephyrs. If you find one of the targets are disposed to duck, look out for and go after that fellow. Fred Gilbert, one of the best double-target shots in America, advises: "Make sure of the first target, then negotiate with just as many as possible, with the second barrel and be very thankful every time you score two." You will find double target shooting a guessing school, from which there has never been a graduate. About the time you are convinced, by a satisfactory score, that you have mastered the art of shooting pairs, you will go out the following day and your failure to connect will take all the conceit or confidence out of you and you will go home feeling yourself a "dub." Never does a contestant get out of the guessing class on doubles. What makes those events more attractive is the element of uncertainty.

Question: Do you think colored glasses should be used in shooting? Are they of benefit at all times? HARVEY McMILLAN.
Chicago.

Answer: Colored glasses are almost indispensable when shooting "into the sun" on a bright day. Especially is this true if shooting over the water. If you are going to use glasses, they should be toric, fitted and conforming to different eyes. You might purchase a pair that would benefit you on the hit and miss plan. They are not necessary except under especial conditions.

Arizona Builds New Roads for Aid to Travel

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) July 22.—The Black Canyon road from Glendale to the county line northward has been reconstructed for twenty-one miles, with twelve miles materially improved north of New River. This route to Prescott now is considered very good, though an entirely new road is to be built by Yavapai county from Canyon northward. It is designed, however, to have the main road to Prescott run via Wickenburg. To this end a new short-cut highway is being blasted along the side of the Hassayampa canyon, north of Hot Springs Junction, saving much distance and grade.

North of Wickenburg the road will skirt the southwestern end of the Bradshaw Mountains, making a gradual ascent to a low pass that never is blocked by snow. This route to Prescott will be less than 120 miles in length, compared with 105 via the Black Canyon.

West of Wickenburg, Maricopa county is building a new road parallel to the Arizona and California railroad tracks, from Aguila west to the Yuma county line, and there is expectation that this road will divide a large part of the California traffic with the Buckeye route, as it is little longer.

Distribution of Motor Weight is Still a Problem

The proper distribution of motor car weight to insure safety to car and comfort to the passengers has long been a study for the most astute of automotive engineers.

European engineers are devoting a great deal more attention to this problem than are American, in the opinion of F. E. Lewis, of the Lewis-Hilliard Company, distributors of McFarlan and Hadley-Knight motor cars.

"Basically the American made cars are the finest in the world but, loyalty to American industries has made the motorist overlook a number of important points," said Mr. Lewis. "With European engineers striving hard for a proper or scientific distribution of weight, it means that the Americans will have to work harder on the problem.

"Foreign models generally allow for side mounting of extra tires and wheels and on closed cars the wheels and tires are often mounted on the upper deck, and as close to the center of the car as it is possible to put them.

"While the American car is as near mechanically perfect as it is possible to get it, the engineers have plenty of study ahead of them in learning how the weight, extras and all, can be scientifically distributed. When that has been done the motor will have reached its real perfection."

TO ESTABLISH A NORTHERN BRANCH

ELECTRO MANUFACTURERS TO HAVE LABORATORY IN SAN FRANCISCO

The establishment of a branch factory and laboratory in San Francisco for the manufacture of Electro, the new fluid which recharges storage batteries instantly, was forecast upon the arrival here last week of L. S. Holmes, general manager of the Electro Company, Inc., after an extended business trip to the northern metropolis.

Mr. Holmes went to San Francisco to confer with several prominent business men relative to establishing a production unit in that section. He declares that only a few minor details are necessary to arrange before work is begun on the laboratory and factory. He says that construction work on the new production unit should be under way within two weeks. A number of garage and service stations between here and San Francisco, which are now being supplied with Electro from the local plant, will hereafter be supplied from the San Francisco headquarters.

As soon as the northern unit is installed and under way, Mr. Holmes plans to visit several points in the Northwest, as well as Denver and Salt Lake City. He will look over the field in each of these places with a view to establishing laboratories and factories to serve these territories.

ALEMITE SECURES HUMIDIFIER RIGHTS

One of the most important deals consummated recently along the row was the acquisition last week by the Alemite Lubricator Company of California of the distributing rights in California and Arizona for the Gunther Humidifier, a device for introducing moisture into the combustion chamber of an automobile or other motor, to increase power and prevent the formation of carbon deposits on spark plugs and cylinder heads.

The humidifier is the invention of George Gunther, who first noticed the improvement in the operation of the motor on his car when a slight leak in the cylinder-head gasket permitted water to leak into the combustion chamber a drop or so at a time. Mr. Gunther had also long been aware of the fact that motors operated much more smoothly and economically at night than in the daytime, due to the presence of moisture in the air drawn into the manifold and mixed with the gasoline va-

Rickenbacker Radio Motors on Way North

The two Rickenbacker cars which have been carrying the first transcontinental radio party arrived in Los Angeles a few days ago and left for Seattle and other points north.

The radio tour started from Detroit and was sponsored by the Automobile Club of Detroit, the Board of Commerce and the Lincoln Highway Association. It is in charge of Wallace Blood, well known in both motor car and radio circles. Blood travels in the sedan which carries the radio receiving sets, and is accompanied by his wife. In a five-passenger touring car, acting as a supply car, travels O. W. Heinz and family. Both cars carry loads, in addition to the passengers, of nearly three-quarters of a ton, but the drivers report them equal to any emergency that grades or sandy stretches present.

Many interesting stories are told by the party of their visits in villages along the Lincoln Highway, where the radio was a distinct novelty. The Indians in many places were greatly puzzled when they put the receivers to their ears or stood by the car and listened to radio concerts given hundreds of miles away. The magnovox, with which the outfit was equipped, made it possible to give concerts to a crowd, and to transmit the music to the sidewalk crowds as the car traveled along the streets.

Because of the rough roads that would have to be traveled between Detroit and the Pacific Coast, Blood supplied himself with a number of extra Audion tubes, as he expected that the jolting would break them up, but out of the dozen he lost only one. He described the riding comfort and operation of the car as amazing to him even after a number of years in the motor car industry.

Fuel economy was a surprise to the party as they expected the heavy loads carried would make gas hogs of the motors, but the touring car came through with an average slightly under fifteen miles to the gallon with a record on the heavier loaded sedan of slightly less.

Packard Well Pleased with Performance

Motor car sales totals as compiled for the first six months of 1922 by Motor Registration News show that the sales organization of Earle C. Anthony, Inc., Packard distributors for California, have good right to be well satisfied with the standing achieved by Packard during that length of time.

"According to the figures prepared by Motor Registration News Packard sales for the first six months of the year showed a gain of 180 per cent over a corresponding period of last year," said George R. Bury, vice-president of Earle C. Anthony, Inc.

"It is true most automobile sales increased this year over last, but the average increase for all makes of cars in California for the first half of the year was only 41 per cent. Packard's performance in more than quadrupling the average gain is therefore a most creditable one.

"There were in fact but four makes of cars in the entire list that showed a percentage on increase in sales equal to that of Packard and none of the four was in a price class approaching Packard. If we had been able to secure the shipments of the new single six that we would like to have gotten the Packard showing would have been even more impressive than it was. The new model single six was introduced late in April and the delay always incident to changing a model hampered our deliveries not a little. For the last six months of 1922 we expect to be able to make an even better showing than we did in the first six months for the deliveries on the single six should come through in much greater volume as the factory has increased production on this model to a marked degree."

COOK MOVES INTO HIS NEW OFFICES

W. H. Cook, who has been located at 1008 South Olive street for the past nine years has moved into new quarters at 1135 South Olive street. He will have one of the most modern used-car establishments in the city, and in addition to his regular used-car business will conduct a modern repair shop. Mr. Cook also plans to carry a larger line of rebuilt guaranteed used cars. William E. Gesner has been with Mr. Cook for some time, and J. J. Colby, Jr., will conduct the selling end of the business.

Advanced Type of Motor for Roamer Autos

Roamer announces the exclusive acquisition of Continental's newest and most advanced type of six-cylinder motor—the 12 XD. This motor was designed for Roamer and embodies the experience of twenty years' specialization of the country's most successful group of automobile engineers.

It is said for the new 12 XD motor that vibration is practically eliminated completely, in fact, between three and sixty miles per hour, tests have shown no visible vibration. This is very interesting to motorists as well as the very quick pick-up and economy of the new motor.

Owners have already reported getting fifteen miles per gallon of gas so the economy feature is well backed up on the road in ordinary day-after-day take-as-you-meet-them conditions. After all, it is the owner experience that really counts and it seems to be the policy of the Roamer factory to tell the experiences of owners under usual driving conditions rather than to exploit factory tests which must of necessity mean handling by experts.

Dort Making a Jaunt Through Resort Region

Ten days amid the boulevards and the mountains of California on a 2000-mile economy and reliability run is the latest test to which a stock Dort touring car is being subjected.

"We are eager to show the owner just what a Dort will do under the touring conditions such as the average motorist would encounter them," says F. A. Petrie, president of the Mission Motor Company, "so C. F. Crank has left on a trip that will take the Dort to San Francisco and then up to Lake Tahoe and the other mountain lakes in that region. From there the car will be driven with the top up and the windshield closed and carry two passengers and full complement of baggage.

"The fuel consumption, the oil and water used and the costs of repairs will be recorded. We want to point to the showing of the Dort on such a test as exactly what any motorist can get out of a Dort.

"The car we are using is the 'Economy Kid,' which has been used in all of our economy tests as well as setting the pace of 67.92 miles per hour on a city street. No special preparations have been made for this hard grind other than a general lubrication throughout the chassis and tuning up of the motor and ignition."

LEE FINDS SOMETHING THRILLING

Cadillac Man is Amazed at Manufacturing Precision in Eastern Factory

As well as Don Lee knows the Cadillac, he was amazed on his recent trip to the Cadillac factory to see the extremes to which the precision of manufacture is carried in the new plant. The number of inspectors was a matter of constant surprise. He found over 500 men constantly checking up to detect the slighest violation of Cadillac's rigid manufacturing rules.

More than a month ago a Cadillac engineer was given a difficult job. He assembled a huge quantity of blueprints and other data, and pitched into his task, under the direction of the chief engineer.

He has just emerged with proof of some of the most astounding facts ever recorded in the automobile industry. He discovered that in the manufacture of the Cadillac automobile there are 22,781 limits of precision varying from one ten-thousandth to one-thousandth of an inch, and a grand total of 37,000 limits of two-thousandths of an inch or less.

To those who do not grasp the meaning of a limit of precision let it be explained in this way: A Cadillac craftsman is supposed to machine a certain vital part until it is so nearly accurate that there is not more than three-tenths of a thousandth of an inch variation from absolute accuracy.

To get a better idea of what a Cadillac limit of precision means, take an ordinary sheet of paper, or a fine hair. Then try to imagine a measurement from one-tenth to one-thirtieth of that minute dimension, and you arrive somewhere near the fineness which is used every Cadillac part of any real importance.

WEBSTER "COVERS" SOUTH WITH BOOTH

Practically unkown to anyone save the distributors and dealers of automobiles with whom he comes into direct contact, the wholesale representative of an automobile merchandising organization is one of the greatest motive forces behind the scenes in the automobile industry. A published notice of the appointment of some individual to the wholesale department of any firm elicits no comment save from members of the trade, the public knowing nothing of what are the duties and just what importance the appointment is.

"Covering" the Southern California territory with Elmer E. Booth, for the Paige Company, factory branch representing the Paige and Jewett Sixes, is E. L. Webster, according to an announcement made this week by manager J. M. Sterling of the branch here. Together these two men have entire responsibility of Paige and Jewett successes everywhere in Southern California save in the immediate vicinity of Los Angeles. According to Sterling, the wholesale record established during the first six months this year played a great part in the showing made throughout the State.

FACTORY EFFICIENCY

SEES NO LET-UP IN THE DEMAND

Cheerful Prediction of the Hudson Vice-Prexy

Universal Shortage of Cars Presages Prosperity

Distributors All Urging More Shipments

That the unprecedented demand for motor cars all over the country, resulting in the inability of distributors and dealers to make prompt deliveries despite the breaking of production records by many factories, will continue throughout this year at least and probably for a good part of 1923, is the confident prediction of O. H. McCornack, vice-president of the Hudson Motor Car Company, in charge of sales and advertising.

Leaving the Detroit factory June 15 on his annual vacation, McCornack went first to San Francisco, being accompanied by his wife and daughter. From the Bay city they motored in a Hudson sedan to Los Angeles, where several days were spent in rest and recreation. During this period McCornack conferred at length with Harold L. Arnold, Hudson and Essex distributor for Southern California, Arizona and Northern Mexico, on conditions governing car production and delivery, particularly with regard to Pacific Coast problems.

Previously to his departure Monday for the Yosemite, from where he will proceed to San Francisco and take the train for Detroit, the factory official commented interestingly on the present situation in the automobile field. His ideas of the factors causing the tremendous demand for cars at this time and certain data which he provided are clarifying. In substance he said:

"From every angle the most surprising thing is that the demand is so nearly universal. In many parts of the country at this season has been experienced heretofore with regularity a summer slump, but I do not know of a section right now where a shortage of cars does not exist. In a report which I received Friday night a survey by the factory shows that in every quarter distributors are urging the shipment of more cars.

"Last night I received a wire conveying the information that in June about 6400 Hudson and Essex cars were turned out, marking the biggest production in our history. Yet we have been for some time and are now unable to supply more than one-half the number of cars asked for by our distributors. Moreover, the amount of export business we have had has been surprising, and we are pro-rating that on the 50 per cent basis as well.

"Present conditions, in my opinion, are due to a combination of affairs. In the first place, a very large number of persons did not buy cars for two or three years, using the ones they had much longer than they had been accustomed to in the past. Virtually all of them are now in the market for new automobiles.

"Then a host of persons that have accumulated new wealth in the last two or three years did not buy cars merely because not to buy seemed to be the spirit of the times. Now an overwhelming majority of them are in the field for automobiles."

McCornack is one of the most popular officials of the big Hudson and Essex factory. His visits to the Coast are always red-letter periods in the business history of the various distributors of the western part of the country. Democratic in spirit and affable in demeanor, he always gives them many helpful suggestions and information generally which enables them to conduct their affairs much more advantageously.

GARDNER BUILDERS HAVE REAL FAITH

SO PROUD OF THEIR PRODUCT THAT YEAR'S GUARANTEE IS GIVEN

"When any concern has such faith in its products that it is willing to issue a written warranty good for one year, it is unquestionably strong evidence of good faith and confidence in the performance of the article sold.

"The Gardner Motor Company of St. Louis, manufacturers of the famous Gardner light four, is one firm which has such confidence in the car it build," declares William G. Fisher, sales manager of the McGill Motor Company, distributors of the Gardner.

"The Gardner factory backs the Gardner with a one-year guaranty which protects the buyer for twelve months against defective parts to the car proper," said Mr. Fisher. "This guaranty is given with every car sold and it means something, because it is backed by a firm which has been making buggies and automobiles for the last forty years, and which has unusually strong financial backing, with more than half million in cash in the bank."

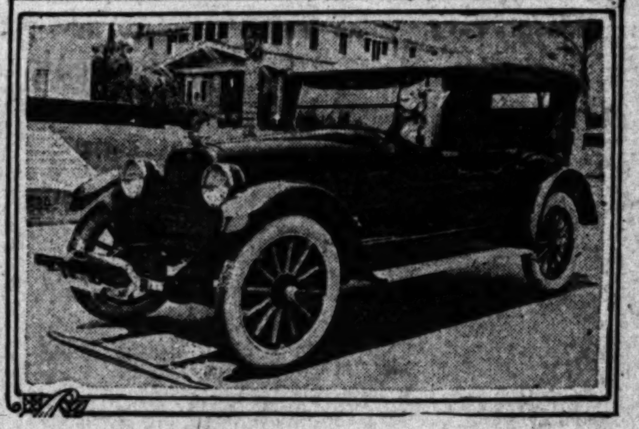
Nifty New Sport Model



A Four-Passenger, Six-Cylinder Nash

A keen demand is being felt for this particular type of car. Lovers of the outdoors in Southern California have taken an instant liking to the car and many of them are in constant use.

AN ULTRA-SPORT NASH

One of the most surprising advancements made in the automobile industry so far this year has been the experience of the factory executives in meeting the demand for types of particular automobiles to satisfy demands expressed for individuality. The manufacturers, in filling the needs thus expressed, have brought out several distinctive creations along the ultra-sport lines, meeting with instant and widespread approval.

"Enthusiasm attendant upon making any announcement of a new model brought forth by Nash motors was accorded the first arrival in the Nash six sport model," says George H. Kiley, sales manager of Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors for Southern California and Arizona. "This car, we found out through purchasers, filled in every particular the demands of motorists who desired the sporting element in a car that has, mounted on chassis for other models, a reputation for extremely high quality and long service records.

"With the Nash six chassis as a basis, the factory engineers have designed and built a car that is immediately attractive because of its distinctive appearance. Barrel-type head lamps, matched by smaller cowl lamps of the same design, windshield wings, and the top, upholstery and other equipment help carry out the design for better appearance."

BROWN SAYS THE EAST IS HUMMING

CALAMITY HOWLERS ARE PUT TO ROUT BY MOTOR CAR "COME-BACK"

The East is humming with activity, according to Walter M. Brown of the local H.C.S. distributing company that bears his name. Everywhere the motor car business has staged a remarkable come-back in face of the stand of big men that it would be years before factories were running to capacity again.

"In Indianapolis, the factories are putting full crews on duty full time and orders have been booked away in advance of present production schedules," says Brown, "and at the H.C.S. plant it is planned to extend the buildings in order to get production up to meet the demands.

"The H.C.S. has gone over in a big way all through the East, where the congested traffic conditions necessitate a smaller car than has been the custom and the owners will not be content with a small cheap car so they look to the H.C.S. as the logical car for their needs."

AMONG THE FANS

A team of eighteen Long Beach checker players defeated a like number of the Pasadena players in a team match held at the Tourist Club in Pasadena on Saturday, July 15, by the score of 78 to 66 points. The leading scorers on the Pasadena team were Frank Wheeler, Frank Murphy, J. W. Carr and Charles Schoolcraft. The high men on the Long Beach team were Albert McLean, Charles McLean and Robert Morrison.

This win gives Long Beach possession of, and the first leg on, the Beauregard trophy. A return match will be played in Long Beach some time next month.

In the chess match Long Beach did not fare so well, losing to the Pasadena players, 15 to 9 points.

Representatives of several clubs from the surrounding cities were present and conferred with Paul E. O'Brien, president of the newly formed Association of the Southern California Chess and Checker Clubs, relative to the future work of that body. While nothing definite was arrived at, it was agreed to call a meeting of the new association at which a two or three-day checker convention and meet will be proposed and no doubt accepted. Should this occur it is more than likely that Pasadena will be given the honor of holding the first tournament.

The Los Angeles Checker Club has donated $75 toward the Fifth American Tourney fund, and it is expected that individual subscriptions will raise the amount to at least $100. Below will be found the report of the secretary of the American Checker Association, showing the amounts of subscriptions up to July 8.

Ready to Show Its Wares on Any Occasion

The Oakland has proven its right to the title of the "economy champion," both in actual official competition, and in officially observed economy runs. It only serves to prove all the claims made by the Oakland builders that the new Oakland 6-44 is all that the motorist can expect in a car at anywhere near the price of the Oakland.

"If anyone wants us to prove that the Oakland 6-44 is the most economical car today, we will do it in any sort of a test that is required of the car," says H. C. McVey, general manager for the Los Angeles Oakland Company.

"And the economy of operation as demonstrated by the Oakland is not confined to trick stuff. There's isn't an Oakland on the road that will not return as much as twenty-five miles per gallon during ordinary driving. The test of the Oakland in its remarkable run to San Francisco in high gear, with never a motor stop, was more than an economy test. It was a reliability run as well. Any car that can make the dash from Los Angeles to San Francisco in high gear, without a motor stop of any kind, shows that it has power enough for all occasions.

"Throughout the trip, the Oakland averaged better than twenty-five miles an hour, which meant hitting it up to thirty-five miles per hour for many miles at a time. Even at this speed, and in such a long, steady grind, the supply of oil in the crankcase was apparently at the same level as when the car pulled out of Los Angeles. This is more evidence of the why of the 15,000-mile guarantee against oil-pumping that goes with every Oakland today."

EASTERNER LOOKS OVER SITUATION

Bruce Daniels, western representative for the Stutz Motor Car Company Inc., arrived here this week for a look over the business situation in California and a conference with A. B. Plomteaux, local representative for the line here.

Daniels, who is actively associated with the motor car business in its many details and ramifications is immensely impressed with the business outlook for the Stutz and for all quality cars in the California territory.

The sales registrations in this territory and the amount of business being done by the automobile merchants here is an indication of the business prosperity that prevails throughout this section of the country and a further guarantee of a prosperous fall and winter selling season, according to the Stutz representative.

Scenic Delights on Road to Arrowhead

Studebaker Special Conveys Railroad Officials to Resort

The new road on the north side of Arrowhead Lake offers a trip of beauty among the pines that guard the rim of the lake. A fleet of five big six Studebakers made the inaugural trip carrying a batch of prominent P. E. and Arrowhead Improvement Company officials. Below, the bunch is seen enjoying cooling drinks in the clubhouse shade.

NEW ARROWHEAD LINE?

The development work now under way and nearing completion at Arrowhead Lake assures an immense volume of passenger traffic to that resort, and as many will not have cars of their own or prefer not to drive, it is planned to operate a new stage line, equipped with comfortable touring cars, to run up the mountain from San Bernardino. These motor cars will connect with special electric trains from Los Angeles, whose passengers can purchase through tickets from Los Angeles or intermediate points west of San Bernardino.

The test trip of the first Arrowhead Special was made a few days ago by a party composed of prominent officials of the Pacific Electric, news editors and officers of the Arrowhead Improvement Company. They went to San Bernardino in a special car and were met there by a fleet of five Studebaker big six touring cars, which carried them up the Waterman Canyon grade to Arrowhead. They found a new village, patterned on the lines of an English town, with shops, cafes, dance pavilion, markets and all the needed business to take care of the visitors that will undoubtedly flock to Arrowhead.

On the north shore of the lake stands a beautiful clubhouse, where the party was entertained by the Arrowhead company. Boat rides to various points and a trip around the lake with the Studebakers were a part of the program of sightseeing. A wonderful road constructed on the north shore of the lake affords a scenic drive unparalleled in Southern California.

The performance of the Studebaker cars, which were furnished through the courtesy of Paul G. Hoffman Company, Studebaker dealer of this city, and the San Bernardino Motor Company, convinced the officials that the operation of seven-passenger touring cars was feasible and would afford a comfortable and rapid method of transportation. The power of the motors and the ease of handling was often commented on as the fleet swung around the sharp, steep curves of the switchbacks in close formation.

EIGHT WITH EIGHTY LESS PARTS"

ELIMINATES ALL CLUTCH TROUBLE

LOCAL CONCERN MANUFACTURES VELVET CLUTCH CONTROL FOR CHEVROLET

Something new in the way of clutch control for the Chevrolet 490 is being manufactured by the Clark-Turner Piston Company of Los Angeles, makers of the famous DeLuxe light-weight cast-iron pistons.

Chevrolet owners and dealers will welcome the news that this device, known as the DeLuxe velvet clutch control, is guaranteed to completely eliminate all tendency of the clutch to jerk, seize or take hold prematurely. It is said to so ease and smooth the clutch action that the pressure of one finegr is sufficient to throw the clutch out.

This naturally prevents any inclination of the car to "jack-rabbit"—that well-known lurching, jerking motion that takes place principally in heavy traffic—and largely eliminates stalling and kindred common motor "complaints." In fact, the total effect should be to put the powerful little Chevrolet 490 in the same class with much higher-priced cars with respect to drivability.

MATERIALS IN AUTOS TELL OF DURABILITY

It is frequently asked by automobile owners why one particular make of car possesses endurance to a point when its life is far longer, perhaps, than other cars of similar wheel base and type. The answer best known to those most familiar with manufacturing processes lies largely in the matter of quality of materials that go into the construction of the car.

Because it manufactures more of its car than any other builder in America, the Nash Motors Company is in a position to absolutely govern the quality; with immense foundry, forge shop, heat-treating department, it is dependent on no other outside facilities for the quality of metals used in the important parts of the car, according to Robert S. Breyer of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash distributors for Southern California and Arizona. While, for instance, it is the practice of some motor manufacturers to use gray iron in their cylinder blocks, Nash Motors employs an iron that contains chrome and nickel.

Manufacturers are Confining Styles Today

"Specialization is the big idea in business today," says J. Jerome Canavan, Pacific Coast distributor for Walker electric trucks. "Manufacturers are confining their production to fewer styles, models, or types, and truck manufacturers especially are working towards the point of building a vehicle that is especially adapted to fulfill special requirements in a highly efficient manner, rather than a truck that embodies many points of general usefulness, yet is not especially adapted to any particular service.

"In some lines of business speed is essential. High speed—at least the legal limit must be obtained—no matter how high the cost. Other industries do not require high speed, but maximum loads must be carried, and still others require neither heavy loads nor high speed, but the nature of the company's product or service demands regularity, as in the case of bakeries, creameries, laundries and numerous other lines where the customer demands the utmost in prompt, punctual and regular deliveries.

It is the latter class of services that have been first to modernize their delivery system by the use of Walker electric trucks. Rapid business expansion and increased congested delivery zones have been problems that were solved only by the adoption of Walker electrics; and while the electric truck is confined to the service of those who do not demand a legal limit in speed or excessively high mileage 85 per cent of all city transportation can be handled at a very small cost and large saving by the use of Walker electric trucks."

Miniature Stills to test the Crude –

Not every oil well provides the raw material which will meet our exacting standards for making Zerolene. Not every type of crude possesses the elements of "oiliness" and stability which are essential for the manufacture of this high-grade motor lubricant.

Hence, whenever a well is brought into production, the crude petroleum from this new source is subjected to careful tests, both in the field and at the refinery. From this crude a small quantity of finished lubricant is made in our research laboratory—a complete equipment of miniature stills, washers, filters and other apparatus being utilized for this purpose. This miniature laboratory process reproduces in every detail the process by which Zerolene is regularly manufactured.

If the resulting lubricant is shown by the chemists' analyses and the engineers' tests to be in the slightest degree below the exacting standards set for Zerolene, the production of the well is diverted to other uses, and is not used for the manufacture of Zerolene. This is the first of many steps taken to assure the highest quality in Zerolene.

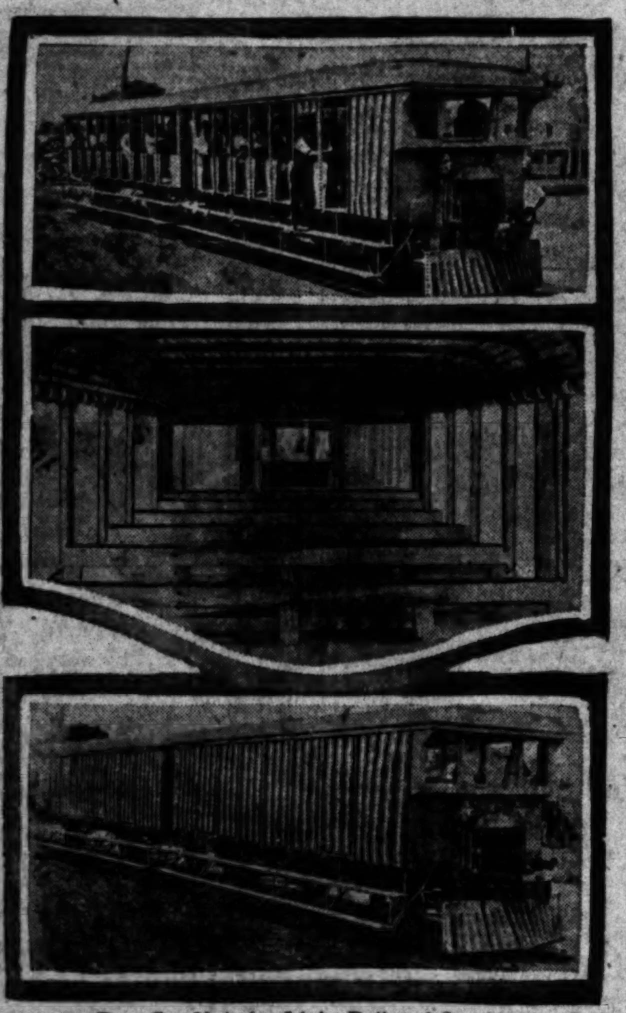
A Gasoline Summer Train



Two-Car Unit for Light Railroad Service

This is the latest in such development. The forward coach seats thirty-five persons, the rear fifty. Each seat will hold five persons without crowding. The cars are of the open type, but equipped with adjustable curtains along the side to provide protection against sun or rain. They were built by the Four Wheel Drive Auto Company of Clintonville, Wis.

HIGH CARS LOOK OUT OF PLACE

But in Early Days They Were Patterned After the Buggies of the Time

What outstanding characteristic of the old-fashioned automobile provokes the most merriment, when that equipage ventures on the streets today?

"The height, of course," says George Wurzburger of the firm of H. J. Wurzburger, local Earl distributers. Commenting further on the subject, he added:

"It is quite natural for folks to want to poke fun at yesterday's styles, whether in hats or cars or what not. But when we think of how funny those top-heavy automobiles look, we must realize that they really had a fundamental reason for being made that way.

"You see the early automobiles were copied after the buggies and surreys of that day in large measure. The latter vehicles were necessarily high off the ground because of their high wheels. The style of wheels was governed by the poor road conditions prevalent all over the country at that time. You can blame the up-in-the-air feature on the roads, therefore. And it was not until these roads began to be improved on a large scale that motor-car builders realized just how utterly unwise as well as unnecessary it was to have so much height to a car.

"A striking instance of how far they have gotten away from that old idea, it seems to me, is found in the Earl, which is swung nearer the road than any other car of the same wheelbase. The touring model has a height over all of only seventy-three inches, the brougham only seventy-four inches with the same height for the sedan."

NEW GAS CARS FOR RAILROAD SERVICE

LIGHT EQUIPMENT EXPECTED TO REDUCE OPERATING COSTS MATERIALLY

The gasoline summer train is the very latest in the development of light equipment for railroad service. A two-car unit of this type, manufactured by the Four Wheel Drive Auto Company of Clintonville, Wis., has just been completed. These cars are of the open type with adjustable curtains along the sides to provide protection for passengers against sun or rain.

The forward car of this unit has a seating capacity of thirty-five persons and the rear car can accommodate fifty. Special care has been taken by the manufacturer in the designing of the bodies of these cars so that each seat provides ample room for five grown persons without crowding.

The cars are equipped with air brakes, electric starting device and horn, standard MCB couplers, locomotive-type cow-catcher on the forward car, sanders for sanding the rails, and high-speed reverse gear which enables the cars to go as fast in reverse as they will go forward.

On short-line railroads and especially on electric lines over which excursions are run in the summer time, the gasoline railway summer train appears to be the ideal installation for reducing operating costs and at the same time maintaining reliable transportation service.

Freedom from Vibration is Makers' Goal

Durability, or long life, is claimed to be the one point most emphasized in modern automotive construction. And it seems to be the consensus of opinion that where durability is increased, dependability is improved in equal ratio, as a natural consequence.

As an instance of the efforts being made to lengthen the span of life of the high-grade car, particularly, D. Girard Chessman, manager for H. J. Wurzburger, local distributor, cites the Kissel.

"When you come right down to it, durability in a car depends in large measure on its lubricating system and its freedom from vibration. The Kissel as solved these problems in a number of ways. For instance, the car has two sets of brakes of the external contracting type on each wheel, one foot and the other hand operated. In addition to being quick acting and dependable, they are easily accessible and easily adjusted. All moving parts are equipped with hand-fitted, self-lubricating, bronze-graphited bearings, making it impossible for the brakes to wear loose, stick or drag.

"Many of the chassis rattles which most car owners are unable to locate come from side play in the springs. A special adjustment on the Kissel springs, both front and rear, obviates this trouble. Every moving chassis part is also equipped with a specially fitted self-lubricating bearing, so that it is practically 100 per cent rattle proof. In fact it is guaranteed against vibration from one to sixty miles per hour."

SPEEDOMETER NEEDS GREASE SOMETIMES

"It is the concensus of opinion that most speedometer trouble is caused by lack of lubrication to the speedometer shaft," says Harry Ungar, manager of the Stewart Products Service Station at 1366 Figueroa street.

"To play it safe, unscrew the coupling from the speedometer twice a year and pour into the casing the best grade of heavy oil.

"A little grease on the driving gears will save wear and tear and permit easier running. "Let your speedometer be a positive indicator in observing the intervals for inspection and lubricating your car."

Sturdiness is Obtained Only by Experience

Manufacturers well know that experience is the best teacher in the school of life, and that is one of the best reasons for their waiting, expectantly, to hear of the performance of a new automobile, or any new appliance or departure from the customary trend of construction, in the hands of its users. And it is a fact that the season's happenings in the motor car world have a decided tendency to retain or change the current year's models or any features that do not prove satisfactory in service.

But in new cars, that are new in production, are seen features that have been proved satisfactory and build for ruggedness of the finished product. The factories are putting greater strength in separate units, as well as the whole car, in order to improve its service. This is especially noted in the year's models which are stronger and lighter than predecessors.

It is well known that the greatest degree of sturdiness must be built into an automobile to stand the heavy duty of mountain driving when the gears, clutch, and other parts of the car are called into constant service, as well as the driving units. In building the new Jewett six, the Paige Detroit Motor Car Company engineers decided to make the entire automobile as sturdy as possible, with the result that the chassis is well able to stand the pace set by the powerful fifty-horsepower motor.

That there has been a great revival in the automobile industry all those interested know, but few have settled down to figure out just why the motor-car business should be on the boom when the other lines are just picking up gradually.

The selling of the cars to the public for less money, which was made possible in the drop in the prices of raw materials, is the reason, declares H. R. Mahoney of the National Motor Sales Company, local distributors of the National six.

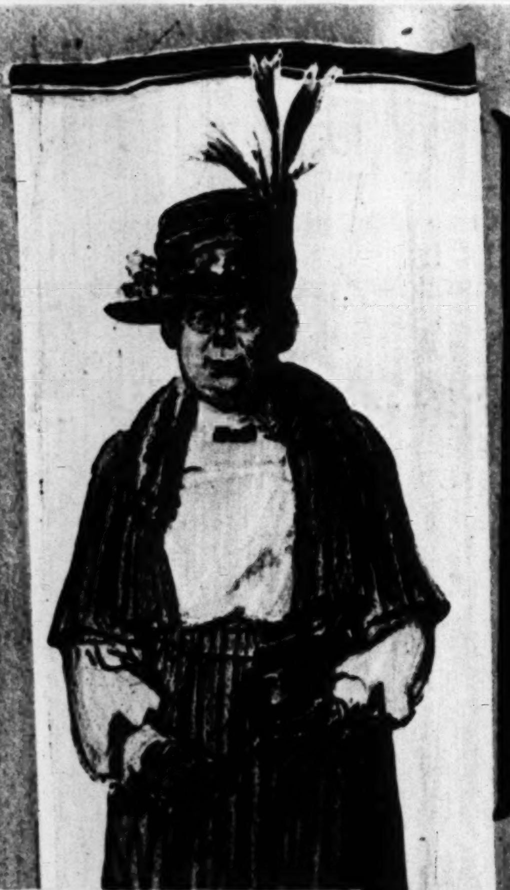
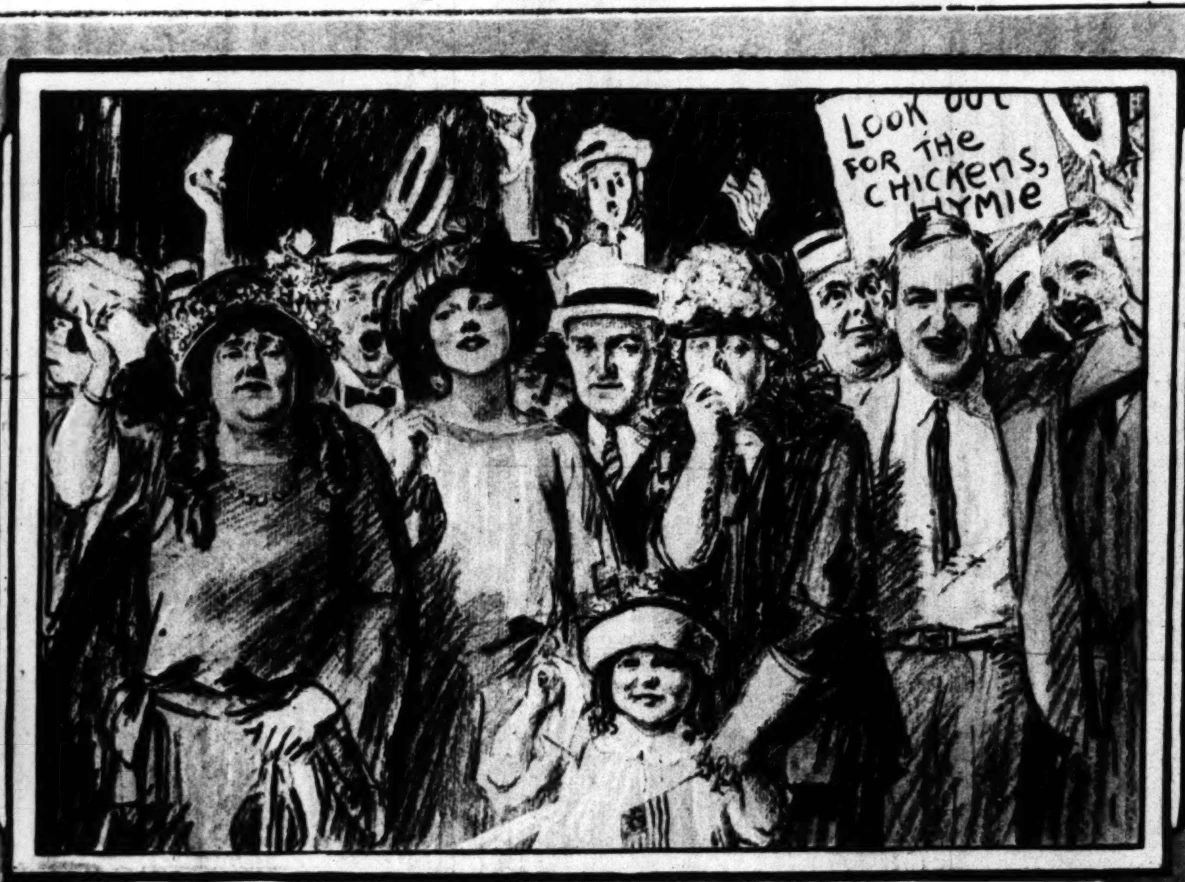
SUMMER SPORTS

By W. E. Hill

© 1922 by The Chicago Tribune

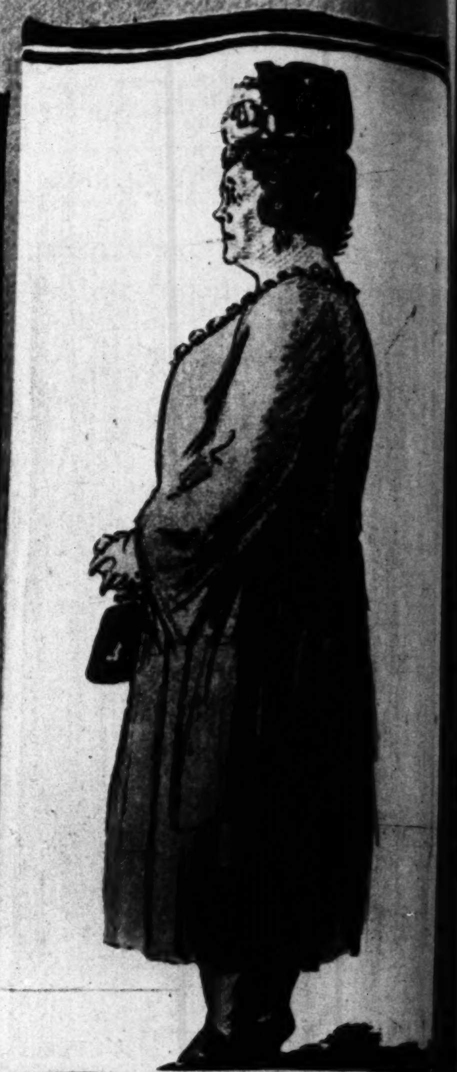


The porch party. Miss Wallabout is on her way to an afternoon euchre, or bridge maybe, at Mrs. Sam Gunter's. The front porch will be tastefully decorated with ferns and goldenrod, and if none of the guests are subject to hay fever, and a windstorm does not blow up, a good time will be had by all. That is, until the prizes are awarded. Then a great many of the ladies will feel done out of what should be theirs by rights.

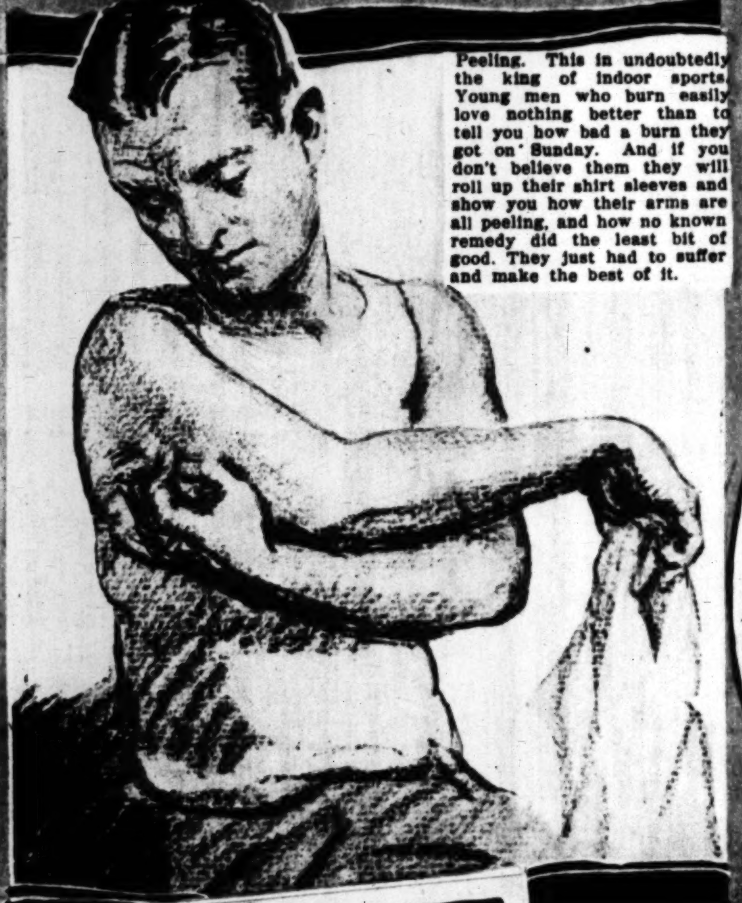


LOOK OUT FOR THE CHICKENS, HYMIE

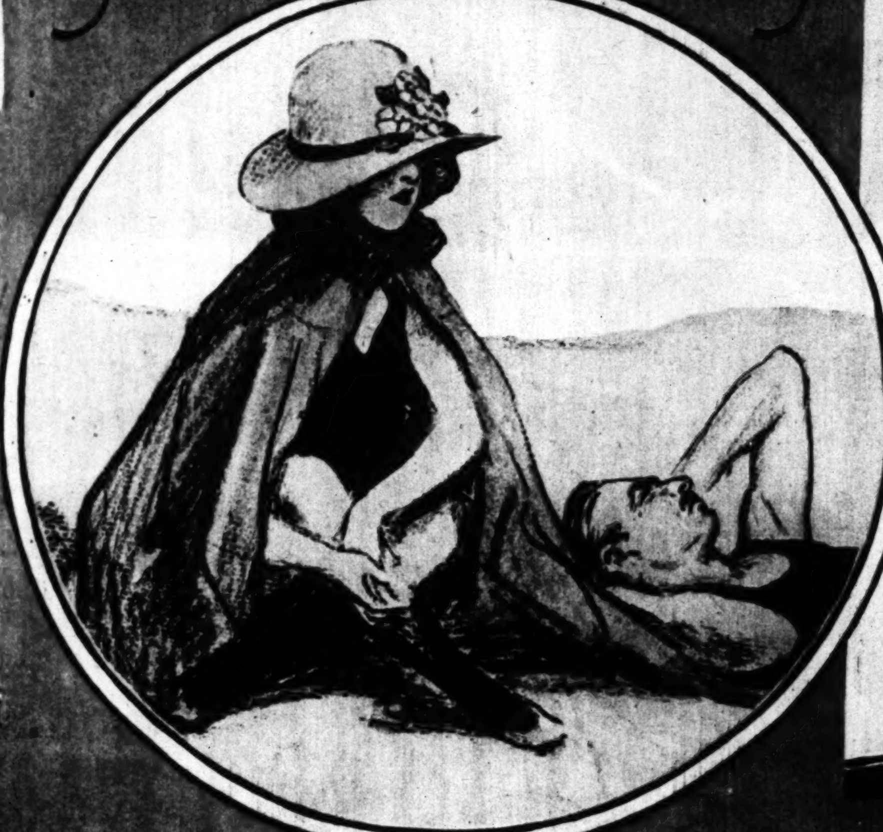
Seeing friends off to Europe is the next best thing to going one's self. It is, moreover, a bona fide American summer sport. (The gentlemen at the extreme right, the ones seeing Hymie off, are advising friend Hymie to "go easy with the soubrettes in Paree," and not to take any wooden nickels either there or anywhere else.) The elderly lady, standing next, has just been saying good-by to her married daughter. "Oh, May, I have the feeling I'll NEVER see you and Joe again!" was her parting sally. And no one in the crowd has forgotten to suggest that MAYBE it won't be so AWFULLY rough on the water. "You may not be so VERY seasick," they have said one and all.)



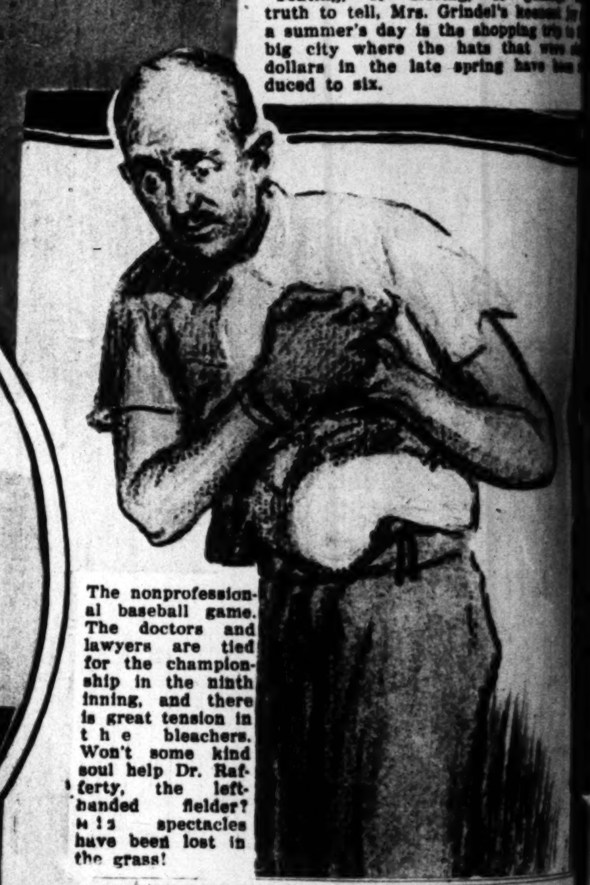
The summer sale. If you were to ask Mrs. Fred Grindel what summer sport she favored most she would, no doubt, say "boating," or "driving," or "golfing." But truth to tell, Mrs. Grindel's keenest joy on a summer's day is the shopping trip to the big city where the hats that were [illegible] dollars in the late spring have been reduced to six.



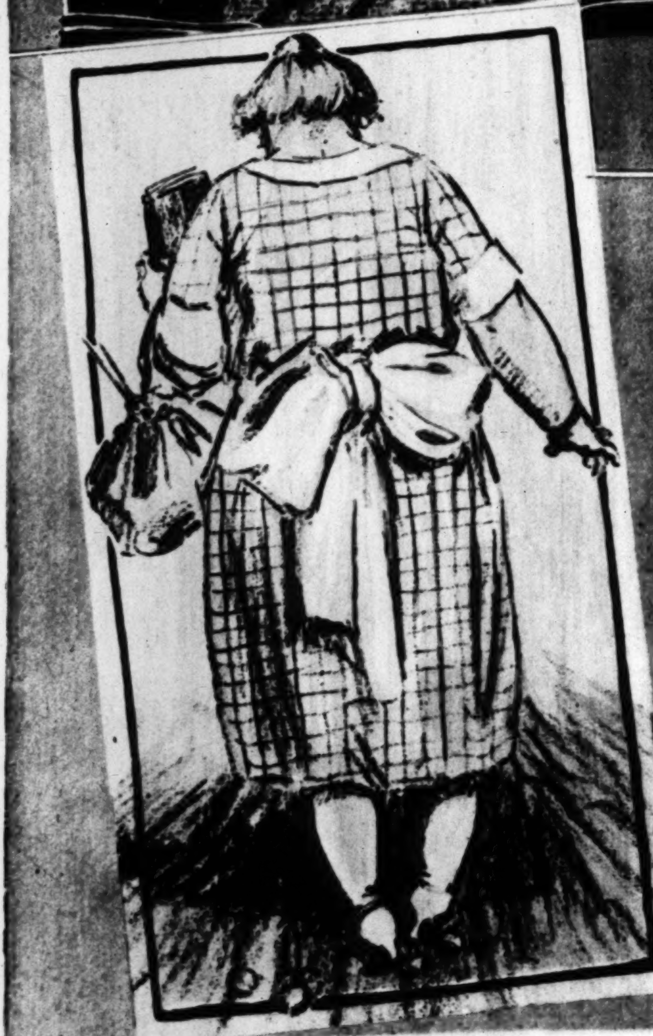
Peeling. This in undoubtedly the king of indoor sports. Young men who burn easily love nothing better than to tell you how bad a burn they got on Sunday. And if you don't believe them they will roll up their shirt sleeves and show you how their arms are all peeling, and how no known remedy did the least bit of good. They just had to suffer and make the best of it.



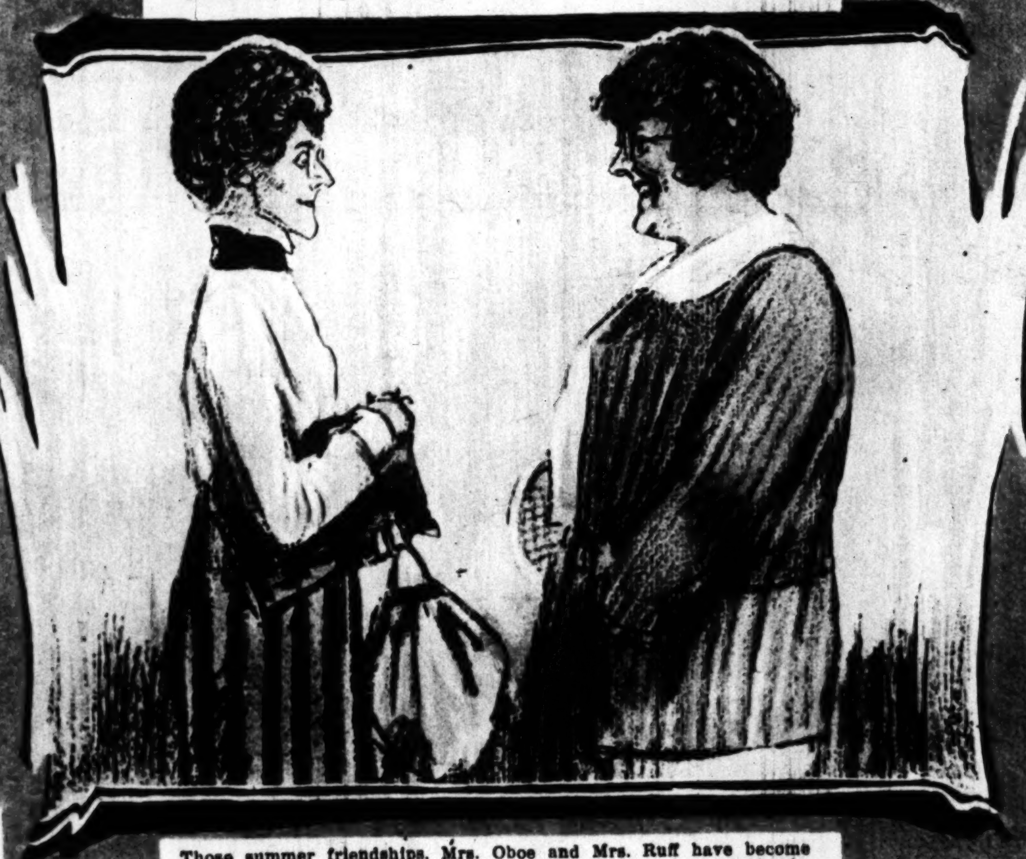
Getting the coat of tan. Also trying NOT to acquire one—it all depends on your type of beauty.



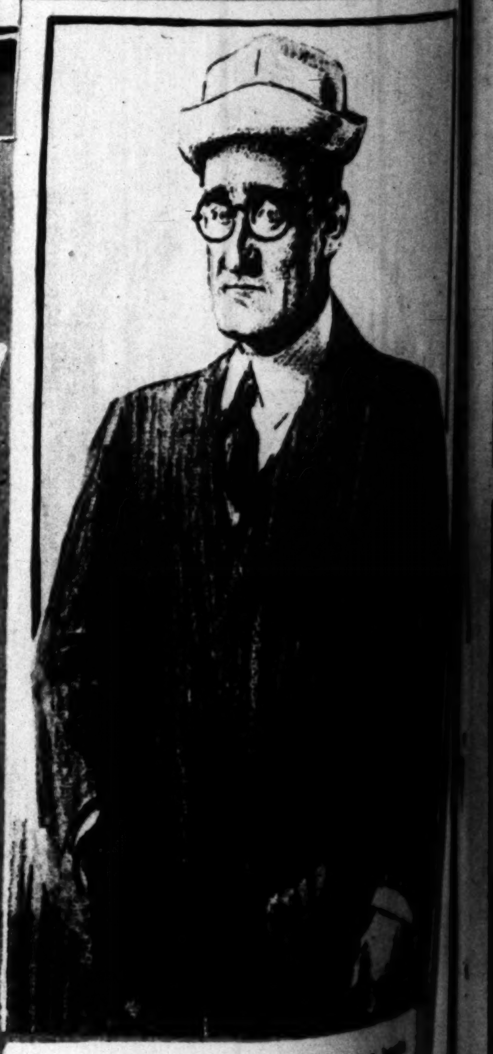
The nonprofessional baseball game. The doctors and lawyers are tied for the championship in the ninth inning, and there is great tension in the bleachers. Won't some kind soul help Dr. Rafferty, the left-handed fielder? His spectacles have been lost in the grass!



The nice long tramp over country roads. Jeanette is one of those sunlight blondes who wears yellow, to carry out the sunshiny effect. In her yellow and white gingham, Jeanette is starting out on a long walk. She has it all figured out that if she walks, say, five miles a day, the too, too solid flesh will melt away. But, oh, those country roads! They are full of nasty little stones that make even the stoutest ankle turn right over on one. After the first half mile Jeanette will come straight back to the hotel and join the bridge players.



Those summer friendships. Mrs. Oboe and Mrs. Ruff have become SUCH good friends. And their husbands have become the best of pals. During the month of August the Ruffs and the Oboes will be inseparable. The hotel wits will nickname them "the big four"—if the Ruffs and the Oboes haven't already thought of it—and Mrs. Ruff and Mrs. Oboe will make all sorts of chummy plans for the winter months. But when the summer vacations end it's a safe guess that Mr. and Mrs. Ruff will never see Mr. and Mrs. Oboe again.



Now is the time of year when most men begin to decide they don't look well in a plain straw hat. So they go and buy a panama, or a make-believe panama, that conforms to the lines of the face in question. And then they are all ready to be admired

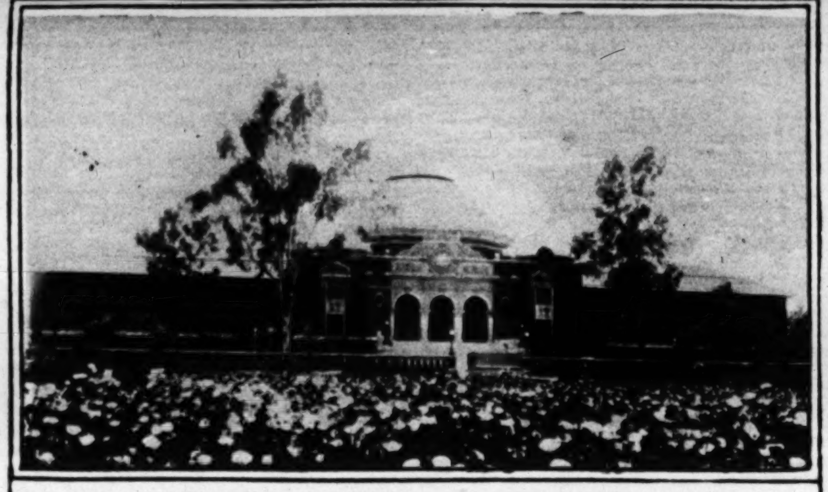
DOWN at Exposition Park, in Los Angeles, is the biggest educational flower show in California, and it is free to all. The California Association of Nurserymen is back of the display, which comes from all parts of the State. It is all friendly competition, though cash prizes are given in some classes.

For example, the Los Angeles Dahlia Society has offered a series of cash prizes, one for every class and color of dahlias, for the best novelties flowered in the park. The full south border of the big seven-acre sunken garden is given up to this trial plat; hundreds of plants of the latest and highest priced varieties from dealers in all parts of the United States are included.

We are not going to mention by name any Los Angeles exhibitors, for we Angelenos are noted for our modesty. But McRorie and MacLaren of San Francisco have fourteen species and varieties of heath, and who should produce better ones than a pair of Scotchmen? Walter B. Clarke of San Jose also has an extensive collection of flowering plants that is supposed to rival anything our own Southland can produce.



Poppies in front of County Museum, Exposition Park, Los Angeles.

Stocks in corner near State Armory, Exposition Park

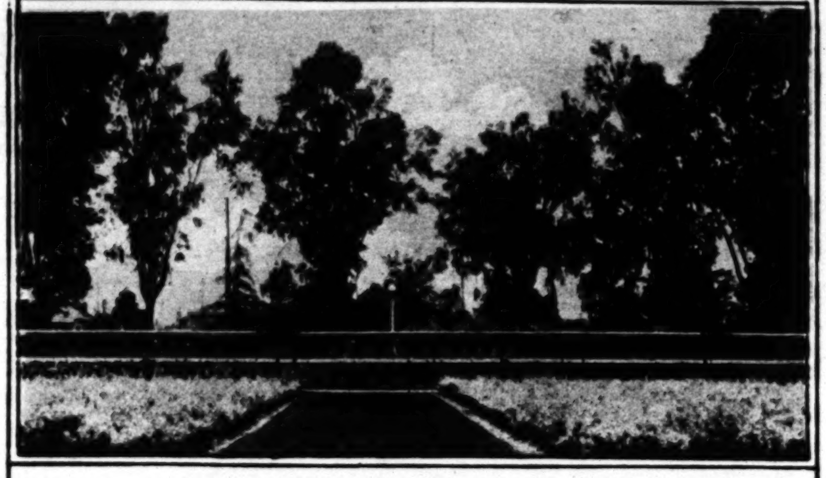
Georgeous field of poppies in Exposition Park gardens.

But of all to be seen nothing is of greater interest, more beautiful or more curious than the Waller collection of California poppies, really a marvel of the horticulturist's skillful breeding and selection. Beginning at white, they run to cream, to light yellow, yellow, dark yellow, oranges and on to bronzes, each in a bed by itself. Back to white we go and on to the same gradual and separated changes through pinks and reds to crimson. Again, from white to lavender and then comes the variegated strains and the double ones. How many have seen a double eschscholtzia? It is said there are twenty-four varieties, all developed at the seed farm at Guadaloupe.

There is one collection of sixteen asters, all in beds of one color, that is really a revelation even to those who know asters and these will be in bloom for some time to come. In another part there are twelve varieties of phlox, which make an unusual showing. In fact, there is not supposed to be anything "usual" in this seven-acre garden, but all novelties of the highest order, the latest if the best. Seven named varieties of petunias, grown from cuttings, are displayed by the Shepherd Seed Company of Ventura. Then there are beds of poppies, snapdragons, gladiolus, Seven River daisy, candytuft, stocks, cosmideums, and somethings with new and strange names. A constant seasonal change is always taking place, so flower lovers should visit this garden at least once each month. The "Wee Hoos 'Mong the Heather," first prize at the mammoth flower show last fall, is still there, used as a tool house, the gigantic lily basin is still aglow with aquatic beauties, native from Siberia to the tropics. The garden is under the supervision of O. W. Howard and he or some of his assistants will be pleased to answer questions, though every bed is adequately labeled with all necessary information, on official cards issued by the State society back of the exhibit. Go ye and learn.

Help the Wild Flowers

Among the many groups of persons coming into close contact with the important problem of wild-flower preservation, none has perhaps a greater chance to help in its solution than have the teachers in the schools. The development of the public opinion of the next generation is in their hands, and the awakening of a wide ideal of the conservation of our natural forms will be, or should be, one of the corner stones of this public opinion. While the needs of conserving our forests and our wild life are more generally obvious than the need of protecting some of our vanishing wild flowers, they are not more real. Every teacher can take as a text the little bunches of blossoms, with their little wilted faces pressed closely together, which favorite pupils bring to their desks, rivaling one another as to who can gather the biggest bunch; they can explain the characteristics of the different kinds of flowers, because of which certain kinds should never be picked at all, while others may be picked more freely; they can tell why some kinds of flowers are never seen any more near large cities and are seen less plentifully even in some country districts; they can warn children not to destroy whole beds to make the bunches that ought never to be sold to the motorists. There is so much to tell, and much to learn about conditions in every locality.



Beds of blossom interset with panels of green lawn.

Watch and Spray

Owing to a heavy fall of rain well extended into springtime, the present season has been favorable to the development of nearly all plant diseases and insect pests. While you pray and fast that you may have immortal life, the insects prey and hold fast that their days may be many in the land of their forefathers; and he who rescues his trees and plants from their depredations must watch and spray. For when these are worst we note thereof and in normal years we do not prepare for the worst to come. Even the potato growers complain that pests and diseases are unusually rampant this season, due somewhat to a lack of precautionary measures. They lay it mostly to the weather, but much of it could have been avoided. There is still less excuse for the garden owner, who is about his premises every day. Will you fight this year or will you face an increased and increasing host next year?

In the Wilds

Fields, canyon sides, hilltops and mountain peaks are still aglow with flower on herb, bush and tree. Many native plants have not yet blossomed, some will not for yet another three months. Always our landscapes present floral attractions. It is well to visit the wilds and study the wild flowers. He who knows them well will learn to discriminate between rare plants and those common everywhere. Then shall we be on the road to protection of the former. For he who knows flowers well will love them, even though he has to learn to do so. Like a charmingly pretty girl, they are irresistible. The Chloroform and other affect plants as they will not destroy rare beauties.

Almond-Peach Hybrids

We have received a half-dozen pits from a large agricultural school in Mexico which are claimed to be from a cross between an almond and a peach. The strain of seeds sent is one wherein the fruit resembles the peach parent in amount of edible pulp, but has a peculiar flavor, pleasing yet unlike that of any peach. It is said they come fairly true to type from seeds. We shall plant them and await the outcome with pleasureable anticipation.

There were 35[illegible],839 fewer meat animals slaughtered in the United States under Federal inspection during April this year than last, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. To this shortage sheep and lambs contributed 301,511, hogs, 57,533; cattle, 577, and calves, 218.

The "Hows" and "How Nots" in Truck Farm Irrigation.

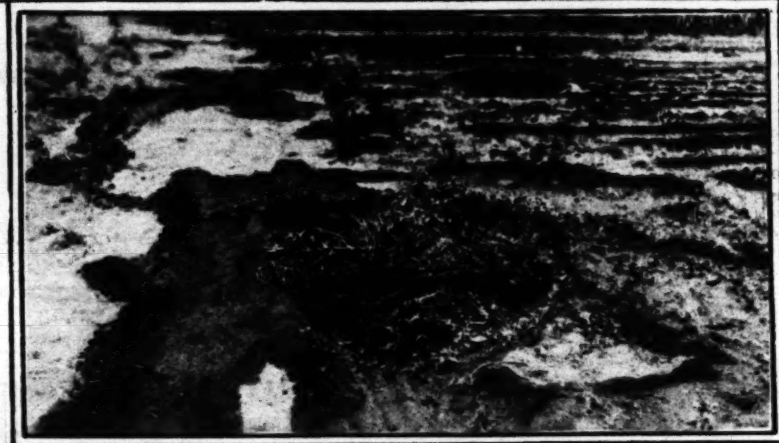
Irrigating land for summer plowing—flooding system.

Irrigating land for summer plowing—furrow method.



Improper preparation of ground makes for this kind of wasteful and ineffective water spread.

Irrigation of sweet corn by furrow method.

Over-irrigation in strawberry field.

The furrow along end of field takes care of overflow

ON THE truck farms of the East, rain is fundamental, and irrigation incidental. Though many of the large vegetable gardeners have installed plants as an insurance against drought, there is still some question as to whether they are practical, from a financial standpoint, on the smaller places. But here in the West both on the large and small truck farms, we are dependent upon irrigation. Before purchasing or leasing vegetable lands the source of the water supply should be investigated thoroughly. That supply must be ample, and unfailing, for water is the determining factor in the rapid growth of vegetables. Though we are thankful for the periodic contributions from the heavens, and should make the most of them when they are sent, they cannot be depended upon to mature our vegetable crops.

The maintenance of the agricultural supremacy of Los Angeles county rests upon the development and conservation of its natural sources of water supply. The scarcity and high cost of irrigating water in many of the old vegetable-growing districts has caused a serious lapse in production, and the development of new districts, which is imperative, has been held back for the same reasons. Much has been written concerning conservation, by men better informed on the subject than I am. The reforestation of our mountain slopes is all-important. The utilization of sewage effluent has been suggested (and I believe, should be adopted.) But there is still another step that is too little touched upon, and that is the conservation of irrigation water by the proper methods of applying it.

Irrigating is a science. We have too many incompetent, unthinking and wasteful farmers, and farm hands. I am convinced that 50 per cent of the irrigating water used in some of the well-known vegetable-growing sections of the county goes for no purpose at all, unless it be to damage the crop, and the soil. It is very lucky that many of our vegetable-growing sections are fool-proof in that there is no alkali present, and that the soil is light in texture. An eminent irrigation engineer connected with the Department of Agriculture has stated that 10 per cent of the irrigated lands of the United States have been rendered well nigh worthless through waterlogging of the soil, and the rise of alkali, and that a large part of the remainder is being injured from these same causes.

A good example of such wasteful practices can be observed in the operations of the so-called "corporation farmers," large interests who obtain control of many acres of valuable agricultural lands, install extensive irrigation systems, later subdividing and selling off their holdings in small parcels to inexperienced buyers. This article is not a discussion on the propriety of such enterprises, which, as a rule, are presumably entered into in good faith; but some of the methods of operation should be condemned from an agricultural point of view.

So that the land will appear well in the eyes of the prospective buyer, the company decides to plant it to crops, for a season, before placing the acreage on the market. The farming operations are directed from the city office; the ranch superintendent is a former filing clerk, and as to the hands, there may not be a real farmer in the bunch. They think if they make holes in the ground and throw in the seeds, they can leave the rest to Mother Nature. With such an idea, they are put in full charge of several hundred of God's own acres, and with a plentiful supply of water, set about trying to make them produce. Large heads of water, in charge of incompetent irrigators, are turned onto lands prepared in a haphazard manner. The result is too painful to describe. Sufficient to say, they seldom produce a crop worthy of the land, and that the best reason for their failure is generally over-irrigation and lack of cultivation. That they fail is not always to be regretted, as is the waste of water, and in some cases, the damaging of the land.

Along with our other agricultural lessons we must learn to increase the duty of water, by applying it intelligently. It cannot be learned in a day, nor, thoroughly, in a year. I know that of all farming operations, irrigating was the hardest for me to master. My father (who has often been cited in these columns as a paragon among vegetable gardeners) could "irrigate an acre with two quarts of water," and he often reminded me, quite sarcastically, that as an irrigator, I would make a good lock tender on the Panama Canal. Still, I worried along, until my efforts won his approbation.

A truck farmer must be an experienced irrigator, for in vegetable gardening water is an item of expense to be carefully considered; and its distribution must be handled in the most efficient manner possible to obtain the necessary results, with a minimum of waste. Water, in some districts, costs as high as $1.50 an hour, and then the trucker only gets what is left of sixty inches, after it has traveled a half mile in open ditches. The preparation of the land for irrigating is the most important step in increasing the duty of water, for if the land is in good shape to receive it, then the subsequent application is only a matter of judging levels and timing the flow, combined with some good hard labor in keeping the head in check. It would be impossible, in this article, to cover the whole subject of irrigation in the vegetable gardens, in any but a general way. There are so many details to be mastered, so many tricks that can only be learned in the doing, that an attempt to put them

New Zealand Utility Poultry Standards

A MISLEADING MARKET TERM. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

FEW PEOPLE have done more in the way of exploiting and developing higher egg production than have the poultry breeders and research workers in Australia. They were the pioneers in the introduction of egg-laying contests, which they have carried on with phenomenal results for the last twenty-five years, not with one breed or variety of domesticated fowl, but with nearly all the most popular sorts. Naturally in the evolution and development of strains with high record performances certain things have been learned, which govern the physical condition of the birds entered and the quality of the eggs produced. It was soon learned that mere numbers was only one factor to be considered; size, quality, character of shell and shape are features that now command consideration; likewise the physical condition of the hens entered is considered, type, weight, eyes and face and characteristics tending to show stamina and good performances, all being taken into account. Beginnings have been made in devising a standard for utility classes, which has augmented progress and facilitated the holding of egg contests along practical lines. In 1920, the New Zealand Department of Agriculture issued a treatise on utility standards covering the Anconas, Leghorns, Minorcas, Orpingtons, Rocks, Rhode Island Reds, Wyandottes and Indian Runner ducks. The scale covers 100 points, and in each variety twenty-five points are allowed for type and carriage. From the Feathered World we learn that there have been utility classes at the shows in New Zealand, and during twenty years they have learned something of what they want and have seen the need of a utility standard. In the Anconas and Leghorns weights are given for hens at five and one-half pounds and pullets four and one-half pounds, while in the Minorca the weight is increased one-half pound in each case. There is no mention made of capacity, but the eyes and face are given twelve, while tightness and density of feather make fourteen points. Squirrel tail is considered a serious defect, a point on which some breeders will disagree. In the four heavy breeds the points are all alike—type and carriage, twenty-five; eyes and face, twelve; closeness and density of feathers, sixteen, so that on the whole there is not much difference. There is a slight variation in the weights, viz., Orpingtons, hen, seven pounds, pullet, six pounds; Rocks, hen, seven and one-half pounds, pullet, five and one-half pounds; Rhode Island Reds, hen, six and one-half pounds, pullet, five and one-half pounds; Wyandottes, the same as the Rhode Island Reds. Throughout the whole of this standard there is the influence of the fancy bird, and the conference, in compiling the book, has tried to keep as near as possible to the type, shape and size demanded by English and American standards. All of which will interest American breeders from the fact that the Australians demand heavier and larger birds than is the general custom in America for certain varieties. This is forcibly brought out in the injunction that a specimen in any breed falling more than one pound below weight or weighing more than one and one-half pounds overweight shall be passed.

It is interesting to note the trend of practical poultry culture in Australia (where there seems to be a growing tendency to maintain size and vigor) in the light of the effort that is being made to increase the standard weights of Leghorns in this country. There are those who oppose this movement, but in the judgment of many experienced Leghorn men it should prevail. To put on a half pound more flesh on the Leghorn would certainly increase the meat value of the breed without in any way injuring its fine productive values.

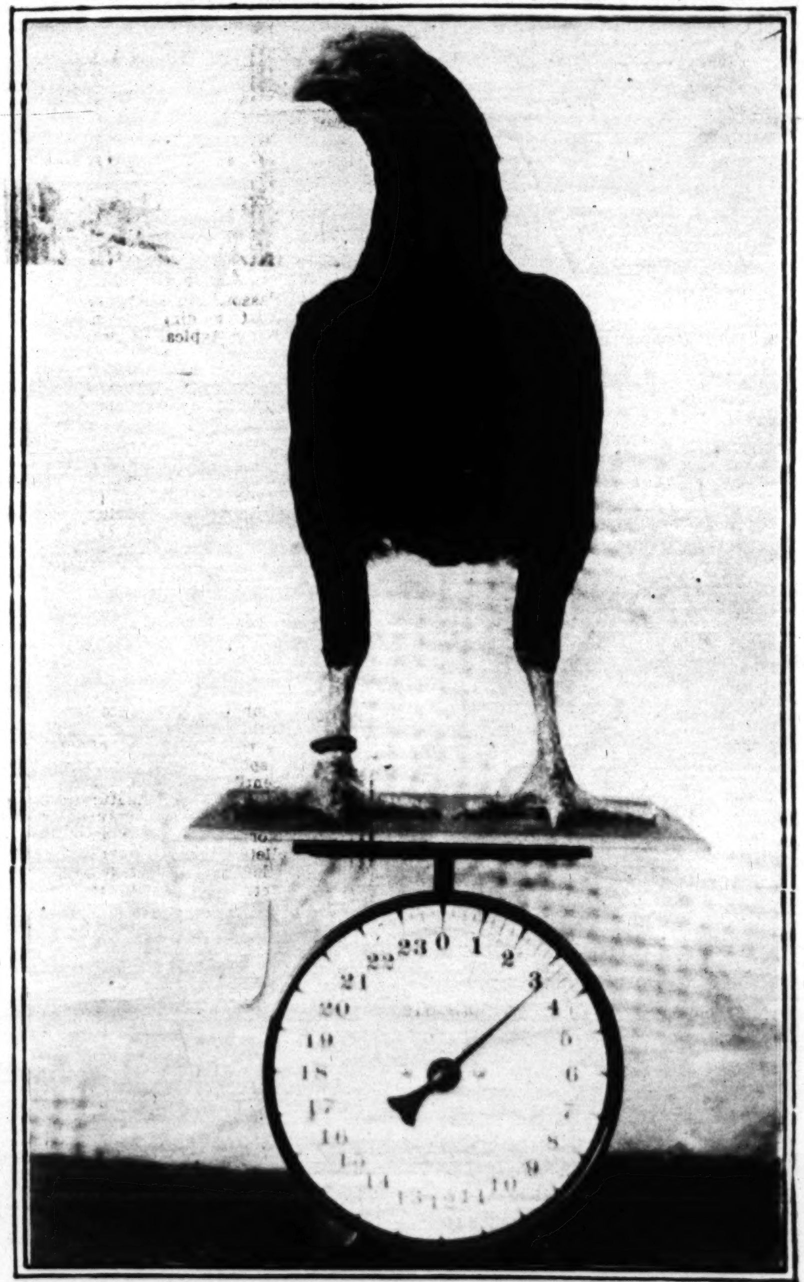
Another interesting factor in the New Zealand utility standard is the fact that it covers only one breed of water fowl, viz., the Indian Runner duck. Here again shape (type) is given twenty-five pounds, neck ten, eyes and beak fifteen, and weight not to exceed five and one-half pounds, nor less than three and one-half. We presume the Indian Runner's well-known capacity for egg production gave it this single recognition. In the standard for eggs, out of a total of 100, size of air cell small, almost nominal, count forty; weight, two ounces, twenty; texture of shell, fifteen; hence, there is not much allowance for remaining qualifications. Many readers will agree with the table poultry standard when it says, youthfulness and general quality count fifty-five, size fifteen, fineness of bone ten, appearance fifteen, and uniformity five.

Cornish as Broilers

The question is often asked: "What breed will produce nice plump broilers in the shortest possible time." While there is some difference of opinion on this subject, it is commonly known that chicks from healthy stock of some of the heavier breeds such as Brahmas, Orpingtons and Rocks will develop in weight to around two and one-half pounds in from ten to fourteen weeks, depending on kind of feed and care given, but for size of carcass and flavor of meat it is generally conceded that the Cornish as a table fowl is in a class by itself. We are picturing this week a Dark Cornish cockerel of wonderful development, weighing three and one-fourth pounds at the age of three months. It was bred by Clyde M. Hill, Los Angeles. It shows conclusively that the Cornish is in the front rank as a broiler.

A Misleading Term

People with long memories and who are accustomed to scan the market reports will recollect that about two years ago the term "Leghorn" came into use as signifying undersized hens and broilers. Naturally this is a reflection on the breed which creates a negative impression that Leghorn breeders resent. In this connection some of the leading produce men have adopted the word "unders," signifying that birds so classed are under size, and of course this would apply to all breeds and varieties that were under standard weight. As all informed people know, there are other breeds besides the Leghorns that are light in weight, and also strains of Leghorns that average with other breeds in weight; hence, the term as used in general market quotations is out of place and not in keeping with all the facts governing the situation. By substituting the word "unders" for a specific breed name, the equities in the case will be duly observed. This also brings up another thought, viz., has not excessive fecundity in the White Leghorn influenced size and stamina in the breed? The light weight bird, by reason of its wide prevalence, naturally resulted in the adoption of the term "Leghorn" for all undersized specimens irrespective of breed or variety. We confess to a liking for large birds, provided type and other markings are duly observed.



Twelve-weeks-old Dark Cornish cockerel weighing three and a quarter pounds. The bird was bred by Clyde M. Hill, Los Angeles.

Fleshing Poultry

Those who are not familiar with the magnitude and extent of the table poultry industry in England will be surprised to learn that there are single fattening plants with a capacity of 10,000 head at a time. The usual period is about two weeks of trough feeding and a like period for cramming. The favorite breeds are the Light and Red Sussex. Some five birds are generally grouped in a single coop or division, the same being elevated about three feet from the floor; the bottoms are slatted, so that soilage from the droppings is avoided. Young stock weighing from two to three pounds has the preference of fatteners, though cocks and hens are also handled. In England the birds are fed twice a day. A bird entering the fattening coops at two pounds should go out at about double that weight. In England but little attention is given the lighter breeds for meat products. As in this country, the White Leghorn for eggs is commanding attention, which throws on the market a certain volume of cockerels to be disposed of via the butcher shop. Experience has demonstrated, however, that they do not fatten as well and that the flesh is harder, dryer and of inferior quality. Allowing for the fact that in England most poultry finds its way to the dining table roasted, one can appreciate the criticism on the Mediterranean breeds for meat purposes. In the main, the exceptions to Leghorn carcass are well taken.

"Rations for Poultry Feeding in the Packing-house" is the title of a late bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture, which has a direct bearing on the subject under consideration. From it we learn that good results are obtained with quite a range of foodstuffs, which is fortunate, for it permits the feeder to adapt his selection to available stuffs in his local market. We further learn that a growing bird, such as a broiler or spring, requires a different ration than a mature hen, which changes most of her feed into fat. A simple ration of corn meal and buttermilk is about as good as any for hens. Broilers fed rations containing protein concentrates, such as peanut meal, cocoanut meal, soy-bean meal, or meat scrap, made appreciably better gains than those fed on corn meal and buttermilk.

Throughout fourteen-day feeding period broilers continue to gain well, which shows that this is not too long a feeding period. Springs grew very rapidly during the first eleven days, but not so rapidly, though still profitably, during the remaining three days. Roasters gained well during the first two four-day periods, but not so well the last six days. It was found that the practice of feeding hens only six to eight days is well founded. The dressing and chilling shrinkage of hens, however, was much less than in the case of broilers, springs and roasters.

Any of the ordinary cereal grains supply the necessary carbohydrates and fats. More care is needed in selecting feeds for protein, salts and vitamines. The proteins of the cereal grains are present in too small amounts and are of too poor quality to produce the best results in broilers and springs unless other protein concentrates are added. Milk and cereals make one of the most profitable rations as milk supplies mineral substances, vitamines and very valuable proteins. The results given in the bulletin show that peanut meal protein, as well as soy-bean meal protein, is especially valuable. The protein of buttermilk is especially valuable, and if used in sufficiently large amounts, produces very desirable results. Corn, wheat, oats and other grains lack such mineral substances as calcium, sodium and chlorine, which growing animals require. In the rations where buttermilk or skim milk is used, these ingredients are fairly well supplied. Milk also supplies vitamines. At present the milk available for poultry-fleshing purposes is largely buttermilk, fresh, condensed or powdered.

Blue Ointment for Insect Pests

A. R. D., Los Angeles, writes for information on the use of blue ointment on his fowls as a remedy against lice. This remedy is more or less in use, but requires a word of caution in its application, since otherwise it may result in mercurial poisoning. In this connection we notice that the California Department of Agriculture offers the following remedies to rid fowls of infestations:

An ointment for this purpose has been found to possess advantages over a powder, as the former is more efficient and the effect more lasting than the latter. The ointment recommended by authorities is prepared and used as follows: Ammoniated mercurial ointment U.S.P. with a lard base instead of lanolin, as called for in the Pharmacopoeia. Blue ointment is said to be a little more effective in equal amounts, but at the same time it is more expensive. Of three pieces the size of a pea rub one under the vent and one under each wing. The operator is cautioned to rub the ointment well into the skin in order that there will be no lumps adhering to the feathers which may be picked off by the birds and thus produce mercurial poisoning.

In buying blue ointment be sure to tell your druggist the use you are putting it to. Unless properly prepared, it is apt to cause trouble.

The Australorps

What is an Australorp fowl? That certainly sounds like a new breed of chickens when in fact it is a coined word to distinguish the Australian breed Orpingtons from those of other strains. And really the Orpingtons of the Antipodes are entitled to the distinction, for they have been bred for productive qualities that place them on a par with the Leghorn for prolific egg production, 275 to 300-egg hens being not uncommon. So pronounced has been the success of Australian breeders with the breed, that importations of Australorps are being made into England, Canada and the United States. This again illustrates that good performances are not limited as to breeds and varieties, but are the direct result of proper mating and management. It is, indeed, a pleasure to know that a fowl which supplies a good carcass is also capable of shelling out the eggs with the best of the high producers of the so-called egg breeds.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION.

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY.

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Tractor Section is the only farm journal in the west printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

"Artificial Farming"

BACK East, where the skies accommodatingly cloud over at various times during the limited growing season and let down a saving fall of rain, they have a way of pitying the sections that are dependent upon irrigation for the water to make their crops grow. They forget, apparently, that some of the greatest civilizations in the world's history have been erected upon the basis of the same "artificial" kind of agriculture. It is not in any sense an accident, of course, that the most advanced regions of the globe today are for the most part situated in humid regions, for the tendency of races of men to settle in regions of natural rainfall is entirely understandable. It is a fact, however, that the crowding of land-hungry mankind from the pre-empted areas in which Nature's bounty makes for security onto the arid places, far from being the catastrophe that was within the memory of many now living believed to be inevitable, has actually proved a blessing. Just as mighty civilizations were builded by the ancient irrigators of the Euphrates, the Tigris and thè Nile, so today the mistakenly pitied people of the arid West and Southwest in this country are rearing a great and prosperous empire whose foundation is an agriculture dependent upon the ingenuity and industry of man in carrying water to lands that never receive enough rainfall to mature crops.

After all, it is merely a question of available water and in this respect the irrigators, under proper conditions, really have an advantage over their brethren who study the clouds for signs of rain. It does not always rain when rain is needed back in the humid sections and, the claims of the self-styled rainmakers to the contrary notwithstanding, there is no known way to compel the clouds to gather and let loose a saving downpour. Under a scientifically planned irrigation system, the grower has only to turn the necessary flow of water into his pipe lines or ditches whenever he needs it to bring his crops through to harvest. The water is his for the taking and continuously clear skies worry him not at all. It costs money, it is true, to harness the mountain streams and convey them by gravity to agricultural lands, just as it costs money, and lots of it, to drill wells to underground streams and reservoirs and to pump water to fields and orchards; but the large and superior crops to be had through the dependable irrigation method justify the expense. The irrigator doesn't want to rub it in, but he feels that he has it all over the sky scrutinizer of the East and Middle West.

The very dependability of irrigation as compared with rainfall in the carrying on of agriculture has led to conditions that call for the soberest kind of consideration upon the part of the irrigators. There is a limit in almost every arid region to the amount of water available, or that can be made available, for the use of crops. As the one-time desert regions become more and more thickly settled, the water supply that can be developed is called upon to care for more and more land. There is a limiting factor, therefore, in irrigation, and that limiting factor is water supply. Here in the Southwest it is already becoming a problem of vital importance to obtain all the available supply and to make that supply do full duty. Fortunately, the potential supply of water is ample for almost limitless growth and development, providing proper conservation and distribution methods are followed. Our greatest problem and our most important work is to make the sources that we have provide the water so necessary to our continued development.

WATER CONSERVATION SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA'S BIGGEST PROBLEM

IT IS generally recognized that the future development, as well as the past and present prosperity of Southern California, is indissolubly associated with agricultural development. Southern California today, in the minds of the easterner and in the eyes of the world at large, stands for the highest type of horticultural development in the United States, and perhaps in the entire world. While destined to tremendously important industrial development, the great city of Los Angeles will always be largely maintained by the agricultural prosperity of its back country.

Without water, Southern California, with the exception of a few districts, would today be a desert waste. Therefore, the development and conservation of the water resources of Southern California constitute a problem which not only vitally concerns the farmer and fruit grower, but which should interest every other forward-looking citizen as well.

It is today generally admitted that in its ability to make an intelligent use of irrigation water, Southern California stands high. Indeed, there are many who with reason contend that irrigation practice and science in the United States has here reached its highest development. Certain it is that Southern California is greatly indebted to the irrigation engineer.

Nowhere else in the world have water rights reached such a high commercial value, nor have the legal phases of the protection of water rights been so comprehensively outlined as in Southern California. With a market value of from $1000 to $1500 per inch existing for every inch of pumped water, and with gravity water worth from $1500 to $2500 per inch, the conservation of every possible water resource becomes a matter of millions of dollars and a problem of such importance as to constitute what is the leading issue of the day in the minds of thoughtful persons.

Nowhere else in the world has man given so much thought to developing new water supplies and to conserving what already exists. New and vast impounding reservoirs have been constructed, and more are either now in process of construction or under contemplation. Deep mountain tunnels have been dug to develop underground supplies. Vast conduits have been built, thé most notable of which is the Los Angeles Aqueduct, an extensive system consisting of open ditches, concrete-lined conduits and great steel pipes conducting 20,000 inches of water 233 miles from the Owens River Valley to a series of reservoirs supplying the city of Los Angeles and nearly 100,000 acres of valuable agricultural lands.

Nowhere else in the world has the use of pumped irrigation water reached so high a development as in Southern California. It is not uncommon for irrigation water to be raised several hundred feet. Indeed, large areas of important orchard lands are today irrigated by water which is lifted by booster pumps from 300 to 700 feet or more for delivery on the land.

PHASES OF PROBLEM

The problem of water conservation is naturally divided into several important phases. The first of these is the development of all available water supplies, and to this phase of the problem, again naturally, more attention has been devoted than to any other, since the present agricultural development has been conditioned upon the utilization of water supplies available. Prominent irrigation engineers contend that today, for the natural water supplies available, there are areas in Southern California that are overdeveloped and the data available indicate that in the main they are correct. The vast underground reservoirs which have for ages been filling up from winter rains are slowly but surely being depleted. Water tables in some of the older and more highly developed districts are year by year dropping, with a resultant necessity for frequent lowering of pumps.

This condition cannot permanently endure and must be rectified by more attention to the second important phase of the water conservation problem, which is the prevention of winter run-off. Today hundreds of thousands of acre feet of valuable water are annually discharged into the ocean during the winter months. Indeed, a considerable part of the winter precipitation runs uninterrupted into the Pacific Ocean. Much attention is now being devoted to the retardation of the winter run-off, by means of check dams placed in the mountain canyons and of great impounding reservoirs, not so much for the purpose of holding winter waters to be later distributed for irrigation purposes as for the slow charging of the underground reservoirs. Attention to this phase of the problem by many irrigation engineers is considered to be the most promising means for increasing water supplies available for irrigation purposes.

Characteristic examples of projects of this type are the Arroyo Seco dam, near Pasadena, which is primarily intended for the impounding of flood waters so that they may slowly soak into the underground reservoirs, the San Dimas Canyon dam, and the proposed San Gabriel reservoir.

In several parts of Southern California, notably at the mouth of the San Antonio Canyon and Lytle Creek, and at the head of the Santa Ana River, systems for spreading flood waters over porous cones have been devised whereby surplus flood waters, instead of rushing madly down the river channels into the ocean, are divided up and spread over large areas of porous soils and permitted to soak in slowly, filling up the underground reservoirs.

Much important work is still to be done, however, in the way of providing means for filling up the underground reservoirs. Indeed, the announced platform of the water conservation committee of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, as well as that of several other similar organizations in other parts of the Southland, is the fullest utilization of reservoir sites and open porous delta cones for the catch-

The Drainage Problem and Its Solution.

Thousands of acres of potentially valuable Southern California lands are growing salt grass crops like that pictured and large areas have turned to "alkali spots" due to failure to provide drainage along with irrigation facilities. The inset shows a drainage system under construction in south Los Angeles county.

DRAINAGE A VITAL FEATURE OF WATER CONSERVATION PROBLEM

BY ROBERT W. HODGSON, Los Angeles County Farm Adviser.

NEXT in importance to and an essential part of any comprehensive program for the conservation of the water resources of Southern California is drainage. To develop, impound and utilize water supplies for delivery upon agricultural areas as a supplement to nature's own allotment is the task of the irrigation engineer, and it is a task of no mean proportions in arid Southern California. That a high order of engineering talent has been applied here is evident in the everywhere recognized fact that irrigation development and technique have in the Southland reached their most perfect fruition.

To free valuable agricultural lands of surplus supplies of irrigation water, thereby correcting an even more unnatural condition than is occasioned by the application of water to naturally dry soils, is in no less degree a task for the keenest engineering minds of the country. Unfortunately, however, there is a distinct disposition and tendency to underestimate the difficulties besetting the work of the drainage engineer. Unwillingness to recognise the importance of correct engineering in drainage, in fact, has resulted in more drainage project failures than all other causes combined—failures so costly as to have seriously delayed the solution of a problem that is recognized by eminent agricultural authorities as second to none.

Let us see how important drainage is to the agricultural prosperity of Southern California. A few figures may be in order. Exclusive of the Imperial Valley, where drainage is now regarded as the most vital problem of the day (as evidenced in the recent passage of a huge bond issue to be largely expended for this purpose,) it is conservatively estimated that there are in this section 125,000 acres of land once valuable, or which could easily have been made productive, but which today are practically worthless for farming on account of failure to provide drainage. The past twenty years have witnessed the passing out of agricultural production of tens of thousands of acres of what were a few years ago profitable orchards or truck farms. Just as certainly the next twenty years will witness the same kind of funeral march unless time be taken by the forelock and prevention measures provided.

For with increasing areas coming in under irrigation on the higher-up slopes, there comes an inevitable rise in the water table on the lower down areas, with a resultant waterlogging and the ultimate passing of good lands into uselessness and idleness. Each year witnesses the writing-off of land values due to water-logging and alkalinity, an economic loss which, being largely preventable, becomes positively criminal in the light of our rapid increase in population and the resultant necessity of a constant increase in agricultural production for the maintenance of a favorable scale of food prices and living costs. Fifty thousand acres of potentially productive agricultural lands in Los Angeles county, richest county agriculturally in the United States, and equally important areas in Ventura, Orange, San Bernardino and River-

POULTRYMEN TO MEET AT POMONA PARK

A special meeting for poultrymen of Southern California will be held at Ganesha Park, Pomona, on Friday, August 4, under the auspices of the poultrymen's department of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau and the agricultural extension service.

The purpose of this meeting is to give the board of directors of the Southern California farm bureau egg-laying contest an opportunity to present to poultrymen their plans for the experimental feeding work, which it is planned to conduct at the egg-laying contest grounds this coming year. An outline of this work has already been prepared in detail, but it is desired to secure the approval of poultrymen before putting it into effect. The work as outlined to date, includes experimental work on various milk products and different types of green feeding lare ranch will be devoted to the raising of registered Hereford heifers and cows, over 300 registered calves having been branded on the property last year. Plans for the coming year include a large increase in the number of stock on the ranch shipped from other ranches of the company in Arizona and Mexico. The company has also leased the Clayton field near Corcoran, which will be used as a pasture in which to raise beef stock for outside and local markets. The Green Cattle Company is one of the largest producers of pure-bred animals here, and the announcement of its releasing large acreages near Tulare to continue on an even larger scale than heretofore means much to that section.

Stevenot, prize-winning Belgian stallion, owned by the Bowers Live Stock Company of Tulare, has been sold to the Bishop Belgian Breeders' Association of Bishop, Cal., according to reports of the company's officials.

Manager C. R. Thomas of the Pacific Pure-bred Sales Company says that of the thirty-six Guernsey cows and heifers he is to sell at Riverside on August 4 for L. D. Smith, about twenty-five are in milk, most of the others being bred and several of them being heavy in calf. Many of the cows, he says, are heavy milkers, having made as high as two and a half pounds of fat per day. Of the bulls offered he states, two are now old enough for herd service. Two are yet too young for service. Six heifers too young to be bred are incuded in the offering.

Golden Eminent's Fairy Girl 449980, owned by H. G. Gross, Eureka, is the new yearling champion Jersey of California. In 362 days she produced 9195 pounds milk [illegible] at one year and ten months of age. On this record she wins a silver medal, having carried calf 264 days during test. Her sire is Raleigh's Fairy Boy 9th, 113835, a noted Register of Merit sire, and her dam is Olds' Golden Eminent 297226.

The H. G. Ranch of the Santa Ynez Valley has been improved by Harry Gantz, the owner, by the addition of a modern electric power and lighting plant. The interests of the ranch are centralized in a herd of eighty-four fine Ayrshires, and the milking of the herd and the separation of the cream requires a dependable power plant, Mr. Gantz has found. He uses milking machines and finds them profitable and convenient.

The International Live-stock Exposition of Chicago announces an additional class to be added to the carlot show of hogs to be held the first week in December. The carlot classes by weights will be 150 to 200 pounds, 200 to 250 pounds, 250 to 300 pounds and 300 to 350 pounds. The prizes offered by the international are open to all breeds, grades and crosses. In order to increase the interest in this show and to bring out more carlots of Berkshires, the American Berkshire Association, Springfield, Ill., is offering $2 for every dollar of international prize money where the winning loads are Berkshires or grade Berkshires. With this added money the grand champion carload, if Berkshires, will win over $1000 in prize money. The Berkshire breed has won this prize eight times since the International was started in 1900. Hampshires have won five times in the same period and Poland-Chinas four times.

Anoakia Pontiac Beets 2d, a daughter of King Korndyke Pontiac 20th, has recently completed a 365-day record of 1151.2 pounds from 27,567.1 pounds milk at Santa Anita Rancho, Santa Ana, Cal.

The report of prize winners in the production lists of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America for the year ending March 31, 1922, discloses the fact that in a list of approximately 3000 herds, totaling about 17,000 cows, the largest amount of prize money won by any herd went to the Bridgford Holstein Company, Patterson, Cal., with a total of $447.25. This herd won ten first prizes in the various divisions, the largest number of first prizes going to daughters of the famous Bridgford sire, King Segis Alcartra Prilly.

Sir Veeman Korndyke Pontiac, noted sire of producing heifers, lately had a nice addition of five to his list of A.R.O. daughters in Frank M. Helm's big herd at Corcoran. Helm Tueble Fayne Veeman, at 2 years, 6 months, made 23.19 pounds butter from 405.4 pounds milk in seven days and 94.50 pounds butter from 1850 pounds milk in thirty days; Helm Veeman Scioto Girl, at 7 years and 11 months, made 21.44 pounds butter from 426.5 pounds milk in seven days; Helm Goshen Veeman, at 3 years [illegible] pounds milk; Helm Pontiac Bess Veeman, at 2 years and 7 months, made 18.85 pounds butter from 384 pounds milk in seven days, and Helm Queen Veeman, at 2 years, 10 months, made 17.89 pounds butter from 361.1 pounds milk in seven days. All of these are first calf heifers and the fine average 20.75 pounds butter in 7 days.

Early Moulters

kept separate from the good birds, but were housed and fed in exactly the same way for the six months following the culling.

There were 3695 birds used in this particular project, and 2179 of them were selected as No. 1 hens. The other 1516 were culls. During the six months from July 1 to November 30, the selected birds averaged 55 eggs per hen, while the culls only averaged 36.7 eggs per hen. This showed an increase of 18.3 eggs per hen in favor of the selected birds. The value of this increase, based on prices received by the producer for these eggs during this period, was 75 cents per bird in favor of the selected hens. It must be remembered that the costs for keeping both types of hens were the same. Some poultrymen have argued that during some of the months the culls would lay more than the selected birds, but such was not the case in this project, as the selected birds outlayed the culls from one to six and one-half eggs per month throughout the six months of the experiment. This project should conclusively prove to the poultryman that it will pay him to cull his birds carefully, and that it will not pay him to keep his culls over with the hope of securing a large number of eggs from them during the fall months.

A Good Producer.

R. B. Easson, university extension poultry specialist, holding late moulting hen selected for typical indications of laying ability.

In the recent series of meetings, Mr. Easson spoke of another project which he has recently instituted, on the production of eggs from early-maturing pullets. If against that of late-maturing pullets. If satisfactory methods could be devised to cull pullets, it would eliminate to a large degree the necessity of keeping over many unproductive hens until the end of their first year's production. In this project, which was started in July, 1921, 1171 pullets that had been hatched in the spring were used. Four hundred and ninety-three of these were well developed, and showed up as early-maturing pullets, while the remaining 678 were slow in their development and were, therefore, late-maturing pullets. These birds were kept separate, but housed and fed in exactly the same way for the five months between August 1 and December 31. The early-maturing pullets produced an average of 48.5 eggs per bird, while the late-maturing pullets produced an average of 24.4 eggs per bird, a gain of 24.1 eggs per bird in favor of the early-maturing pullets. Current prices for pullet eggs showed a resultant increase in value of 84 cents for the eggs from the early-maturing pullet, in excess of the value of the eggs produced by the late-maturing pullet. While this project indicates a very marked increase in production in favor of early-maturing pullets, Mr. Easson did not recommend the disposing of all late-maturing pullets, but he did recommend that late-maturing pullets should be kept separate from early pullets, where they could be given a greater opportunity for development than they would have if left with the early-maturing birds. Mr. Easson also recommended that some pullets be taken out, particularly those of low vitality and those which were very backward in development, as the results of this experiment would indicate that it would not be profitable to keep this type of birds.

The series of meetings just held was one of the most satisfactory ever held in the county, both from point of attendance and of the interest shown in the arguments presented.

A circular on culling, which has just been prepared by Mr. Easson, can be secured from the office of the Farm Adviser.

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

SANTA MARIA.—Irrigation of the Santa Maria Valley was the topic discussed at the last meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, and a committee was appointed to investigate this important project. The crops of the valley have thus far been raised without irrigation, with loss during dry seasons. Engineer McGregor of the Union Sugar Company, stated at the meeting that much larger crops of sugar beets could be secured through irrigation.

WILL MARKET 'CANTS

HUNTINGTON PARK.—Alberto Juarez, a truck farmer near here, has commenced to harvest thirty-six acres of Tip Top cantaloupes, planted on the various potential factory sites, and grown without irrigation. At his headquarters, at Forty-ninth and Santa Fe, Mr. Juarez is erecting a large roadside stand, where he will dispose of a large share of his crop at retail prices. The first picking, made recently, were claimed by him to be the first local cantaloupes of the season.

ADD TO CAPACITY

BEAUMONT.—The Beaumont Fruit Growers' Association has started building a 50x100-foot addition to its packing-house, which, when finished, will double its present capacity for handling fruit. The association was reorganized in the spring and the membership increased in a short time to such an extent that the old building was seen to be entirely too small for the amount of fruit to be handled this year. In the "windup" about 175 tons of cherries were handled through the packing-house this season. Cots, peaches, pears and some early apples are coming along in small lots.

RELEASE MORE APHYCUS

LA HABRA.—About 200,000 aphycus gnats have been released in citrus groves of the La Habra region from the insectary of the La Habra Citrus Association recently. M. J. Pickering of the association says that the insects have already killed a vast quantity of scale on trees where they have been liberated. Where the scale is not bad, the insects are making a complete clean-up. Mr. Pickering says it is likely that fumigation will be reduced by the aphycus.

CODDLING MOTH FOUND

CARPINTERIA.—Prof. H. J. Quayle of the citrus experiment station has found the coddling moth in several walnut groves of the Carpinteria Valley, and has advised growers to take drastic measures in reducing the infestation. So far the trouble is confined to a few groves, but Prof. Quayle emphasized the dangers of spreading the moth to other groves. The treatment to be employed before harvest consists in dusting. All sacks used in harvesting will be treated by the steam method.

ARIZONA CANTALOUPES

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—Shipments of cantaloupes from the Salt River Valley started in carload lots early in July, the first carloads going to Denver and New York. C. E. Schultz, market service representatives of the Federal Department of Agriculture, is on the job, distributing market information to shippers. The season is about two weeks late here, but conditions are favorable for a profitable season for the cantaloupe growers, now that Imperial Valley shipments have practically stopped, and the Rocky Ford crop of Colorado has not yet begun to move.

POULTRY CULLING SHOWN

TUCSON.—Prof. R. B. Thompson of the poultry husbandry division of the State university has been giving series of poultry culling demonstrations throughout the agricultural sections. H. C. Heard, county agent of Maricopa county, has co-operated with Prof. Thompson in demonstrations given in the Salt River Valley.

BETTER BERRIES

VAN NUYS.—Activities of the Van Nuys Berry Growers' Association are this summer centered on procuring better berry varieties for growers. Several years of experience in berry culture has shown growers that certain berries are not adapted to this region, and these will be culled out [illegible] adapted. Among the strawberries the [illegible] Banner seems to give most promise, but some growers favor the [illegible] and Progressive. Max [illegible] has had great success with the [illegible] berries. Some of the plants are very large, measuring eighteen inches high and three feet in circumference.

WAGES OF FRUIT WORKERS

OWENSMOUTH.—Members of the California Prune and Apricot Growers of this district agreed on the following scale of pay for workers in harvesting apricots and peaches: Picking apricots, 10 to 15 cents per field box; picking peaches, 6 to 9 cents per field box. For pitting, workers are being paid 15 to 17 cents per box, and orchard and field workers are paid 35 to 40 cents per hour without board.

WEED CONTROL MEETING

FULLERTON.—The first of a series of weed control field demonstrations to be conducted by the agricultural extension service was held at Greenville on July 7, at Sam Manderschied's place. Here a test plot for eradicating Centaurea weed with carbon bisulphide was observed. The Centaurea is a comparatively new weed in Orange county, but is one of the most pernicious since its introduction in alfalfa seed, having a deep underground root system and seeding freely. The carbon bisulphide method was shown to be partially successful.

CHERRY POSSIBILITIES

LOMPOC.—The cherry crop of Lompoc Valley has been harvested. The center of the harvest has been on the W. H. Schuyler ranch, where some twenty-four acres has been set out to cherries. Success of this industry has now awakened the valley land owners to the fact that the cherry can be successfully grown there, and the coming year will see extensive increase of acreage to cherry orchards. In all there are around 150 acres to cherries in the Lompoc section, the larger part being new orchards.

HARVESTING MUSTARD

SANTA BARBARA.—The mustard crop in Lompoc Valley is now being harvested. A larger acreage than was seeded last year has been set out to the crop this year, though the crop is not by any means up to normal in size, owing to market conditions during the past few seasons, and the larger attraction to growers in the bean industry. This season has seen a considerable acreage in the San Julian ranch country sown to mustard. Most of the commercial mustard seed of the country is raised in Lompoc Valley.

VENTURA FAIR PLANS

VENTURA.—It is declared that there will be over $1,000,000 worth of agricultural, industrial and live-stock exhibits at the Ventura County Fair this year. The event will be staged October 5, 6, 7 and 8 at Seaside Park. As Santa Barbara will have no fair this year, horse owners of that district will probably enter their fine stock in the local event. Members of the Southern California Horse Show Association are also expected to exhibit. There will be a big rodeo and other features.

SPRAY DEMONSTRATION

RIALTO.—To determine the value of various sprays and dusts on citrus pests, a spraying demonstration was held on a test plot at the Shulte grove on Sycamore street July 11. Ten days later the growers gathered to inspect the kill of pests and the effect on the trees of the insecticide. The work was done under the supervision of Horticultural Inspector S. J. Bolser, and the material was furnished by spray companies.

SUCCESSFUL SEASON

YUCAIPA.—The most successful cherry season in the history of the Yucaipa district has been ended and it is estimated that the total returns to the growers of the valley alone have been about $30,000. There has been more than sixty tons of fruit on the young trees of the valley, and Cherrycroft orchards had a crop of fair size. It is estimated that in the whole district, including Yucaipa and Greenspot orchards, there were probably more than a hundred tons of fruit marketed. The prices ranged around 15 cents per pound for black cherries and about 12½ cents a pound for canning cherries. The Royal Anns, the Lamberts and the Bings were the last to be handled and they proved to be about the choicest fruit of the season, especially the Bings, which were large and of exceptional quality this year. The weather was excellent and the cherries ripened slowly so that they could be handled and absorbed by the market without any overproduction at certain times as happens in some years during a long continued hot spell.

Olive knot has caused the most serious loss in olive groves.

KELP PLANT AGAIN IS MAKING POTASH

SUMMERLAND.—The kelp products plant, which was built and operated by the Federal Department of Agriculture during and immediately after the war, and which was sold to Rodney Benson of Santa Barbara, was opened again last week after being idle for many months. Mr. Benson has completely overhauled the plant and has almost doubled its capacity. A better grade of potash than that imported from Germany, and kelpchar, a carbon used extensively in the citrus products industries of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, will be produced in greater quantity than before, he says. Kelpchar is asserted to be an ideal purifying agent, and may be adopted by the various sugar companies of Southern California.

The potash produced normally is chloride of potash, and has a wide application in agricultural and manufacturing industries. Being potash which is gathered from a sea plant, it is termed vegetable potash, which is most acceptable to plants, it is asserted.

Enormous kelp beds stretch from Point Conception to the Mexican border in California, and these fields are growing, asserts Mr. Benson. There is raw material enough to support ten kelp plants like that at Summerland, he says. The kelp grows back to where it was ninety days after being cut, yielding four crops ayear, as little kelp is cut in the winter months.

Where the kelp is brought in from the sea by the kelp cutters, it is hoisted by means of power derricks and huge automatic forks to a big hopper, where it is chopped into lengths ranging from one to three feet, thence being carried on a chain conveyor the length of the wharf to a storage bin, where bucket conveyors pick it up and distribute it to primary dryers. These dryers are steel cylinders twenty-five feet long and six feet in diameter, with oil-burning furnaces at one end. Hot air from the furnaces is driven against the wet kelp and it moves through the cylinders against the air blast. It is then carried to the retorts, where it is subjected to a process called "destructive distillation," which carries off certain chemicals in the plants. The residuum in the form of kelpchar is taken from the bottom of the retorts and conveyed to electrical furnaces and then to vacuum washers. This process separates other marketable chemicals from the charcoal, which is put through further purifying and refining processes and then finally dehydrated and sacked for market as potash.

GRAPE PRICES MOUNT

SACRAMENTO.—Yolo county vineyardists are holding off for record prices for their grapes, being offered $125 per ton and better. It is reported independent buyers in this and Solano counties are closing contracts at from $200 to $225 per ton for some varieties.

EARLY MOULTERS UNPROFITABLE, SAYS POULTRY CULLING EXPERT

BY G. E. GORDON.
Assistant Farm Adviser, Los Angeles County.

THE recent series of poultry culling demonstrations conducted by R. B. Easson, extension poultry specialist of the University of California, co-operating with G. E. Gordon, assistant farm adviser, Los Angeles county, and held under the auspices of the poultrymen's department of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, attracted an attendance of almost 1000 poultrymen. As a result of these meetings, approximately 200,000 hens will be culled this summer, according to estimates gathered at the meetings. Demonstrations similar in character have been held throughout the State for several years, and poultrymen are now practicing culling quite consistently, with very marked results.

The Outward Signs.

G. E. Gordon, assistant farm adviser of Los Angeles county, holding (on left) good layer with large red comb and "bleached-out" shanks, beak, ear lobes and shin, and (right) poor layer with shrunken comb and yellow pigment of body prominent.

The months of June, July, August and September are all satisfactory for culling. Some birds are beginning to go into their annual moult at this season of the year, while others will not moult until late in the summer or in the fall. The moulting of a bird at this time of year would indicate that she is a poor layer, as a check of moulting records with trapnesting records has shown that the birds that begin their annual moult early take much longer to go through it than do those birds which do not begin to moult until late. But early moulting alone should not be depended upon to designate culls in the poultry flock, as there are other characteristics which will show up at the same time as the moult, and which can be used to check up on the early moulters.

CHECKING METHODS

With the yellow-skinned and yellow-legged breeds, it is very easy to check the pigmentation tests with the moulting. The White Leghorn, which breed predominates in Southern California, has yellow skin, yellow shanks, yellow beak and ear lobes. When a White Leghorn hen begins laying heavily, she draws upon this yellow pigment in the body to produce the yellow color in the yolks of the eggs. Therefore, birds which have been laying very heavily will be rather pale in the shanks, beak, ear lobes and skin. Even though a bird has "laid out" most of the color in her body, she will begin to regain color in the parts named within a week or two after she stops laying. We therefore find that when a bird is in the moult, she almost invariably has the yellow color in the parts of her body mentioned.

Another good check on these characteristics taken note of in culling, is the body capacity. When a hen is in good condition and is laying heavily, she is consuming relatively large quantities of food, resulting in the enlargement of her body capacity. The manufacture of eggs also requires considerable space, which results in further enlarging this capacity. We therefore find that hens in good laying condition have a spread of four or five fingers' space between the keel bone and the pelvic bones, while there is often two or three fingers' space between the pelvic bones. These bones should be flexible, and the pelvic bones may be reduced to a hen quits laying eggs the abdomen shrivels and becomes hard and inflexible, and the distance between the pelvic bones is often reduced to the space of one finger, while the distance between the keel bone and th pelvic bones may be reduced to two fingers' space or less. It is found that these different characteristics check up very closely. That is, when a hen is in the heavy moult, she almost invariably has considerable yellow color in her shanks, beak, ear lobes and skin, and her abdomen is shriveled up and is inflexible, while the pelvic bones are hard.

Body Capacity Test.

Right—Laying hen with full, soft and flexible abdomen measuring four fingers. Left—Cull with contracted and hard abdomen measuring two fingers.

The comb and wattles are indications of the blood circulation of the hen. When a hen is laying heavily, she naturally has a good blood circulation, which results in the comb being large, full, bright red and waxy. When she ceases to lay, and the blood circulation decreases, the comb and wattles shrivel and lose their brightness, and often are somewhat scaly in appearance. All these characteristics, when used together, are found to be very reliable in the culling of hens.

A hen may be thrown out of condition temporarily by digestive disorders or other troubles, which might result in her ap- [illegible] to be a cull in some respects. In this case, however, a hen seldom shows all of the above-mentioned characteristics of a cull. Whenever there is any doubt, it is usually desirable to give the hen the benefit and leave her in the flock, and if she is a cull she will show more marked indications of being unprofitable within a very short time.

INTERESTING TESTS

The argument is often advanced by a number of poultrymen that the birds which moult early are ready to begin laying early in the fall, at the time when the late moulters are not producing and also at the time when eggs are high. This argument is usually advanced by men who think it desirable to keep their culls for the above-mentioned reasons, and there may be some cases where this practice has proven satisfactory. On the average, however, this practice has not been found to be desirable, as experiments conducted at various egg-laying contests have shown that the early moulting hen was almost invariably the low producer for the year. This argument has been advanced many times, so last year Mr. Easson secured the co-operation of several poultrymen in this State in keeping the culls, as well as the selected birds, from the time they were culled until the first of January, to check up on their production. The culls were, of course,

[illegible] 500 sacks an acre are [illegible] of onions which were interplanted this year on the J. P. Scott vineyard, near Delano. The onions are of the Brown Australian variety and are reported to be unusually large. The yield was heaviest in the heavy soil. Mr. Scott figures that it has cost him about 50 cents a sack to bring them to harvest and that it will cost an additional 50 cents a sack for harvest, trucking and loading on the cars. Quotations now are about $2.50 a sack. The fields were planted last December and the success of Mr. Scott's experiment is attracting much attention from ranchers in this section.

BIDDY DOES HER DUTY

VAN NUYS.—R. P. McGhan, who has a ranch on East Van Owen street, has a White Leghorn hen that is in the laying business on a large scale. She is a consistent producer of large eggs, but last week went herself one better by laying an egg weighing four and one-half ounces, and which was eight and one-half inches around the long way and seven inches the other way.

IMPERIAL VALLEY WILL TACKLE DRAINAGE PROBLEM IN EARNEST

BY A. W. SWANSON.

EL CENTRO.—The directors of the Imperial irrigation district have in hand two gigantic propositions that call for early action. One of these is the purchase and absorption of the fourteen mutual water companies; the other is the construction of a drainage system for the district. Bonds to the amount of $7,500,000 were recently approved for these two purposes. The vote was heavy, showing that the people were much interested in both propositions. The purchase of the mutual water companies will entail an expenditure of $5,000,000, the balance, $2,500,000, will be used for drainage.

A "Bucyrus" Dredge at Work in Imperial Valley.

As soon as practicable, work upon both projects will be commenced. Already much of the detail work of the absorption proceedings has been done. All the mutual companies, except Nos. 3, 4 and 8, have voted on the question and acceded to the general agreement submitted some time ago, which contemplated payment for water stock on a basis of $10 per share and for canals and equipment on a basis of what they were worth. It is believed the companies that have not so far agreed to absorption will speedily do so and, thus leave a clear field for settlement of the whole matter. When the money is all in hand from the sale of the bonds, there will be left little to do except for the district to pay over the amounts agreed upon, and for the mutuals to prorate it among their members on a basis of a specific amount per share for each share of water stock owned.

Ray S. Carberry, chief engineer of the district, and D. W. Murphy, consulting engineer, will have active charge of planning and constructing the system. The latter has been employed by the government on similar work and is considered an expert along this line. Extensive borings, to determine the water levels, have been made throughout the valley, covering every square mile of irrigated territory, and the situation has been and is being studied from every angle. There is planned a comprehensive drainage system that will take in the entire irrigated and irrigable area.

CANALS AND LATERALS

It is planned to construct several main drainage canals, which will traverse the entire length of the valley, and a system of laterals emptying into these. The main canals will be from ten to twenty feet in depth, according to the depth of the water table, with a width at the top of fifty feet and tapering to fifteen to twenty feet at the bottom.

In speaking of the equipment necessary for the proposed work, which will soon be gathered, an official of the district said that he believed the Bucyrus dredge, of the drag-line type, that has been used on protective work below the border, will be purchased. This dredge has been given a thorough test and is capable of moving better than 33,000 yards of dirt a month, said to be a world's record for this type of dredge. Four new Bucyruses will be needed, it is said, in addition to the present equipment.

As there is apparently a more crying need for drainage in some portions of the east side than anywhere else in the valley, it is believed the first work under the bond issue will be done in that district. Already some drainage canals have been built there under the district budget and they are reported to be very satisfactory. A canal sixteen miles long has just been completed and it is now carrying a four-foot head of brackish water seeped into it from adjoining land. This ditch parallels the east side high line canal, but is built some distance from it, and will be drained into the Alamo River. Engineers who have given the matter of drainage in the Imperial Valley close study declare the district is favorably situated in this regard on acount of the deep channels of the New and Alamo rivers, which form natural drainage outlets.

CAUSES OF TROUBLE

High water tables in nearly all parts of the valley are the result of two causes, say those who have given the matter study. One is the reckless use of water on the part of the individual irrigator; the other is seepage from the district's and water companies' main canals. The latter has been recognized by judicial decisions in several court cases where ranchers have sought to recover damages from the irrigation district for injury to land through seepage. There can be no doubt that a contributary cause to the present condition is carelessness in irrigating—using more water than necessary. Some ranchers, and these are usually renters, seem to [illegible] in planting, irrigating and harvesting, the question of cultivating being practically left out of the reckoning. So, periodically, the land is flooded, whether there is need for water or not. When the land is thus saturated, the surplus water finds its way down into the soil, accumulates there, to cause damage to crops and permanent injury to the land, unless it is removed by drainage.

In a pamphlet, "Agriculture in the Imperial Valley," issued in 1917, Walter E. Packard, then superintendent of the State experimental station at Meloland, calls attention to this subject as follows.

"Over-irrigating in every region is too often practiced, resulting, ultimately, in the rise of ground water, which may ruin the soil unless expensive drainage systems are established and maintained. The Alamo and New River channels form an excellent natural drainage outlet for Imperial Valley, but the existence of these channels must not create a feeling of safety which would result in carelessness in the use of water. This cannot be emphasized too much, for it is highly important that the people of this [illegible] district should profit by the experience of many older sections that have been ruined by seepage and overirrigation."

Some one has said that in order to make a success of farming in an irrigated country it is necessary to serve an apprenticeship at dry farming, the thought being that cultivation should go hand in hand with irrigation. When the Imperial Valley rancher has learned to conserve the moisture in his soil by repeated cultivation, as the Middle Western farmer has learned to cultivate his corn after every rainfall, thus producing a "dust blanket" that keeps the moisture where it will do the most good, he will raise larger crops, pay less for water and be in no danger of injurious water tables.

If, as is contended on all sides, seepage from the main canals is the principal cause for water-logged land, it would seem that cementing the main canals would help solve the problem. It would also save water and minimize the silt evil. It is understood this matter will engage the attention of the district at the proper time.

SANTA MARIA.—Irrigation of the Santa Maria Valley was the topic discussed at the last meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, and a committee was appointed to investigate this important project. The crops of the valley have thus far been raised without irrigation, with loss during dry seasons. Engineer McGregor of the Union Sugar Company, stated at the meeting that much larger crops of sugar beets could be secured through irrigation.

The Livestock Bulletin.

BY ROBERT T. LYANS.

The Southern California Pure-bred Livestock Association is attempting a comprehensive survey of the live-stock situation in the southern counties and a strong effort will be made to secure a complete and reliable census of the conditions relative to the number of beef and dairy cattle, hogs and sheep, present feeding conditions and local consumption demand. Southern California is supply only a comparatively small part of it's consumptive demands of beef, pork and mutton, and in every county there are undeveloped resources which can be and should be applied to increasing live-stock production. The chambers of commerce and farm bureaus in each county have been asked to assist the members of the association in each county in making the survey.

Plans for the raising of pure-bred Hereford cattle on even a larger scale than formerly have been announced by J. E. McCullough of Tulare, local manager for the Green Cattle Company, upon renewal of the company's lease on the 5000-acre Haack ranch, southeast of Tulare. The lease covers a long period of years, and was secured by C. E. Wiswold of Cananea, Mex., general manager of the company. The Tu-

GREAT INTEREST IN BOYS' CLUB WORK

SANTA BARBARA.—Boys' and girls' clubs for raising calves, poultry and beef stock are being organized throughout Santa Ynez Valley by the farm bureau centers under direction of County Farm Adviser D. T. Batchelder. One club is taking May calves through to the November season, and also will in the fall take up the breeding aspects of the farmer's work. Later dairy cows are to be included in the work of the clubs.

The poultry clubs will begin their activities July 29, and will handle a pullet-raising contest, later taking up an egg-laying competition, and during the spring will engage in a hatching contest.

A beef bull calf club will be organized during the fall, and at the close of its activities the beef raised will be sold at public auction. Boys and girls of Santa Ynez Valley are taking a lively interest in all these club activities, it is said.

CARE OF SHEEP WHEN ON UPLAND PASTURE

During the summer months, when dry land grazing areas are rather limited in the valleys, many sheepmen herd their sheep far up in the mountains where it is difficult to obtain veterinary services for sick animals. When sheep are herded in such out-of-the-way places it devolves upon the herdsman to administer emergency treatment with whatever suitable medicines may be available. For this reason sheepmen who take their bands into the mountains should familiarize themselves with the remedial virtues of common household remedies, such as salt, pepper, vinegar, ginger, soda, turpentine, etc.

There are comparatively few medicines used internally in the treatment of sheep diseases on account of the complex arrangement of the digestive system, which [illegible] cine internally to a sheep, it is [illegible] to exercise great precaution in preventing the ingredients from entering the lungs, thus producing mechanical pneumonia. In administering a drench to a sheep avoid setting the animal on its haunches. It is better to back it into a corner and with the head slightly elevated pour the medicine into the mouth slowly. Successful drenching of sheep with a bottle requires considerable skill and patience. A more satisfactory method of internal administration is that of using a dose syringe. The nozzle or a piece of rubber tubing attached thereto is inserted between the lips in the space between the back and front teeth and the medicine slowly injected into the mouth, thus affording sufficient time for the animal to swallow the medicine in small quantities.

GROWERS ARE SMILING

CRAFTON.—Orange growers are smiling again, for with the advent of warm weather, the little oranges are rapidly expanding into big ones. The weather for the last month has been just about right for growing and as a result the fruit, which had a late start, has almost caught up with itself and is of the size it should be at this time of the year. The weather has been right for growing because it has been between 85 and 95 most of the time. The trees are in wonderful condition; the new foliage that came after the freeze has turned the dark green color of the healthy orange tree and most growers say they will not have a great deal more pruning to do than in ordinary years. The packing-houses of the district are now finishing up the handling of the Valencia crop. Some of them are all through, and within a few weeks the houses will be in the hands of carpenters, who will make repairs and do other work necessary after a season of shipping.

Caterpillars readily succumb to arsenical sprays.

[illegible] "Hoes" and "Hoe Nots"

[illegible] However, we [illegible] a few warning signs of "danger-ous curves ahead" in an effort to help the novice help himself. So the writer will take it for granted that the prospective gardener has an adequate supply at his disposal, and that he is utilising one of the several means of distribution to his lands, that are in use in Southern California; and will cover only the preparation for, and application of water to the various vegetable crops.

There are two principal ways of applying water practiced on our truck farms—furrow irrigation and the open bed method of flooding. The former is used with such crops as sweet corn, potatoes, cabbage, cauliflower, string beans, tomatoes, peppers, and with root crops when the double row system of planting is practiced. Sometimes this method is utilised in preparing vegetable land for summer plowing. The latter method is used when preparing land for irrigation after the spring crop is off, so that it can be plowed for the fall planting, and when root crops and lettuce are grown in open beds.

In furrow irrigation, the proper preparation of the furrows means less work in applying the water. They should be made as even as possible, and no weeds, or refuse of any kind should be left to hinder the flow. On the smaller truck farms, the one-horse cultivator, with the various types of "listers" is used in preparing the furrows. The large farms, and orchards have riding cultivators, horse or tractor drawn, to prepare them.

Different crops require different types of furrows. That is getting things down to a fine point, but the logic of it can be shown in the case of preparing furrows for the irrigating of sweet corn. Corn is a shallow rooted crop, the roots spreading out not far beneath the surface of the soil. That is especially true of sweet corn, for it must be irrigated, and irrigation tends to bring the roots upward. Now, if we were to go down between the rows with a double lister, many of the roots would be cut, or damaged. So experienced growers draw a wide, shallow furrow for the water. Such furrows should also be made for peppers and eggplant. These furrows can be made by bolting a strip of galvanized iron between the last two shovels. After irrigating, wide furrows can be better cultivated if a rake is attached to the cultivator. This rake is a tool that originated in Southern California, and cannot be purchased. It is a product of the village blacksmith shop.

In preparing potatoes, cabbage, cauliflower and beans for irrigation, a lister can be used. It makes a V-shaped furrow, which carries the water very well. The cultivation and preparation for irrigating of these crops is accomplished in one operation, on most of the truck farms. The lister is attached to the cultivator, and the front shovels loosen the soil, while the lister leaves a furrow behind, through which the water is run, when it comes time for another application. Tomatoes are also irrigated by the furrow system. During the first stage of growth, furrows are run on each side of the vines, and changing with the growth. When the vines are mature, wide shallow furrows are used. The same procedure holds good with melons, if they are irrigated.

Making up double rows.

The furrow, as applied to the double row system, is more than a means of applying water to the plants. In an accompanying sketch, I have tried to show the desirability of such a system of planting, as especially pertaining to irrigation. Though not as economical of land, as the open bed, it is a much easier system to care for. It [illegible] are well made, and the subsequent cultivations, under such conditions, do far more good in conserving the moisture, and promoting root growth. When preparing the land for the double row system, furrows are drawn at the desired distance apart, and the water run through to firm them. Then they are cultivated, and the ridge between smoothed and planted. Subsequent irrigations are followed by the same sort of cultivations as are given potatoes and cauliflower, though they must be more carefully applied.

Flooding as a means of applying water is perhaps the most common of all methods. Some authorities hold this method to be wasteful, in that it does not insure a uniform distribution of water. As practiced on the truck farms of Southern California, this method gives very good results, and is still popular, especially in sections where the soil is light in texture. The Japanese gardeners, even in the West Adams district of Los Angeles, where the soil is heavy, plant their root crops in open beds, as wide as twenty-five feet. By such a system, they are able to intercrop and two or three kinds of vegetables are grown in the same bed. For instance, radishes and spinach are planted in rows, four inches apart. The radishes are off before the spinach is well along. There are several combinations practiced in that district, and large returns are realized from the acreage. Considering that both crops are supported by each application, it is also an economical irrigation practice.

Cauliflower and cabbage plants for the fall planting, are grown in open beds, for such culture promotes a compact, fibrous root growth, so necessary in the transplanting of these vegetables. Then, too, as the seeds are planted in midsummer, the seed bed dries out quickly, if made up after the double row system, and an even germination is not secured. The cauliflower grower knows what it means to have his plants delayed.

Just at this particular time of year, a great deal of flooding is being done in the vegetable-growing sections. The spring crop is off, and the growers are plowing for the fall planting. At the time this article will be printed, the cauliflower growers will have their early crop planted, and will be busy irrigating land for later plantings.

In flooding for summer plowing, most vegetable gardeners make up beds, varying in width as to the head of water available, and turn in the full head from the ditches. These beds are made up with the [illegible] smith shop, the "ridger." Although this implement does not make permanent ridges, they are good enough for one application. When the beds are made up for the planting of root crops, the ridges are thrown up by one or two rounds of the plow, and are more serviceable.

There are several little tricks that make flooding easier on the irrigator, and the application of the water more thorough. In the case of a field that has been previously planted to potatoes, it is a good idea to run over it with a hay rake, and haul off the vines. It takes but little time, and makes the work of the ridger more efficient. The old vines hinder the flow of the water, too, and cause the ridges to break, and the water to flow over. Then, if there is time, it pays to go through with the smooth harrow, before the water is applied, and level the beds, making the progress of the water through the beds more rapid. If the earth taps, set ever so far apart to hold the water back so it will flood the high places, are set in the proper position, they will help give a uniform distribution of water throughout the bed. The taps should be alternately placed along the bed, rather than directly opposite each other. If one side of the bed is high all the way through, then the taps should all be placed on the opposite side. The irrigator must watch his levels, for it saves a great deal of time and water. If possible, these taps should be made up before the water is turned into the field, for they can be made with greater care, when time

THOROUGH BREAKAGE OF GROUND AID TO EFFECTIVE WATER USE

BY ROBERT KILLEFER.

IN ONE of California's important valleys lies an old lake bed many miles in extent, barren as far as the eye can reach, save for a short growth of peculiar native grass which withers early in the summer. The average rainfall has been less than one inch a year in this area, isolated, as it is, by unusual geographical conditions unfavorable to moisture precipitation.

One spot in this great area, however, is a delight to the eye. The variety of vegetation which flourishes there is symbolic of man's persistent enterprise and the value of perhaps his greatest ally—water. This spot is the result of a few short years of effort by a farmer who purchased a full section of this ancient lake bed for a trifling sum per acre. He knew the soil was good, that plenty of the materials which comprise plant food were present and that the only problem standing in the way of his success was the lack of water to unlock the dormant power of growth within it. He set to work to reach water. An oil rig went down 1500 feet. At an expense of more than $9000 for the well, pump and engine, he obtained abundant water for his trees and vines whenever they might need it. Such an amount for a water well is quite an outlay, but its value is attested by the many productive acres which formerly were valueless.

We have learned much in recent years about the use of water; economical use, most advantageous methods of use—judged by their benefit to trees, vines and field crops. We used to believe that to scatter trickling streams over the surface was sufficient, but early decline of trees has taught us a costly lesson. Shallow methods of irrigation with the small surface streams have built up in many orchards a shallow, restricted root system. The hard stratum these roots try to penetrate generally is found less than eighteen inches below the sandy loam surface. Surface cultivation and frequent applications of water have helped to carry fine particles down several inches, much as when a bucket of pebbles is shaken or stirred with a stick, depositing the fine stuff at the bottom and leaving the remainder above, especially if water is poured over the whole. If the soil has any cementing properitles at all, this will build up what we call "irrigation-pan" and "plow-pan," and after a few years of the same treatment, we will find by digging down, studying the root system carefully as we go, that this hard, close grained, air-tight stratum which has formed prevents feed roots from reaching proper growth as deep as they would naturally go, and—worse still—prevents seepage of water to depths which can store it properly.

Water applied to the first twelve inches or two feet of soil has not much chance against the elements. Sun and wind take their portion, roots assist the drying process and we soon find it necessary to irrigate again. The roots remain near the surface, for they must work in the vicinity of moisture, where they can "drink" their food. Land is just as rich in dry seasons as in wet, but crop failures result in the former because plant foods are not in condition to be taken up by root bark. Water, key to the lock, is missing. Growers are learning that remarkable benefits to growth of trees and quality of fruit are gained by proper breakage of the hard lower strata. After such treatment, better streams of water can be applied, they sink much deeper, soil reservoirs are enlarged and this increased supply of water means a longer growing season, more sugar, greater tonnage. Deep storage of water in soil promotes deeper root growth and gets the feeders away from the surface where they are continually affected by the rapid changes of day and night temperatures, and are disturbed by cultivation, especially if the land is tilled by the improved cultivation implements which prepare a deep, rich, moisture-saving mulch.

Water, when it is properly applied to soil, is also of great assistance to fertilizers. It is ridiculous to apply expensive fertilizers on top of hard pan, or other "pans." Fertilizers, when they become properly soluble in soil are allowed advantageous seepage when the lower strata are properly broken. One of the best-posted authorities on the Coast declares that one of the two chief causes for early decline of citrus orchards is the difficulty for trees to feed normally, owing to improper application of fertilizers. Burial of fertilizers by the trench system is rapidly growing in popularity on this account. The trench is prepared by fitting to a deep subsoiler a standard furrower or "crowder" designed for this particular purpose. The fertilizer which is thus deposited deep and out of the way of cultivation tools, decomposes directly over the subsoil furrow and, when water is applied, it is of great assistance to decomposition and distribution, owing to the far-reaching cracks caused in the under soil by the subsoiler, often called the "baby earthquaker."

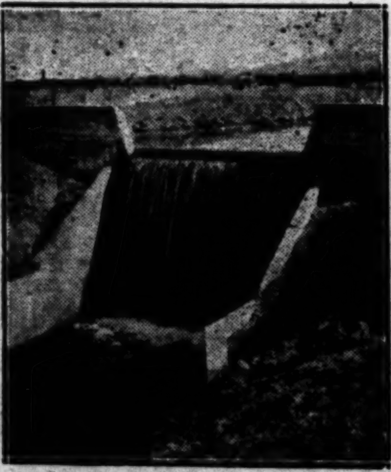
An interesting discovery is reported from the southern San Joaquin Valley with regard to the value of water in orchards as a frost preventive. It was the eastern custom in cold winters to put a tub of water in the cellar with the potatoes to prevent their freezing. The water was said to "give off its heat." Two growers in the Porterville district subsoiled their ground to great depth and filled the soil with a good irrigation previous to the spring freeze. A heavy rain also preceded the frost. These growers were surrounded by others which suffered heavily from damage by the frost which followed, but strange to relate—not an orange was condemned when the crop was harvested from the grove mentioned. The period of frost in this instance covered a week and ice froze each morning during that week in water standing in troughs. Apparently, the temperature of these orchards was not lowered enough by the cold atmosphere to injure their fruit, but if a great number of cold nights follow each other and the water in the subsoil gradually continues to lose heat each night, with little opportunity to recover it during the day, it is probable that the water will finally become so cold that it may be detrimental as a temperature modifier. Fortunately, our nights of extreme cold do not come in great numbers.

California is growing to be a greater user of water each year. Its uses and its many benefits—some, perhaps, not yet fully understood—are going to make our State even more productive than at present; new lands will be blessed by its benefits and greater supplies will be required.

If land is not good, we can use many measures to make it so, much as we have had to do to develop water. Good nursery stock, good care and cultivation, good pumps and good ditches are going to assist us to good yields, better profits. But there is also another essential—good co-operation among growers in packing, advertising and selling the fruits of their labor.

PROPER BELT DRIVE IMPORTANT FACTOR

There is perhaps no one way in which an irrigator will lose more power as applied to his pump than through faulty or carelessly applied belt arrangements. Belt drives are desirable for several reasons, chiefly that they provide for speed changes at a minimum expense over the use of direct connected units, especially with electric motor power. With gas and oil engines this point is often easily taken care of by changing of speed. However carefully the engine or motor is selected for its work the matter of driving the pump with a minimum belt slippage and wear and tear of the belt must be watched.



Weir for measuring water.

Recently many of the large water companies and private irrigators have demonstrated that close belt centers, with a resultant saving in belt costs and with proper idler pulleys well balanced and designed to give a greater arc of contact on both driving and driven pulleys, have saved power as well as belt replacements and repairs.

"The direct results of these idler installations," says an irrigation authority, "particularly where 100 and 160 horsepower natural gas engines are driving centrifugal pumps under high heads and continuous operation, have been satisfactory in maintaining a uniform tension on the belt under changing weather conditions, and have proven that, contrary to the common belief that an idler produces undue wear and strain, they overcome this almost en- [illegible] belt is neither too tight or too loose at any time.

"Actual records kept by means of revolution counters fixed to the machines show the maximum loss in transmission of power to be less than 1 per cent and a loss in revolutions between driver and driven pulleys of 15 to 20 per day, which naturally means the maximum of power efficiency."

THE SAN FERNANDO VALLEY HARVESTS

VAN NUYS.—The fruit and field crop harvest is now on in the San Fernando Valley, and during the next three months an enormous amount of money will be distributed to the growers and will help build up the business industries located in Van Nuys, its center and mart. Potatoes were first to move this season, and hundreds of cars are being shipped. Now the fruit season is on, and the choicest grades of apricots and peaches are coming to the Van Nuys canneries by the tons, and are being shipped out in carload lots to other points. The bean crop is very promising, and the pods setting on the vines indicate a record-breaking crop. While the orchard and field crops are turning in their revenue, the dairies, with their thousands of cows, and the poultry industry with its 300,000 hens, keep on adding their certain return.

DECIDUOUS GROWERS LAUNCH NEW BODY

The Deciduous Fruit Distributors of Southern California, a nonprofit corporation for the marketing of apples, pears and other deciduous fruits, and modeled on the same plan as the California Fruit Growers' Exchange and Mutual Orange Distributors of the citrus industry, was launched at the final meeting of the organization committee of sixteen at the offices of the San Bernardino Farm Bureau on July 8.

The new organization, which hopes eventually to control 90 per cent of the apple and pear acreage and later to branch out to include apricots and other deciduous fruits, starts its operations with a membership controlling in excess of 2000 acres of apple orchards. The organization is wholly a grower-owner one and its purpose is to handle the Southern California apples and pears under grower control at every step of the line until they are finally sold. The policies and deliberations of the organization are to be conducted always with the interests of the grower paramount, its sponsors declare. Many of the policies which will be established cannot be forecast this early in the game, they declare. For instance, some policy will have to be adopted regarding brands for advertising and standardization purposes.

It is hoped that the newly formed organization will do for the deciduous growers what the large co-operative organizations have already done for the citrus growers of the State.

The directorate elected is headed by R. B. Peters of Devore, who will be acting president and general manager. The initial directorate includes five associations and four directors-at-large. The associations are: Costa Mesa Fruit Growers' Association, Chino Valley Apple Growers' Association, Yucaipa Apple Growers' Association, Independent Fruit Growers' Inc., of Yucaipa and J. H. Strait & Co. of Redlands. The directors-at-large are: John B. Hundley, Yucaipa; E. H. Richardson, Adelanto; Isaac Ford, Oak Glen, and Mr. Peters of Devore.

Temporary offices of the organization are to be maintained at the farm bureau headquarters in San Bernardino. The permanent location will be announced later and will probably be in Los Angeles.

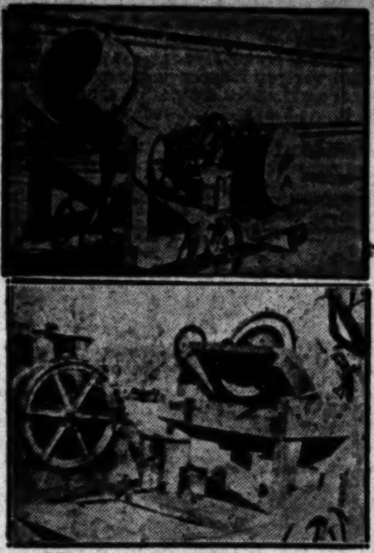
ORANGE PRICES SOARING

RIALTO.—A. D. Little sold his orange crop to a local house for 6½ cents per pound on the trees, for all grades and sizes. The fine quality of much of Rialto citrus fruit this year, combined with the general scarcity, has resulted in phenomenal prices to growers of the Rialto district throughout the season.

HOME-MADE CONCRETE MIXER FOR THE FARM

BY E. J. [illegible]

The accompanying illustrations show a simple method of constructing a concrete mixer from miscellaneous parts, that, with the exception of the engine, can be found on almost any ranch. The mixer is no more or less than a barrel carrying a band a third of the way from the top which forms a track for two rollers. The interior of the barrel has four or six baffles of different lengths, which are fastened directly to the stays and to the bottom.



Home-made concrete mixer.

A ring gear of an automobile may be used, including the drive pinion and shaft. This is mounted in common with the barrel and is driven by a chain sproket wheel from a belt pulley and clutch, which, in turn, is connected with the engine. The barrel is set in a frame and so pivoted that it can be dumped without stopping the engine. This always allows the mixed aggregate to leave the barrel freely. It is very desirable to have the equipment mounted on a small truck so that it can be easily transported to different places around the farm.

The potato is the greatest carrier of nematodes.

The California fruit crops last year brought $236,955,000.

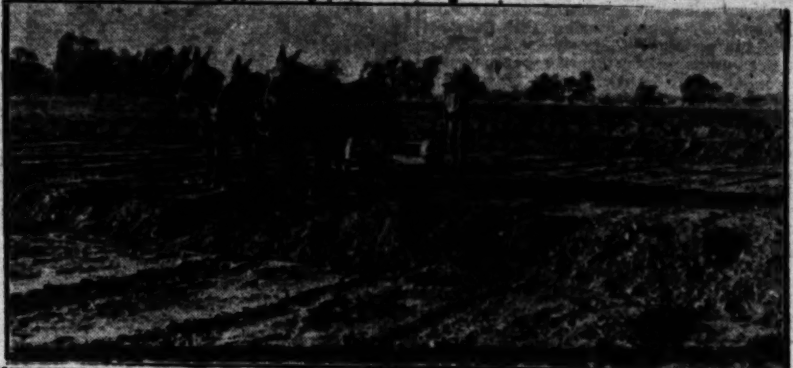
THE PREPARATION OF LAND FOR THE IRRIGATION OF ALFALFA

BY H. A. WADSWORTH.

AS THE search for possible sources for irrigation water in California becomes more and more intense, and as the cost of developing that water becomes greater year by year, so the methods used in the preparation of the land for irrigation become more and more important. For the method used in laying out a new tract of land for irrigation farming is of utmost importance in determining the efficiency of the system.

With alfalfa, as with other crops, the purpose of applying the water is to fill the soil to its maximum water-holding capacity to as great a depth as the bulk of the plant roots extend. With alfalfa, this depth, from which the roots can draw moisture, is usually assumed to be six feet, although many of the tap roots extend below this depth.

The problem then in preparing land for the irrigation of alfalfa is to put the land in such shape that water can be added to the upper six feet of soil without losses ing land which will accomplish this result is a good method.



Irrigation of Alfalfa.

Top—Throwing up levees for border method of irrigation. Below—Leveling between the checks for border method.

TWO METHODS USED

In general in California, where land is rather expensive and where water seems to be becoming more and more expensive every year, the alfalfa growers resort to two methods of preparing their land. On gradual slopes, the field is divided into strips or borders which run directly down the slope. In this way the natural fall of the ground is used to carry the water over the field and the work of leveling is minimized. On lands which are practically level to begin with—that is, land which has a general fall of less than an inch or an inch and a half per 100 feet—other means must be resorted to, and in such cases the general practice is to divide the field into a number of level checks or basins. A little work within the basin will be sufficient to fill any holes that may occur and to cut off any high places. The check is then ready for irrigating and the water spreads itself over the basin formed as it would over the bottom of a saucer if poured in from the side.

It is very evident that the size of both borders and basins depends upon the soil type, the head of water available for use and the grade of the land. In the strip method used on a very sandy soil, the strips must be made rather narrow and rather short, for the tendency of the water to run down through the soil is great. In order to avoid excessive penetration at the head of the check, the strips should be made short so that the irrigation water will not have to flow over the upper part of the check for an excessive length of time before the lower end is wet to the depth of root penetration. With a heavy soil, as a clay loam or a clay, where penetration is less rapid and where there is a greater tendency for lateral surface spread, the strips can, of course, be wider and longer.

In basin irrigation, the soil type plays an equally important part in determining the below this depth. Any method of prepar- size of the checks. In a sand where there is but little tendency for lateral spread on the surface, and a great opportunity for the water to become lost through deep penetration, the checks must be smaller than would be necessary if the land were of a heavier type.

WATER HEAD IMPORTANT

With either method of preparing land, the head of water available plays an important part in determining the size of checks. If other things are equal, an increase in the amount of water supplied to a check will increase the area over which an efficient distribution may be expected.

The following table, based mostly on observations and a few experiments, shows the maximum sizes of strips and basins under varying types of soil and varying heads of water. In general, increasing the size of a check over the maximum stated makes for lack of uniform distribution and losses of water through deep penetration.

BORDERS OR STRIPS

Head available, 1 c. f. s.*—sand, 30x200-300 feet; loam, 30x330-440 feet; clay, 30x440-660 feet. Head available, 1 c. f. s.-2 c. f. s.—sand, 30x300-400 feet; loam, 30x40x440-660 feet; clay, 30x40x660 feet. PEACH CROP NOW HAS CENTER OF STAGE

REDLANDS.—Peaches are now occupying the attention of the people of this section and the Yucaipa Valley and the work of handling one of the finest crops of the fruit yet produced in this region is well under way. The Red Bird cling peaches began to ripen well early in the month and they are going to the local markets, for the entire crop is rapidly absorbed in Southern California. Although there are a few little plantings of the very early varieties of so-called "strawberry" peaches, the season really opens with the Red Bird crop and the prices for these peaches this year is the best in the history of the valley.

The opening prices for peaches on the trees were $40 to $60 a ton for canning peaches, while the Red Bird clings for table use were close to the $100 mark and over. The crops from the R. F. Gill, A. B. Ward and H. M. Seeley orchards are now being moved, having been sold on the tree. The three orchards of about twenty acres, produced around $15,000 of fruit this year. Mr. Gill has about 3000 lug boxes, Mr. Ward has 2000 and Mr. Seeley 5000. The Seeley orchard of ten acres is one of the finest in the State. The estimate this year is being borne out for about 500 boxes to the acre are being taken off, or a total of $7500 for the ten acres. The orchard is only 5 years old. Mr. Ward's orchard is next to that of Mr. Seeley, while the Gill orchard is on the South Mesa. W. L. Duggan, who last year sold for $500 an acre; Joseph Matthews, M. E. Bise and F. Timple, Sherman Cooper, John Larso and M. E. Duval, all have good crops. There are about 300 acres planted to peaches in the valley and the returns to the growers will be in the neighborhood of $100,000, it is said.

The coyote is now, with the exception of the skunk, the most valuable fur bearer in California.

QUANTITY OF WATER A DITCH WILL CARRY

Two elements, the fall of the water in an irrigation ditch, and its size, enter into the question of how much water a ditch will carry. When conditions are such that the farmer has a choice as to grade, the chief points in mind are the volume to be carried and the nature of the soil.

The smaller the volume of water, the greater the grade required to produce a given velocity. In a small ditch, capable of carrying one cubic foot per second, a fall of two inches to the rod would produce a velocity of two feet per second, while with a ditch capable of carrying twenty cubic feet per second, the fall required to give the same velocity is only one-fourth inch to the rod. In fine sand or sediment, a flat grade is required, in order to prevent scouring. A mean velocity of one foot per second is sufficient for such material. In hard gravel or hard clay, a velocity of three feet per second can be used without eroding the bottom. In ordinary soil, ranging from sandy or gravelly loams to clay loams, a grade may be safely adopted which will produce a mean velocity of from two to two and one-half feet per second.

On a farm with little fall, the grade of a ditch cannot exceed that of the land. On rolling land, or where the slope is steep, a suitable grade for ditches usually can be found by running them across the slopes, rather than directly down them.

When excessive grades cannot be avoided by winding around the high places, the speed of the water may be checked by the insertion of drops at proper intervals. Check boards are convenient to divert water into laterals, and they may be combined with permanent drops.

Drainage Vital Feature

side counties are involved in this needless waste. Truly, the drainage problem challenges the best engineering brains of Southern California.

DRAINAGE AND ALKALI

The separation of the drainage and alkali problems is well-nigh impossible in Southern California, for in arid countries the two almost always go hand in hand. Naturally rich in soluble salts, due to the character of the rocks from which they are derived, together with conditions under which they have been laid down, the soils of the arid Southwest, under conditions of a rising water table, or periodic waterlogging, inevitably show the accumulation of alkali salts to the point where the concentrations are sufficient to interfere with plant growth. The problem then becomes the double one of first, drainage, and then alkali reclamation. Both problems are difficult enough, but the latter is frequently much more so than the former. Alkali salts are of different character in different localities, some being rather easily disposed of, and others stubborn, or unconquerable.

All of which emphasizes the importance of solving the problem while it is still in the prevention stage. Enough acreage today exists in this stage of the problem to tax the resources of even the rich county of Los Angeles. It is a situation which demands nothing short of maximum attention at the hands of those agencies naturally involved in its solution. Thousands of acres in the south part of the county and other thousands in the west end are today waterlogged and in the prevention stage. Next year, or two or three years hence, these lands will be more than waterlogged—they will then be alkaline, and in the reclamation stage.

WHAT IS THE SOLUTION?

No one property owner unaided can solve this problem. The establishment of an outlet adequate to draw down the water table sufficiently to provide safety is too costly and difficult for the individual landowner. The only solution is through co-operation among a sufficient number of landowners to make it possible to provide the remedy at a cost within reason. In short, the solution is to be had only through the formation of drainage districts of sufficient size and so laid out as to provide for a satisfactory outlet for surplus waters at a reasonable cost, and with the costs assessed to the property owners according to the benefits received.

Legal machinery to make possible such co-operation has been provided. Perhaps it is not all that might be desired, but in the opinion of those in a position to know, it is sufficient to meet all practical needs. It is probable that adequate machinery for the creation of a drainage district might be found in the formation of an improvement district, and such may be necessary, especially where the area to be drained lies partly or entirely within the corporate limits of a city.

The natural and logical procedure, however, is to utilize the acts on the statute books providing for the creation of drainage districts for the specific purpose of [illegible] the 1904 act with amendments and the act of 1919 and amendments.

Of these the one which furnishes the best facilities for operation, including the lowest overhead costs and the most equitable distribution of assessments, is the 1919 act, the product of the Los Angeles county surveyor's department. Experience with the 1904 act has practically without exception demonstrated its unworkability.

There is need for a new drainage law for use in the smaller counties, a need which has been recognized for some time past and which it was attempted to meet in the introduction of a new act at the last session of the State Legislature. This act passed both houses successfully, but, for reasons unknown, failed of signature by the Governor.

Under the 1919 act, upon request, the creation of a drainage district is undertaken by the County Board of Supervisors. The engineering and assessment work is handled by the County Surveyor, who also determines the boundaries of the district. All preliminary details are handled by the county out of general funds, excepting actual costs of construction work and other charges properly assessable to the district, which are in turn cared for by equitable assessments levied according to the benefits received. By means of public hearings and in other ways, the rights of the individual property holder are safeguarded from every possible angle, final redress being available through appeal to the State Superior Court in case of justified complaint.

SOLUTION UNDER WAY

Realizing the importance of the drainage problem and encouraged by the results obtained through the installation of a small drainage system by the Board of Supervisors on the Los Angeles County Farm, a few landowners in the southern part of the county requested some months ago that steps be taken to organize a small drainage district under the 1919 act. They were assured of the support of the agricultural extension service, the Farm Bureau, the agricultural department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the County Surveyor's office.

At a hearing held before the Board of Supervisors on May 22, that body, without a dissenting voice, voted to start initial proceedings looking toward the formation of a drainage district. Following this action, the County Surveyor immediately instituted a reconnaissance survey in which A. K. Warren, drainage engineer, has received the active co-operation of the agricultural extension service as represented by Assistant Farm Adviser L. C. Holmes, soils and alkali specialist, and Prof. W. W. Weir, drainage engineer of the College of Agriculture. This survey has been practically completed and will soon be ready for presentation to the Board of Supervisors, after which the usual procedure will be followed, including the preparation of petitions to be signed by property holders, the holding of a hearing, the determination of the boundaries of the district, a bond election, and the starting of construction work. Thus has a start been made in the solution of the drainage problem.

WEST END PROBLEMS

In the west end of the county the drainage problem is of comparatively recent origin and consists primarily of ridding the lands involved of surplus waters before alkali accumulation occurs. The problem is still almost entirely in the prevention stage, which all the more emphasizes the need for early action. The territory involved lies entirely within the corporate limits of the city of Los Angeles.

Although drainage was only recognized comparatively recently as a major problem in this part of the county, the agricultural extension service more than three years ago called attention to the imminence of the need for drainage there and two years ago called in Prof. W. W. Weir to report on the situation. The rains of the past winter occasioned a very rapid rise in the water table and brought things to a climax by causing the sudden death of considerable acreages of orchard fruits.

Active committees have been appointed and the matter has already been taken up with the city water department and will be brought before the proper municipal authorities for satisfactory solution. Preliminary surveys have been made by the agricultural extension service and the Los Angeles water department, the latter agency having sunk more than 100 shallow test wells for observance of the water table.

All things considered, it may be safely stated that although slow to recognize the importance of the drainage problem, the farmers of Los Angeles county have at last begun to attack it in several sections of the county, and in a manner calculated to achieve satisfactory results.

GOOD WORK OF THE LIMA BEAN ASSOCIATION TOLD AT MEETING

DIRECTORS of the California Lima Bean Growers' Association met in the association's offices in Oxnard on July 11 to hear annual reports and to elect officers. It was voted that the present board should succeed itself.

One of the chief subjects under discussion was that of ways and means of stabilizing the market. The method receiving the most favor was that of buying the beans of outside growers when offered below set prices. Some of the growers were heartily in favor of this plan, while a few were opposed, the whole subject leading to quite a bit of discussion.

Following the annual meeting of the directors, they adjourned to the pulp issue house of the American Beet Sugar Company, where Mr. Davis, field man for the association, had arranged an elaborate barbecue for the directors and members and their families. The Boy Scouts acted as waiters, and about 650 meals were served, the lunch hour being enlivened with orchestra music.

Immediately after the luncheon, Manager R. L. Churchill gave his annual report, which was interesting and greatly appreciated by those present.

Mr. Churchill reported that the total 1921 crop of limas, amounting to about 700,000 bags, and the crop of about 150,000 baby limas, had sold for an average of $6.47 per hundredweight for regular limas and $5.67 per hundredweight for baby limas. The association's expense for marketing was 37 cents per bag, or 19 cents less than the 1920 crop cost on limas, and 14 cents less on baby limas. About 77 per cent of last year's crop was sold east of the Mississippi. The last of the 1921 crop had just been shipped, he said, and final payments would be made by August 1. The association effected a saving of from $15,000 to $20,000 to members by buying bags and twine. About 12,000 cooking recipes have been mailed out to those who clipped coupons for advertising in magazines and newspapers. It was admitted that part of the 1922 crop has been sold at from 6 to 6.7 cents per pound.

The Re-elected Directors.

Of the California Lima Bean Association, photographed at recent Oxnard meeting.

C. C. Teague followed Mr. Churchill and eulogized the latter's report. He said, however, that he was surprised that the association was able to show such good results from the small acreage which they controlled. He stated that the citrus association membership included over 70 per cent of the growers, and that the walnut association controlled over 75 per cent of the crop and that these two organizations could not possibly have obtained such good results if they had not had the major portion of the crop signed up.

He said that he regretted very much that the support given the lima bean association had not been as good as it should have been and that it was hard for him to see how any intelligent grower could afford not to support the organization. He said he had devoted over fifteen years to constructive work in farmers' co-operative marketing organizations, and that he believed that without the development of the development of these organizations, the business of farming would be on "shaky grounds." He stated that actual experience had shown that if a small part of the crop is in the hands of brokers, they can manipulate the prices and influence sales very appreciably. Markets must be stabilized through intelligent distribution, he declared and added that this could not be obtained if an important part of the crop was in the hands of speculators. The growers, he said, had made more money through the association than they would have had otherwise, a fact which would be easily demonstrated if the association should be broken up.

That speculators influenced the market was definitely shown during 1919, according to the speaker, when the association had but comparatively small acreage under its control, with two brokerage firms handling the major part of the rest. No sales could be made, and a number of men realized that something must be done immediately. Mr. Teague told how he and others had invited the two other buying organizations in to a directors meeting, where the matter was thoroughly discussed, and there they decided to form a pooled organization to handle the whole crop. Immediately upon advices being received in the East that there would be no haphazard shipments and that marketing would be attended to in a businesslike

PERTINENT FACTS ABOUT IRRIGATION

An inch of water based on 9 G.P.M. steady flow, is valued at $1000 by irrigators in Southern California.

The centrifugal turbine type of pump is most commonly used for lifting irrigation water.

There is over 4000 horsepower in natural gas engines operating pumps in the Pomona district, and in excess of 12,000 horsepower in Southern California.

To make the desert bloom.

The highest lift, with greatest amount of water is under the Glendora Independent Water Company's plant, raising 225 inches 700 feet, using natural engine power.

Costs of irrigation water per inch per twenty-four-hour day average, 25 cents to $1.75, depending upon total lift and water values to users.

The Temescal Water Company conveys much of its water through forty miles of pipe line.

Gas engines and centrifugal pumps in use by the Whittier Water Company operate 300 days and nights a year without shutdown for irrigation and domestic water.

The Banning Irrigation District raises water with water by means of a water wheel operating its pumps.

Concrete pipe with reinforcement is now being made for water mains, good for forty-five-pound pressure.

A deep-well turbine pump operated by gas engine at the city of Glendora lifts 60 inches of water from 400 feet depth.

Speed increasing gears for direct connecting engines to centrifugal pumps show as high as 99 per cent power transmission efficiency, according to engineers.

There is approximately $7,000,000 per annum spent for irrigation pumping equipment and pipe lines in Southern California.

The cost of electric power is approximately 10 per cent less this year than last throughout the rural districts.

The natural gas companies have put in over thirty-eight miles of new gas extensions in the farming districts so far this year.

Changes in designs of centrifugal pumps have increased their efficiency on an average of 50 per cent since their invention.

The use of direct connected electric motor pumping units saves thousands of dollars per annum to power users, because of increased efficiency.

Water levels throughout the Southland are raised from twenty-five to eighty-five feet this year, because of unusually heavy rainfall, which means the saving of untold thousands of dollars to water users throughout the entire Pacific Coast.

VEGETABLE CROPS BRING GOOD RETURN

SANTA BARBARA.—Lettuce and cauliflower are crops which bid fair to bring handsome returns to the farmers of the Guadalupe section in Santa Maria Valley. This year, for the first time, lettuce in acreage lots is being grown there, and shipments to the eastern markets are being made at a rate of from five to ten cars a day. After the lettuce is out of the fields, they are being planted to cauliflower.

It has been found that the Guadaloupe climate will grow lettuce at a season when the crop in other sections is practically out of the market. At this time, it is said, Imperial Valley and other sections have become too warm to grow lettuce. The fogs of Guadalupe help the crop thrive there during May, June, July and August.

With July, seeding for cauliflower is in line, and the Guadalupe ranchers anticipate goodly returns from this crop also. Large produce firms of Los Angeles and San Francisco are contracting for these crops.

News from Lompoc Valley is to the effect that with the harvesting of the sweet pea crop there cauliflower will be raised. The big companies are contracted for several hundred acres.

STILL GREATER DEVELOPMENT FOR THE SALT RIVER VALLEY

BY JAMES H. McCLINTOCK

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—Tremendous plans are afoot for the greater development of the Salt River Valley and for the generation of hydroelectric power that will return large interest on the expense incurred in the installation of the necessary works. Little has been said concerning these plans, but they now are developed to the extent that active operations may be expected within a short time. The plans have been under consideration for several years by the directing body of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association, headed by F. A. Reid, and by C. C. Cragin, the general superintendent. There even has been provision of the sum of $6,000,000, that will be spent upon the improvements. Little of this will come from the farmers of the valley, who own and control the association, subject only to the terms of the governmental lien of about $10,000,000. The greater part of the money will be advanced by mining companies and land associations that are to be benefited by cheap power to be secured. The plans have been approved by the engineering firm of Quentin, Code & Hill of Los Angeles, the last named the engineer who carried through construction of the reclamation service project that now waters the Salt River Valley. "We now are ready to shoot," says President Reid.

At the present time, what is called the Salt River reclamation project covers, with its gravity flow, about 204,000 acres, with about 33,000 acres irrigated from pumping. Prospective additions include 40,000 acres east of Mesa, under the Auxiliary Eastern canal, about 35,000 acres west of the Agua Fria River, to be irrigated by pumped waters from near Phoenix, and by material extension of canals into the Gila Valley at several points. There also will be an addition of about 50,000 acres by possible absorption of the now dormant Paradise Verde project, northeast of Phoenix.

An Interesting Structure.

POWER PROJECTS

The Secretary of the Interior lately signed an order giving the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association sole right to the location of sites for water storage dams and for electric power generation along Salt River from Phoenix up to Roosevelt. A bill has just passed the House of Representatives granting the association the right to make power contracts of fifty years' duration. At present only ten-year contracts can be made. The Senate is expected to pass the bill in short order. This bill is of large importance to Phoenix and the Salt River Valley, inasmuch as upon it are to be contracts for about 30,000 horsepower, to be used by Arizona mining companies. Within sixty days, work is to be started upon improvements and additions expected to cost $6,000,000. Of this vast sum, $4,200,000 will be advanced by mining corporations and $2,000,000 will come from the Tempe and Eastern Auxiliary canals and from outside lands now without canal service. The Inspiration and Miami companies already have signed a contract for 1,200,000 kilowatt hours per annum and now have asked for 2,000,000 kilowatts. The Magma at Superior has been taking 1000 kilowatts, and now, with added machinery installation, wants 5000. Ray and Hayden are not included, though it is possible that the low rate of three-fourths of a cent per kilowatt hour yet may bring the Ray Consolidated into the combination. If it does not join, the excess power generated readily can be disposed of in Ajo, Tucson, Globe and Bisbee. The Inspiration for some time past has been taking all the excess power of the association, or about 10,000 kilowatts.

The first work will be the construction of two new dams in the canyon of Salt River. The lower will be that at Mormon Flat, 156 feet above the present river level, with foundations thirty-five feet deep to bed rock. The dam will be 120 feet broad on the bottom and 400 feet on the top. It will furnish a considerable addition to the stored waters and will be valuable in securing quick action in filling the canals at need, but its main utility will lie in its generation of electricity. About half way between Mormon Flat will back water to the toe of the Roosevelt dam, filling the canyon with two lakes of remarkable scenic beauty that will be stocked with fish and made resorts for the sportsmen.

The present power development of the association is 25,000 horsepower. The new works will add 50,000 horsepower, the gross 75,000 horsepower expected to realize a minimum of $45 per horsepower per annum, or more than $3,000,000 income to the association. Every kilowatt can be sold, for the present horsepower cost through steam generation in Phoenix, Globe or Tucson, is in excess of $100 a year.

RECLAMATION PLANS

In the event the Paradise-Verde reclamation system fails to function, plans are ready within the association for great improvements on the Verde, with a great dam on the Trott site, a few miles above the junction of the Verde with the Salt, and another at the Horseshoe site, which already has been platted by the Paradise-Verde enterprise. The first dam will almost entirely flood the McDowell Indian reservation, whereon are a few hundred Mohave-Apache Indians, who already have available, without cost, an excellent tract of irrigated land under the Arizona canal, upon which they could move with profit. A third damsite has been platted, though not by the association, in a box canyon a few miles south of Camp Verde, though it is probable that this last site will not be needed, in view of the limited flow of the Verde and its habit of rising in at least two floods a year. From near the Horseshoe dam a long canal has been surveyed, out on the Paradise plain. From these Verde improvements would be added not only 50,000 acres of additional irrigated lands, but about 40,000 horsepower that would bring an additional income approximating $2,000,000 a year.

The association now has eighty-nine pumps operating continuously, raising about 260 second feet of water, and is putting in an additional ten. There are many private installations, including scores of very large pumps placed by the Southwest Cotton Company around Goodyear, south of Chandler, in the Marionette section, northwest of Phoenix, and around Litchfield, twenty-five miles west of Phoenix. Since the pumps have been operated, the water table has been lowered an average of five feet and in places there has been a drop of eight feet. Not only have the water-logging problems of the Salt River Valley been solved, but from operation of the pumps has been secured an additional water supply, uniformly of good quality, that well repays the costs of installation and operation.

There now also may be announced the impending consolidation with the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association of the lands under the Tempe and Lehi canals, about 23,000 acres. These lands are to pay a pro rata charge of about $70 an acre toward the cost of the Roosevelt dam and its attached distribution and power systems. Neither canal joined the association at the time of its formation, this due to reliance upon acknowledgd prior rights to the flow of the river in low-water periods. But there has come tardy acknowledgement of the superiority of the association's methods and appreciation that water-logged lands best may be drained by recourse to the electric power so cheaply secured through the association.

There has been prediction that the Salt River Valley eventually would have an irrigated and cultivated expansion of over half a million acres. This consummation now appears probable within a couple of years, with consequent effect upon the population of Phoenix and the suburban towns of the valley. In addition will be gained great sums from the sale of the power generated, these funds at first dedicated to repaying the cost of enlargement and later to apply upon repayment to the government of appropriations made for the construction of the original project.

BIG STRAWBERRIES

PORTERVILLE.—Another interesting example of the productiveness of the Porterville district is found in a plate of strawberries, each berry of which weighs an ounce or more, which was recently displayed in the Chamber of Commerce windows. The berries were grown on the George W. Krock ranch, west of town. One of the mammoth berries appeared on each vine of the variety Mr. Krock planted, the other berries being large, but not approaching in size the huge fruit displayed. Each of the large berries appeared to be in a triple fruit, on one stem.

way, prices strengthened and the crop was economically disposed of.

Mr. Teague stated that the growing area of lima beans was very limited, and that they were not a commodity which could be grown anywhere, thereby causing the organization to spread considerably. He said he could not understand why the growers [illegible] again support the organization this year. Mr. Teague's main thought was that each grower should see that his principal business shall be the signing up of from 75 to 80 per cent of the acreage grown in the association.

KONSIDER the GRAPE—

THE GRAPE asks less in the way of care and attention than any other of our fruits. It asks no fertilization. From a warm, sandy soil it extracts pure sugar, high flavor, rich color, year after year, and a big tonnage, with but little water.

The grape sits close to the warm ground. Winds do not disturb it, nor do frosts often find its blossoms.

FAVORABLE REPORT ON CROPS IN CALIFORNIA

Weather conditions continue favorable for crops in the State, according to the July 1 report of E. E. Kaufman, agricultural statistician, and the outlook now is for fair to good crops in almost every line of farming endeavor, citrus fruits being one of the few exceptions. Temperatures were high during the latter part of June, hastening the ripening of deciduous fruit crops, but causing a heavy drop of oranges. The warm weather did not injure the grain crops.

The condition of wine grapes is reported to be normal in all sections of the State, indicating a production of at least 380,000 tons. Raisin grapes were slightly sunburned in a few localities, but table grapes, especially in Southern California, show an excellent condition, 92 per cent of normal, as against 69 last year.

Walnuts are reported as 85 per cent of normal, the crop in Ventura county being rather poor on account of coddling moth attack.

The lemon bloom has been very late, and little can be predicted about this crop. This crop was also affected by the June drop.

Oranges show a condition of 63 per cent of normal, owing to the heavy drop.

Conditions were not favorable to a heavy set of olives, and a poor crop is in prospect. The condition for the State is given as 60.

The production of figs last year was 8500 tons, but this year's crop will amount to about 12,000 tons. The crop shows a condition of 91 per cent of normal. The prune crop will be about 100,000 tons.

The condition of the apple crop is estimated at 85 per cent of normal as compared with 59 last year, and a production of 6,500,000 boxes is forecast.

Apricots, now about harvested, showed a condition of 59 per cent at harvest, as compared with 46 last year.

The peach crop showed no change from last month, being 98 per cent of a normal crop, and the production is forecast as 420,000 tons as against 320,000 last year.

Pears show a condition of [illegible] per cent, and were [illegible] last year at this time. While the blight continues, the production will be close to 100,000 tons this year.

The area planted to lima beans is placed at 125,000 acres this year, as against 101,000 acres last year. The condition of the crop is excellent. About 201,000 acres are planted to beans other than limas, as against 171,000 acres harvested last year. The condition of all beans is reported 90 per cent of normal.

The condition of sugar beets is 85 per cent of normal. Cotton crops improved and the forecast is for a production of about 123,000 bales, as against 75,000 bales last year. The acreage of cotton in California proper is 65,000 acres, and 145,000 acres in Lower California.

The barley crop is estimated at 36,720,000 bushels as against 29,700,000 bushels last year. Rice is growing on 142,000 acres. Warm weather has helped this crop, which shows a condition of 88 per cent of normal, and a production of 3,655,000 bags.

The condition of pasture is given as 83 per cent of a normal and that of alfalfa 94 per cent of a normal crop.

Young vineyard in Elsinore district.

ELSINORE DISTRICT COMING TO FRONT

ELSINORE.—After having rested on its honors for nearly forty years with its far-famed hot mineral baths, the quaint little city of Elsinore is about to become the point of outlet for a productive agricultural district. The district will not be reckoned among the larger of the State, for after all available land has been placed under cultivation, it will probably not exceed 20,000 acres, but the crops will be of an interesting variety. Furthermore, the district may be said to be in its infancy, as most of the present cultivated acreage is devoted to what is new or just coming into bearing.

It is true that for many years orchards and groves have been developed along the six-mile strip of land that lies at the head of and along the southern shore of Lake Elsinore, and that the comparatively small output of oranges, apricots, peaches and walnuts has been of good quality. The newer activity is at the eastern end of the lake and contiguous to the older, and is the result of the opening of a large tract by a land company. Nine wells have been drilled for irrigation purposes and the ranchers have already perfected details for the incorporation of an irrigation district. Three more wells are to be drilled. The district will include 7000 acres.

In the development of water an interesting situation was discovered. Although the acreage is all within a couple of miles of the lake, that body of water does not contribute to it through seepage. The lake water is partly mineral, while that from the wells is said to be free of any such content.

The new agricultural order of things is reflected by the recent opening of the Elsinore plant of the California Growers' Association after it had been closed two years. This association also operates canneries at Riverside, Ontario, Hemet and Fallbrook. The Elsinore plant will be operated until October in a structure 370 by 75 feet in size. To care for the more than 200 employees, the association has had built a number of small cottages and a cafeteria, as the town of Elsinore would be unable to adequately care for such a number of workers, nearly all of whom are being brought in from outside points. W. D. Cary, the superintendent, says there will be no trouble in the future in operating the plant, as the fruit yield will henceforth be large enough to warrant keeping the local cannery open.

In making a trip through the district, one is impressed with the large number of ten and twenty-acre tracts of trees from one to four years old. Oranges, lemons, apricots, peaches and grapes are all well represented, while in the younger orchards there is a considerable acreage of watermelons, a crop on which Elsinore greatly prides itself. The district is making big strides in grape culture.

The "Hows" and "How Nots"

is taken for them, and the high and low spots picked out and compensated with the proper setting of these earth taps.

And right here, let me devote a few lines to the pocket gopher. Undermining ditches and furrows, he has diverted many millions of gallons of water from its rightful course, caused many good irrigators to lose large quantities of religion, and on top of it all, has remained to damage the next drop. While flooding, it is a good idea to keep a weather eye out for him, and should he appear, to bring up your batting average with a healthy swing of the shovel.

There is another tip that will be of some use. In irrigating furrows, the amateur and even the experienced irrigator, will misjudge the flow of the water, consequently the ends of the rows will be flooded. Now, with such crops as potatoes and tomatoes, flooding causes crop damage, and with any vegetable, it is always troublesome, in that the ends of the rows are not ready to cultivate, when the upper ends are. One remedy for this is connect up several furrow ends together, so that an over-supply in one will flow into the others. Usually, three or four furrows are opened at one time; all will move at a different speed, so that one will reach the end before the other. If the irrigator will watch the flow, he will know how soon to cut off the rows, and can cut the water from the fastest moving row, into the slower ones, thus saving a great deal of water. Another remedy is to draw a furrow along the end of the field, connecting it with another ditch, and utilizing the overflow on some crop lower in the field.

These are a few of the fundamental points to be mastered in the "art" of irrigating efficiently. All were gleaned from being in close touch with truck farming irrigation from the "days of real sport," when, to the writer, irrigating ditches were just canals to sail boats in. Later, they meant hard work.

Any vegetable grower, whether his fields be large or small, must realize the necessity of increasing the duty of water as one of the chief factors of his ultimate success. The right quantity of water, applied at the right time, in the proper manner, insures the early maturity of quality produce, and consequently, the highest selling price. Just to emphasize this point, let me conclude with the story an Italian trucker told me the other day. He voiced his opinion of Japanese competition thusly:

"First I gotta da rent. Then I gotta da seed, an' I worka lak hell. The Jappo iss lease da pompin' plant an' hees charge me too much, an' geev me da water w'en I no wantit. Da potate iss small. Can't maka da sale. Whacha do, huh?"

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He named it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable for outside or inside painting. It is the cement principle applied to paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

METHOD OF PICKING IMPORTANT ITEM IN HARVESTING PEACHES

BY S. W. CUNNINGHAM.
Secretary Southern California Canners' Bureau.

AS a result of the concerted campaign of demonstrations and publicity on thinning deciduous fruits, carried on during the past few months by the agricultural extension service of the University of California, in conjunction with the Southern California Canners' Bureau, it is now apparent that a better average job of thinning peaches has been accomplished this year than ever before in Southern California.

Some growers, however, were negligent in their duty toward themselves and the industry in this particular and are now having trouble in disposing of their crops because the fruit will not size up properly for canning purposes. The crop in this end of the State, and also for the whole State, will run into tonnage figures never before reached and the natural result is that canners choose the better fruit first.

It is hoped that next year proper thinning can be more uniformly accomplished in the orchards.

Growers who have made a sincere effort to thin in a thorough manner, and other growers as well, should now give serious consideration to the matter of picking the fruit in a way that will produce the highest results possible both as to quality and tonnage. It is perfectly possible for a grower who has done an excellent job of thinning to lose a large part of the benefits that should result by doing a poor job of picking.

It would, of course, be a most desirable situation if all the peaches on a tree would ripen at the same time. In such a case the whole crop could be taken off at one picking and picking would be a very simple matter. However, peaches do not ripen that way and therefore, more than one picking is necessary. The question that now arises is: What are the benefits to the grower of making several pickings and how many and how frequent pickings should be made to secure the greatest benefits?

In answering the latter part of this question it is necessary to take several things into consideration and no one answer would fit all conditions found in different fruit districts. Some varieties of peaches ripen more uniformly than others; in other words, a larger part of the crop can be taken at any one picking in some varieties than in others. Again, fruit of the same variety ripens differently in some Southern California districts than in other districts. All these differing conditions affect the necessity for frequency of picking in order to get the fruit off the trees in proper condition for canning or other use.

The question of the benefits to be derived from proper picking can be more clearly answered. A grower who picks his orchard over often enough to get off a high percentage of fruit at the proper stage of ripeness for market gets the following benefits: (1) High tonnage; (2) Uniform quality both as to ripeness and size; (3) top market price on account of uniform quality and size; (4) surety of a market every year on account of becoming known as a consistent producer of quality fruit.

Higher tonnage is produced by frequent pickings as against less frequent pickings because, (1) when you pick often, practically all the fruit taken at each picking is very close to the exact point of ripeness desired and therefore, heavier than if some of it had to be picked three or four days ahead of that point so it will not get too ripe before the next picking; (2) by taking off all fruit as soon as it reaches the "ripe but firm" stage, which is the stage at which it is most desirable for canning, the fruit left on the tree gains size better because some of the strain has been taken off the tree.

Growers who make four or five pickings of peaches deliver to the canneries a much more uniform quality and size of fruit than those who only make two or three pickings. The former method catches nearly every peach at the proper "ripe but firm" stage and that means the period in that peach's life when it is full size and well rounded out. On the other hand, the man who makes only two or three pickings has to take off many peaches that have not fully developed to the "ripe but firm" stage and therefore are under the full weight they would reach at that stage. He has to take them off because if left to the next picking they would be over-ripe for canning. He also gets many over-ripe peaches when pickings are too far apart, and this is not desirable. While the loss in weight for each peach picked ahead of the "ripe but firm" stage may be only an ounce or even a fraction thereof, it mounts up to a considerable figure on the whole crop.

Taking the picking proposition as a whole, the interests of the grower and canner are identical, just as in thinning. The canner would like to receive every peach at the "ripe but firm" stage and if the grower could pick them all at that stage by frequent pickings, he would get better tonnage, higher and more uniform quality, make a more satisfied customer of his canner and assure himself of a market for his crop every year because of recognition as a producer of uniformly good fruit.

One of the main reasons why Northern California canners can put 70 per cent of their pack into the high syrup grades of fruit is because their growers have discovered the benefits of frequent pickings by experience and consistently go over their trees four or five times each harvest season and thus get a very large percentage of the fruit to their canners at just the proper stage of ripeness for canning.

FARM DITCH SHOULD BE PROPERLY PLACED

It is a mistake, says Thomas H. McDonald, irrigation expert of the United States Department of Agriculture, to build farm ditches for the lower part of a farm and, in after years, when there is a desire to irrigate the remainder, to be obliged to build a second series of ditches for the higher land. The ditches should be laid out for all the land before water is first diverted.

Sufficient water to irrigate the entire area should first be conveyed from the canal or other source of supply to the highest point of the farm, and from there distributed to the various subdivisions. In laying out these permanent ditches, an effort should be made to locate them along field or fence boundaries, if possible, in order not to obstruct the passage of teams and implements in fields. When the grade is too steep to permit this, a curved location through fields should be chosen, according to Mr. McDonald. These curved locations for supply ditches can be laid out so as to add greatly to the beauty of an irrigated farm. They become the margin of fields, by the side of which lanes are graded, fences built, and shade trees planted. The plan of locating supply ditches around the margins of square or rectangular tracts is perhaps better for farm operations when topographical conditions permit.

Water Conservation

ing and impounding of winter run-off waters.

A third and most important phase of the water conservation problem is the protection of the watersheds against fires. A most anomolous situation exists in respect to fire protection in Southern California watersheds. The principal watersheds are in Federal forest reserves and the matter of fire protection is therefore a function of the Federal government. Unfortunately, the appropriations for this work are by no means sufficient to provide that protection which the value of these watersheds warrants. In no part of the United States are the watersheds of so great value as in Southern California and yet the fire protection facilities afforded to these areas are not measureably more comprehensive than those devoted to watersheds far less important. Millions of dollars have been spent on the lower lying lands for flood control work, principally in stream channel alignment, drainage of channels and similar means for preventing injury to agricultural areas. The expenditure of this money has been made without any possible control over the source of the waters, which is in the watersheds proper.

There appear to be only two solutions to this problem, namely, an arrangement whereby the flood control district would also have charge of the fire protection of the watersheds furnishing the waters which have to be cared for as a flood measure, or greatly increased appropriations to the Forest Service to be expended for fire protection purposes on Southern California areas. Certain it is that the watersheds of Southern California must receive adequate fire protection, a lesson which has been strikingly emphasized following the burning off of several hundred thousand acres three years ago, with resultant floods following the heavy winter rains of the past year.

Intimately associated with adequate fire protection is the next phase of the problem, which has to do with reforestation of the burned-off areas, which during the last twenty years have gradually increased to the point where hundreds of thousands of acres formerly forest are today barren run-off surfaces incapable of holding even a small part of the natural winter rainfall. The importance of this work merits greatly increased appropriations to the Forest Service and to the County Forester's department. Vast nurseries should be maintained and each year large areas should be planted to growth which will in a few years provide a means of catching and retaining valuable winter rainfall.

Last, and of equal importance, is the drainage of waterlogged areas. In many cases these areas are of sufficient elevation to make it possible to utilize the surplus waters drained from these lands, thereby both rendering them valuable and productive and irrigating lands lying at lower elevations.

[illegible] of all these problems in respect of the water conservation problem were by some miracle to be suddenly solved, there would still remain the fact that in the distribution and utilization of irrigation water supplies under our present system there is tremendous waste. There are hundreds of ten and twenty-acre orchards which today have wells capable of furnishing irrigation water for forty or fifty-acre tracts, and there are many larger areas which have wells incapable of furnishing a sufficient water supply.

An entirely natural development has been the utilization of gravity water for the lower lying lands with the necessity of deep-well pumps for the higher areas. The physical features are such that the higher areas should utilize the gravity water and the lower areas should be irrigated from pumped supplies. A tremendous economic waste exists on account of this situation and the solution to the problem is an extremely difficult one. It would seem that it would require the formation of large irrigation districts with the surrendering of all water rights, and a redistribution of the rights according to the most economic distribution. This would require the closest sort of co-operation, and, considering the tremendous financial issues involved, would be extremely difficult of accomplishment. It must inevitably come, however, and it is not too soon to be anticipating it.

Fortunately public sentiment on the importance of water conservation in general has now developed to the point where many big men and a number of influential organizations are giving this subject serious thought. At the last session of the State Legislature, $200,000 was appropriated to be expended by a special commission in a study of the water resources of the State of California and their more efficient utilization. The farm bureaus in many counties are studying this problem seriously, this being notably true in Los Angeles and Orange counties. The Associated Chambers of Commerce in the San Gabriel Valley and the other sections are studying it. The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, through its agricultural department, is doing valuable work.

There is need, however, for the development of a broad, comprehensive plan, including a unified development for the solution of this problem in its six important phases. (1) development to the fullest degree of natural water supplies; (2) conservation of the same by means of underground storage, through impounding dams and spreading on porous cones; (3) fire protection for our valuable watersheds; (4) reforestation of all areas capable of sustaining forest covers; (5) drainage of all waterlogged and alkali lands, with provision made for utilizing the waters taken out in so far as this is possible, and (6) a most careful study of the legal phases of the problem, together with a readjustment in the distribution and utilization of water supplies.

No greater problem confronts Southern California than this, and there is no greater challenge to that intelligence which has produced here the highest type of agricultural development the world has yet seen.

GREATEST PEACH HARVEST IN SOUTHLAND'S HISTORY BEGUN

ENTER Miss Peach, Queen of Southern California deciduous fruits.

This is an auspicious year for Her Majesty. Producers and canners alike say that the quality and quantity of the peach crop in this half of the State, as well as in most sections of California are better than for many years. Couple this fact with the item of eleven more canneries in operation in California than were going in 1921, with better than average prices ruling for the fruit, and there is presented a situation that tends to increase plantings of this fruit and to boost the stock of the present peach grower.

Throughout the Southland the first of the 1922 peaches are being sent to the twenty-five canning plants in operation between Hemet and San Fernando. Some fresh fruit has been marketed, but only about 8000 tons of the 55,000-ton peach crop expected in Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino and Ventura counties will be sold fresh, according to F. W. Cunningham, secretary of the Southern California canners' bureau. So the Southern California peach will go largely to Eastern States and foreign countries in cans this year. The Southland peaches will bring the farmers something like $2,350.000, and the canners a large amount in 1922.

California last year produced 31.6 per cent of the peaches grown in the United States and left Georgia, "the Peach State," far in the rear. The production of the four leading peach States was as follows: California, 13,800,000 bushels; Georgia, 3,799,000 bushels; New York, 2,307,000 bushels, and Ohio, 2,241,000 bushels. The production for 1922, it is estimated, will be at least 25 per cent greater than that for 1921.

Already a shortage of harvest workers is reported from some peach-growing districts of Southern California. It is estimated that 7500 persons will be employed by thes canneries, and that at least 5000 field workers and truck drivers will be employed in the peach harvest in this section.

Because of a cool spring, all varieties of peaches developed well and splendid quality and size resulted where the crop was thinned. In some regions growers were unable to get thinning hands in time, as in parts of the Hemet district, but even on trees not thinned, the quality of the fruit is generally good.

The world is calling for peaches canned in Southern California, and peach growers are now planting varieties which will be acceptable to the canneries. Recently Robert W. Hodgson, farm adviser for Los Angeles county, in an article published in the Times Farm and Tractor Section, urged planters to select varieties of peaches that would bring the highest price at the canneries.

THE CANNERIES

Last year 32,000 tons of peaches were handled by the fourteen canneries in operation then, and the output, 350,000 cases, is nearly all sold. This year it is believed by Secretary Cunningham of the Canneries' Association, the output will be 1,000,000 cases more than in 1921.

The following canneries are or will be in operation in Southern California this year:

Golden State Canneries, with plants at Van Nuys, Cucamonga, Ontario, Pomona and Hemet.

Libby, McNeil and Libby, plants at Burbank and Chino. (This company also has plants at Selma, Sacramento, Gridley and Sunnyvale.)

California Growers' Association, with plants at Hemet, Ontario, Riverside and Elsinore.

McGaffey Canning Company, with plants at San Fernando and Camarillo; the Banning Canning Company, Banning; Bonner Fruit Company, Lankershim; La Sierra Heights Canning Company, Arlington; Charles Sterns Company, Wineville; Sunset Canning Company, Pomona; Van Nuys Canning Company, Van Nuys; Baldwin Park Canning Company, Baldwin Park; California Packing Corporation, Los Angeles; McKeon Canning Company, Los Angeles; Golden West Packing Company, Los Angeles, and the California Sanitary Canning Company, Los Angeles. These plants will handle both cling and freestone peaches.

The California crop of cling peaches this year will amount to 150,000 to 160,000 tons, in the belief of W. E. Griffin, buyer for the Libby, McNeil & Libby. He is not in touch with the freestone peach situation, but believes the freestone crop will be about half that of the cling peaches. This is a record as far as peach production goes in California.

Cutting peaches in a San Fernando Valley cannery.

H. A. Van Emert, vice-president of the Golden State Canneries, states that his firm will handle 16,500 tons of peaches of both varieties this year, 4200 tons of apricots and 25,000 tons of tomatoes at the six plants of the company. The company has one plant at Kingsburg, Fresno county, in addition to its five Southern California plants.

Northern California growers are getting a better price for their canning peaches than southerners, says Mr. Van Emert. The price in the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys is from $40 to $45 for freestone peaches, and from $60 to $61.50 for clings. In Southern California, the growers are paid about $10 less than the northern scale. The answer seems to be the better organization of the northern growers, who are nearly all members of a co-operative marketing association, the fact that the northern growers have learned to thin carefully counting heavily.

HELP LOOKED AFTER

From 200 to 325 persons are employed at each of the twenty-five canneries which will put up peaches this year. Thus a large number of women and a few men find lucrative and pleasant employment during the summer. The canning companies take a personal interest in the comfort and general welfare of their workers, establishing camps for them, and providing restaurants, cafeterias and other eating places. Free tents are provided by many companies, and evening entertainment is a feature at several of the peach canning camps in the Southland.

In the peach orchards hundreds of workers are employed picking the crop, sorting the fruit, and hauling it to the canneries. One difficulty the peach growers of Southern California have met with this summer is the question of finding housing for itinerant workers. Most of the communities in the peach-growing districts have established camp grounds, where they provide free water, wood and camping space for field workers, expecting the latter to bring along blankets and tents. In some places tents are provided.

IN LOS ANGELES COUNTY

In Los Angeles county, according to the agricultural department of the Chamber of Commerce, the current season's production will probably reach 40,000 tons, as compared with a 1921 yield of [illegible] tons. The 1920 figure was 37,00[illegible] tons. The 1920 bearing acreage of 5100 was increased so that in 1921 there were 5[illegible] acres in bearing. More orchards have come into bearing during the past year, another factor entering into an increased production.

"This year's market for peaches is favorable," says Dr. George P. Clements, head of the department, "particularly as compared with that for last year. Practically all old stock of canned peaches, including the 1920 carry-over, together with last year's pack, has been disposed of, the canneries are in better financial position to operate, and the general economic situation throughout the whole country is improved. All factors indicate that a large pack this year will meet a ready market. Another consideration causing canneries to open their Southern California plants is the fact that there is an increased apricot production here. Apricots may be had at a lower figure than in Northern and Central California, where there has been no increase, and perhaps even a decrease, in acreage, and where the yield has been cut down by frosts in the Bay district and the Santa Clara Valley.

"The percentage of the peach crop that is dried varies each year according to the quality and condition of the fruit and the market for canning peaches. Normally about 85 per cent of the crop is either canned or dried, and 15 per cent marketed as fresh fruit. With a large canning demand this year, the amount dried may be lessened. However, in Southern California, the canners have demanded a two and one-fourth-inch peach, and this action may have a tendency to divert more fruit into the dried product. In any event this should be a profitable year for the peach producer."

PREPARE THE LAND BEFORE IRRIGATION

Frequently irrigation farmers are sorry they did not prepare their land well before they built their field ditches. The new settler in an irrigated district seldom appreciates the importance of preparing the surface of his land so that the farm may be cheaply, easily and uniformly watered.

As a rule, crops in an arid country are good or bad according as they have received the proper amount of water at the right time. When the ground is left rough and uneven, and water cannot be evenly applied, the effect is shown in reduced yields.

When land is covered with a heavy growth of brush, or there are many sand hummocks and hollows, it is best not to attempt to complete the preparation of the land the first season. The ground may be roughly prepared and seeded to grain. Later in the season it is irrigated as well as the nature of the surface will allow, and afterward, when the crop is removed, it is thoroughly prepared for a permanent crop, such as alfalfa or fruit. The roots of native grasses are then dead, and the brush roots interfere to a much less extent with the grading operations than if the ground was well levelled at the start. Besides, fields to be planted to alfalfa should be prepared in the fall in order that the seed may be sown sufficiently early.

The fields should first be plowed deeply and then graded. In arid sections of California and Arizona Fresno scrapers and large land levellers pulled by tractors are mostly used. The high spots in the tract are taken up by the scraper and deposited on the "borders" or ridges about one foot high, which are thrown up every fifty or sixty feet for convenience and even covering in irrigation. These "lands" between the borders are generally 660 feet long, and a "waste ditch" to carry off excess water is built across the lower end of the field.

Learn the true value of co-operation in culture and marketing, and assist in community development.

The amount of water applied to strawberries is much greater than that applied to bush berries.

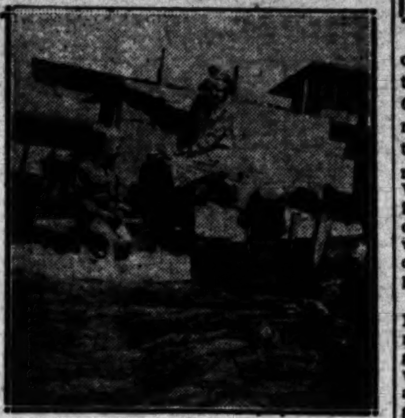
IRRIGATION PROJECT TO WATER LARGE AREA NEAR ESCONDIDO

A LARGE area of irrigable land in San Diego county, computed by engineers at from 40,000 to 45,000 acres, and which is well adapted to citrus and deciduous fruits and grapes, will be irrigated as a result of the development of the waters of the San Luis Rey and Santa Ysabel rivers, by the construction of the projected Henshaw and Sutherland dams. The newly formed San Diego County Water Company will complete the dams.



The Coolest Place of All.

Ranch kids of the irrigated Southwest find their own uses for water systems in midsummer.

Work on the Henshaw dam, which will primarily impound 163,000 acre feet of water, and will cost about $1,000,000, has already been begun.

The new water company is composed of W. G. Henshaw and officials of the Santa Fe Railroad. The company plans, in addition to irrigating large bodies of land, to deliver to the city of San Diego 10,000,000 gallons of water daily when necessary. Until San Diego needs the water, most of it will be diverted to lands in the San Luis Rey Valley, the Escondido district, the San Pasqual and San Dieguito valleys, and to Bernardo, Richland, Bonsall, Vista, and to districts along the coast from Las Flores to Del Mar, including Encinitas, Oceanside and Carlsbad.

The Henshaw reservoir is to be 107 feet high, and may be made higher should the demand for water be greater in future years. It will impound the waters of the San Luis Rey River just below the Warner Ranch, at a point forty-five miles north and a little east of San Diego. Here the river enters a canyon. The San Luis Rey Valley widens just below the mission into a valley with good soil, averaging about two miles wide for about eight miles, until, when the coast is reached, it narrows to about half a mile wide. A considerable area of hilly land near the coast also will be susceptible of irrigation from the dam.

The San Diego County Water Company has purchased the rights of the company serving Escondido and those of the Volcan Water Company. In the Escondido district 2000 acres of land are now irrigated, but 10,000 more acres will be watered in that district under the present plan. Some of the best grapes are raised in the vicinity of Escondido, and more water for irrigation will make it one of the largest vineyard districts in Southern California.

The other dam project, to be called the Sutherland dam, will be developed on the Santa Ysabel River. It will impound 60,000 acre feet, and will have a drop of 1500 feet, creating 4000 horsepower for use of the farmers and for the city of San Diego. Bernardo is to be the point of distribution for the waters impounded by Sutherland dam. There are small valleys below this point, such as the Santa Maria and Pamo valleys, that will probably profit by the construction of this dam. The San Pasqual Valley will, it is assured, be irrigated by this development.

Below Bonsall, there is a considerable body of land that is annually flooded by the storm waters of the San Luis Rey River, the mouth of which is periodically closed by sand bars, making large areas of marshes. When the Henshaw dam is constructed, it will control these floods, and the flow of the river in rainy seasons will be more orderly, the marshy land will be cleared and planted to crops, and the higher land in the vicinity undoubtedly will be planted to fruits and vines.

Much of the land along the coast from San Juan Capistrano Point to Del Mar consists of low rolling hills and mesas overlooking the ocean, which have ideal air drainage, and a winter climate tempered by the ocean's influence. Thus at Carlsbad, there are hundreds of acres devoted to growing winter vegetables, and this winter vegetable district will probably be extended when the dam is completed, and conduits provide water.

It has been declared by soil experts that the soils of some of the hilly land farther inland are admirably adapted to the growth of citrus fruits, especially Valencia oranges, and the owners of much of the land along the river are reported anxious to develop their holdings by planting fruit trees.

NEED FOR TARIFF CLEARLY PROVEN

In distributing among walnut growers recently a little less than $500,000, which was the final payment on 1921 crop pools, the California Walnut Growers' Association made the surprising statement that less than half of the walnut growers in California made expenses last year, according to W. T. Webber, sales manager of the organization, the business was never before handled at such a low operating cost. The walnut grower, he states, received 96 cents out of every $1 taken in by the sales department.

"It is food for some thought," observes Mr. Webber, "that half the growers fail to make expenses on a crop which brings in a grand total of $8,000,000. This condition was in a large measure due to short crop and poor quality, a result of unfavorable growing conditions, but it goes to show that the walnut industry has grown to such gigantic proportions that anything which affects the crop adversely juggles with the prosperity of thousands of families.

"Had the walnut industry last year had the benefit of such a protective tariff as has just been adopted, importations might not have been so heavy and marketing conditions might have been more favorable, despite the poor quality of the California crop."

Association officials point out that while the last payment went out rather late, the growers received a good share of their 1921 harvest money very early in the season, several payments being made before the midwinter holidays and a $2,000,000 payment being made the week before Christmas.

SHIPPING GRAPES IN IMPERIAL VALLEY

BRAWLEY.—The first grapes were shipped by express the first week in July, about ten days later than usual, on account of the cool spring. The unseasonal weather in March and April, however, resulted in a better quality product, according to I. D. Hale of C. H. Weaver & Co., making the shipment. The grapes were billed to New York, and reports are that the fruit brought 80 cents per pound in the metropolis. Last year the first carload went out July 16, and brought $7000.

This year there are five large vineyards shipping grapes, instead of two, as formerly, and the output will be much larger. Next year a dozen big vineyards will come into commercial bearing, it is expected.

PLANS SHAPING FOR A PERMANENT FAIR

SANTA BARBARA.—County fair plans have been revived in this county. The directors of the County Farm Bureau have named John V. Tracy and Taylor MacDougall of Goleta and Carpinteria, respectively, as a committee to present a proposition to the directors of the Santa Barbara Chamber of Commerce, in which the farm bureau centers of the county offer to co-operate with the chamber in leasing the old race track at Santa Barbara, from the Southern Pacific, and to raise $50,000 for county fair buildings.

A year ago a county fair association was organized for the purpose of buying a fair grounds and putting up buildings, the plan involving an estimated outlay of $450,000. The cost caused abandonment of the movement.

Under the present plans it is believed that the project will go through. All the farmers and business men are back of the project, and believe that the buildings can be completed in time for holding the first annual fair here in the fall of 1923.

STATE'S COTTON ABROAD

ARVIN.—Reports from Czecho-Slovakia, whence Kern county cotton was sent to be manufactured into textiles are that the cotton from this district has been found better than any cotton thus far received by the mills of that country, and but little shorter than Egyptian cotton as to staple. The mills are experimenting with the cotton, mixing it with silk.

PROSPECTIVE purchasers who examine various makes of pumps before making a selection marvel that the Byron Jackson product is able to lead the field not only in quality but frequently crowd even the cheapest from the standpoint of price.

This is not a trade secret. Byron Jackson pumps as well as other products are sold at a fair profit. Through fifty years of operation however this company has accumulated a stock of pump patterns, the most valuable in the world.

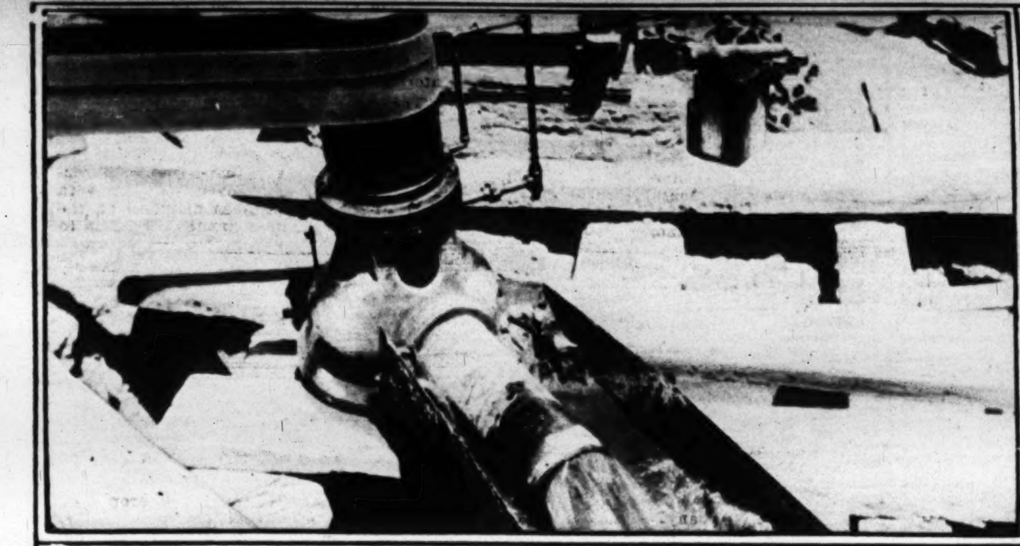
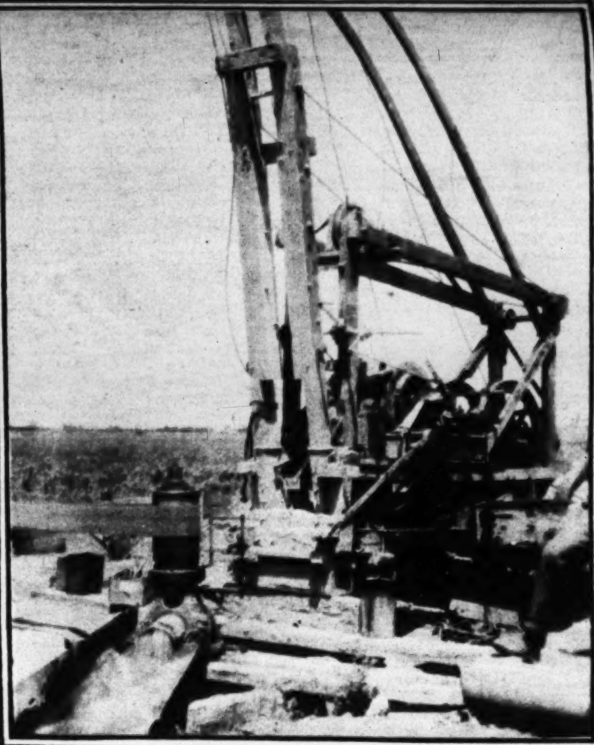
Careful Ranchers Always Test New Wells and Pumps.

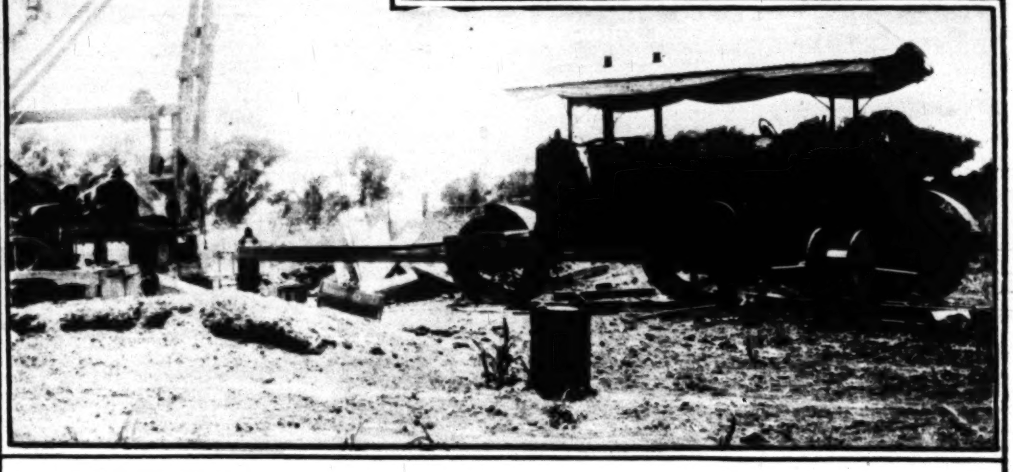


Ranchers installing pumping plants are less and less inclined to trust to luck that everything is all right after the well has been finished. The pump dealers, too, are encouraging them in making tests for determining the amount of delivery and other facts that need to be known. Here is a test pump testing a well before a pump is installed permanently.

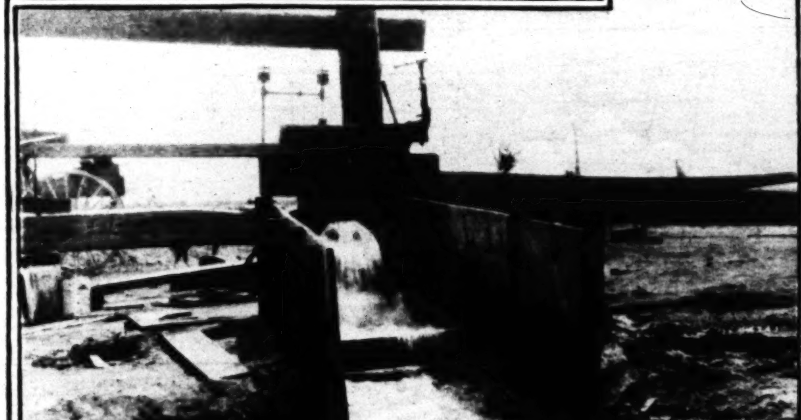


While the well drilling machinery is still on the job is the time to make the all-important well and pump tests.

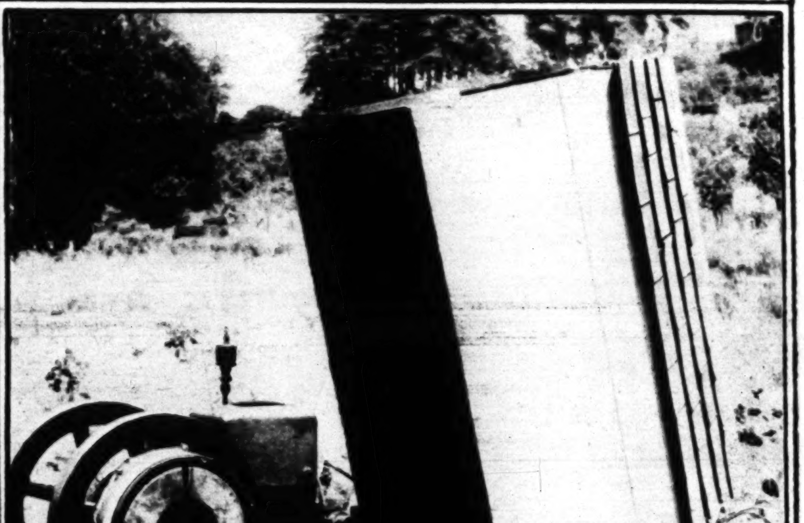
Prof. H. A. Wadsworth of the branch of the University of California College of Agriculture at Davis, is here seen helping a rancher check up a well and pump test.



This big ranch tractor is doing the belt work for a pump test while the drillers and their machinery are still on hand and before the installation of the permanent motive power.



The modern pioneer's first requirement is an engine and pump that will deliver water for his crops, and the importance of keeping his equipment in good condition when he gets going cannot be overestimated.



The owner of this ranch showed good judgment by borrowing the dog's house temporarily for his new pump engine. Machinery that is not properly sheltered from the beginning is bound to suffer an unnecessary deterioration.

The production for 1922, it is estimated, will be at least 25 per cent greater than that for 1921.

Already a shortage of harvest workers the Times Farm and Tractor Section, urged planters to select varieties of peaches that would bring the highest price at the canneries.

THE CANNERIES

Last year 32,000 tons of peaches were handled by the fourteen canneries in operation then, and the output, 350,000 cases, is nearly all sold. This year it is believed by Secretary Cunningham of the Canneries' Association, the output will be 1,000,000 cases more than in 1921.

Suitable Headgates Important in Alfalfa Irrigation

BY H. A. WADSWORTH.

Irrigating alfalfa by flooding.

IN THE irrigation of field crops and alfalfa, the correct design of the headgates used in diverting water from the ditch into the check itself deserves a more careful consideration than it usually receives. To build structures poorly planned with respect to the soil type which is present, and to build structures too light for the head of water to be handled are expensive practices. For unless a structure lasts in its place for at least ten years, the annual depreciation charge is too high to be borne by the ordinarily low-priced crops of the field crop farmer.

On the other hand, excessively heavy structures built of two-inch lumber when one inch would do, or designed with wings ten feet long when five-foot wings would do for the small amount of water to be handled, saddle upon a field a heavy interest charge which is unnecessary.

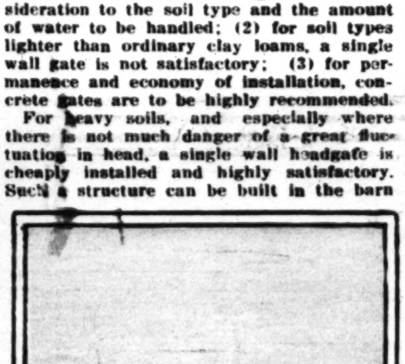
Experience in the San Joaquin Valley, the Imperial Valley and other centers of alfalfa production where large heads of water are available has proven (1) that the structure must be designed with consideration to the soil type and the amount of water to be handled; (2) for soil types lighter than ordinary clay loams, a single wall gate is not satisfactory; (3) for permanence and economy of installation, concrete gates are to be highly recommended.

For heavy soils, and especially where there is not much danger of a great fluctuation in head, a single wall headgate is cheaply installed and highly satisfactory. Such a structure can be built in the barn at odd times and hauled directly to the point of use, where it can be placed in a trench dug in the ditch bank to receive it. The necessity of field carpentering is done away with.



Good stand of alfalfa.

In small sizes the gate is simply made of two pieces of 1x12 inches, perhaps ten feet long, from the center of one of which a 2-foot section has been cut. The two ends of the cut board are then placed above the other and moved in until the opening is 1 foot 10 inches, in place of 2 feet, and braces and cleats nailed on to hold the pieces firmly in this position. The two-foot section is then the right size for the gate and small pieces nailed behind the structure form a slot into which the gate board easily fits. All lumber is No. 1 common redwood. This method of construction and satisfactory dimensions for gates of various capacities are shown on the drawing of a single wall gate. Fig. 1.

It must be constantly remembered that these gates are unsatisfactory in light soils. In soil types lighter than a clay loam, such gates are constantly in danger of washing out and only constant vigilance during the irrigation season and careful repair in the winter can make them satisfactory.

For lighter soils and when widely fluctuating heads of water must be provided for, double wall gates should be installed. Such a gate is in reality two single wall gates installed parallel to each other and about three feet apart. Boards are then nailed between them for a floor and sides. The water from the ditch flows through a short section of flume on its trip from the canal to the field and the dangers of washing are minimized. Such a structure is rather expensive, for it requires more than twice the lumber of a single wall gate for the same discharge; it requires considerable field carpentering and the installation cost is high; but when carefully made and conscientiously tamped in place, it will practically eliminate the constant fear of the structure's washing out.

Extreme caution must be used in the installing of gates of these two types. After the single wall gate or one of the sections of the double wall gate has been placed in the trench dug to receive it, the dirt must be carefully tamped back into place. If water is available, puddling the backfilling soil in the trench and tamping it when wet is often resorted to in an effort to still further reduce the danger of washing out. Many alfalfa growers carry water to the fields in tanks for this purpose. A dollar spent in tamping newly set gates in place is worth ten in fighting leaky structures during the first season.

During the period of high lumber prices immediately after the war a concrete gate for alfalfa checks was developed which because of its permanence and low cost of installation per acre has won a place for itself during normal times. Such gates are especially suited for localities where lumber charges are high and where sand and gravel suitable for concrete can be obtained cheaply. The gates are cast in movable, adjustable forms. After the gate is poured, the form is removed by loosening six bolts and set up on the next check, where the operation is reported. A set of six of these forms will keep a crew of three men busy, for newly poured gates set up sufficiently over night to allow for the removal of the forms. The forms can be used over and over until the hard usage they are called upon to stand renders them unfit for further service.

The surprising thing about such gates is that despite their absolute permanence, they are cheaper to build than wooden gates of a similar capacity. Almost exactly half a cubic yard of concrete is necessary for this type of headgate. Three men working together will set three of these gates in a day. Although local prices may vary to some extent, gates of this type and size will cost about $9.70 each. This figure includes material, labor, hire of the team required to haul material and depreciation on the forms. Great care must be used in planning to use these gates, for if poorly located or if the alfalfa planting does not prove to be a permanent venture, the cost of removing such structures is considerable. Blasting must usually be resorted to.

The design of the removable form is shown in figure No. 3 In the installation of this type of gate an opening five feet wide is cut through the levee. Often a slip scraper and two steady horses can be used to advantage in this work. A cross trench must then be dug down through the center line of the levee and parallel with the center line of the canal so that a concrete wall laid in the trench will be placed in the center of the levee and will extend six feet on either side of the center line of the proposed gate location.

When this trench has been dug to the ordinary ground level, the shovel is discarded and the rest of the trench dug with a special tool designed for this use. This tool is similar to an ordinary post-hole digger, but in place of being round is flattened into an egg shape so that a trench only four inches wide, can be dug. Without such a tool, the trench could hardly be less than six inches wide, even with careful digging, and 50 per cent more concrete would be required to fill it.

Concrete of a 1:4 mix is poured in the trench and allowed to harden over night. This forms an apron or cut-off wall four inches thick, fourteen feet long and extending eighteen inches below the grade of the check. A cut-off wall of this size will effectively cut seepage and obviate the danger of the structure washing out. When the first pouring is hard, one of the forms is set up so that the front face is directly over the previously cast cut-off wall and the batter walls extend through the levee into the check. Concrete is then poured in the form and the new gate allowed to set over night before the forms are removed.

Considerable care is required in removing the parts of the form which make the slots into which flash boards fall to form the gate itself. Concrete only eighteen hours old is not hard and haste in removing the small pieces of the form which make the slots may break off part of the green concrete and spoil the gate.

Large scale drawings of any of these gates can be obtained by writing to the irrigation division, branch College of Agriculture, Davis, Cal.

The building, of frame construction, stands on county land, in Santa Barbara, directly across East Anapamu street from the Courthouse. In housing both the bureau and the commission under one roof, the Supervisors propose to bring the two departments into closer touch, and to make business between farmers and orchardists and the departments more convenient. At present the farm adviser is in the Federal Building and the horticultural commissioner in the Courthouse a block away.

Louise Huff, the Famous Actress Tells How to Instantly Beautify The Hands and Arms

"The girl or woman who neglects to beautify her hands and arms (now that short sleeves are in vogue) has only herself to blame if she is passed by unnoticed," says that beautiful actress, Louise Huff. "It only requires a few minutes each day to make your hands and arms beautiful and attractive. With no covering to protect the elbows they become dark and rough and no matter how often they are bathed they look ugly and repulsive. This can be easily and quickly overcome by taking proper care of them. The best way I have found to accomplish this is to soften the elbows with a good cold cream (Liska cold cream I have found to be the best), then wipe off the superfluous cream with soft cloth and apply that popular beautifier, Derwillo, to the hands and arms. This combination instantly beautifies the hands and arms and if you ever try it once you will never be without it." Just make this test: Try Derwillo on one hand and arm and then compare it with the other and you will need no further argument to convince you that there is nothing like it and you would not have missed it for anything. Derwillo comes in three shades, white, flesh and brunette; use white on the hands and arms and the shade you are accustomed to for the complexion. Derwillo gives the skin that youthful appearance every normal woman craves. It puts the blush of a rose on your cheeks and a lily-white baby softness on the hands and arms. It cannot be detected. Derwillo has become a regular fad and over five hundred thousand discriminating girls and women use it in place of face powder as it stays on better and does not rub off on clothing. Perspiration does not affect it and is wonderful for a shiny nose, oily skin, dark, sallow, rough skin, and poor complexion. It's famous for the quick results it gives. The very first application will astonish you. Try it today. It can be obtained at the toilet counter of any up-to-date drug or department store and if your druggist does not carry it he will be glad to order it for you if you will ask him to. Accept no substitutes, then you will not be disappointed.

Note Derwillo and Liska cold cream are sold everywhere with the distinct understanding that if you are not pleased your money will be refunded. They are sold under the above guarantee at toilet counters of all drug and department stores.

THE TEENIE WEENIES.

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

THE GENERAL HAS AN AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT.

BY WM. DONAHEY.

'WAY OUT in the Big Woods there lives a race of little people called the Teenie Weenies. They are called that because they are so small—not any bigger, really, than the thumb on a man's hand. Their houses are not larger than a shoe box—in fact, Chuck Wee, a Chinese Teenie Weenie, has his laundry in a broken teapot with a door cut in the side, as you see in the picture. Among the Teenie Weenies whom the little readers of the Junior Times will get to know very well in these pages are the General, who runs the Teenie Weenie village, the Lady of Fashion, the Dunce, who is a very stupid Teenie Weenie indeed, the Turk, Paddy Pinn, the Old Soldier, the Scotchman and—oh, lots of others. The Teenie Weenies like bright colors and when they are dressed up they look like pieces of a rainbow walking around. The Times would like to have its little friends try every Sunday to color the picture of the Teenie Weenies the way you think they look best. Use your colored crayons, but first read the story all the way through so you will know what the picture is about.

HOW TO COLOR THE TEENIE WEENIES

Make the sky blue, the leaves and grass green, the tree trunks brown, the General's uniform blue with red epaulettes and red socks. The automobile may be made any way you like it—red with yellow wheels, for example. The Lady of Fashion might have on a yellow dress with light blue stockings and a lighter yellow hat. The policeman's uniform is blue with a white helmet and white star. The teapot is brown except on top and around the door and window, which leave white. The Chinaman has a red shirt and blue pants. His laundry bag is green, but darker than the grass. Oh, yes, and make the General's hat red. He likes red. The house in the background can be yellow with a red roof. The little Teenie Weenie running toward the automobile has on a red suit and red hat with blue stockings. If you don't like these colors you can try some of your own. The Teenie Weenies won't care just so long as you make them bright-colored.

Under a big low bush, a little distance from the Teenie Weenie village, stood a queer building. It was made out of cardboard, with many tiny windows near the roof. The windows were fitted with isinglass, which let plenty of light into the place, and at one end of the building was a huge door. The whole building was not much larger than an ordinary paper shoe box, but had one been able to peep through one of the tiny windows he would have seen a most complete machine shop. There were forges, rows and rows of tools, and along one side of the place stood a tiny lathe. A tiny furnace stood near one side of the building.

The Wonderful Stories of OZ

By L. Frank Baum

Tip Manufactures A Pumpkinhead

IN THE Country of the Gillikins, which is at the North of the Land of Oz, lived a youth called Tip. There was more to his name than that, for old Mombi often declared that his whole name was Tippetarius; but no one was expected to say such a long word when "Tip" would do just as well. This boy remembered nothing of his parents, for he had been brought when quite young to be reared by the old woman known as Mombi, whose reputation, I am sorry to say, was none of the best. For the Gillikin people had reason to suspect her of indulging in magical arts, and therefore, hesitated to associate with her.

Mombi was not exactly a Witch, because the Good Witch who ruled that part of the Land of Oz, had forbidden any other Witch to exist in her dominions. So Tip's guardian, however much she might aspire to working magic, realized it was unlawful to be more than a Sorceress, or at most a Wizardess.

Tip was made to carry wood from the forest, that the old woman might boil her pot. He also worked in the cornfields, hoeing and husking; and he fed the pigs and milked the four-horned cow that was Mombi's especial pride.

But you must not suppose he worked all the time, for he felt that would be bad for him. When sent to the forest Tip often climbed trees for birds' eggs or amused himself chasing the fleet white rabbits or fishing in the brooks with bent pins. Then he would hastily gather his armful of wood and carry it home. And when he was supposed to be working in the cornfields, and the tall stalks hid him from Mombi's view, Tip would often dig in the gopher holes, or—if the mood seized him—lie upon his back between the rows of corn and take a nap. So, by taking care not to exhaust his strength, he grew as strong and rugged as a boy may be.

Mombi's curious magic often frightened her neighbors, and they treated her shyly, yet respectfully, because of her weird powers. But Tip frankly hated her, and took no pains to hide his feelings. Indeed, he sometimes showed less respect for the old woman than he should have done, considering she was his guardian.

There were pumpkins in Mombi's cornfields, lying golden red among the rows of green stalks; and these had been planted and carefully tended that the four-horned cow might eat of them in the winter time. But one day, after the corn had all been cut and stacked, and Tip was carrying the pumpkins to the stable, he took a notion to make a "Jack Lantern" and try to give the old woman a fright with it.

So he selected a fine, big pumpkin—one with a lustrous, orange-red color—and began carving it. With the point of his knife he made two round eyes, a three-cornered nose, and a mouth shaped like a new moon. The face, when completed, could not have been considered strictly beautiful; but it wore a smile so big and broad, and was so jolly in expression, that even Tip laughed as he looked admiringly at his work.

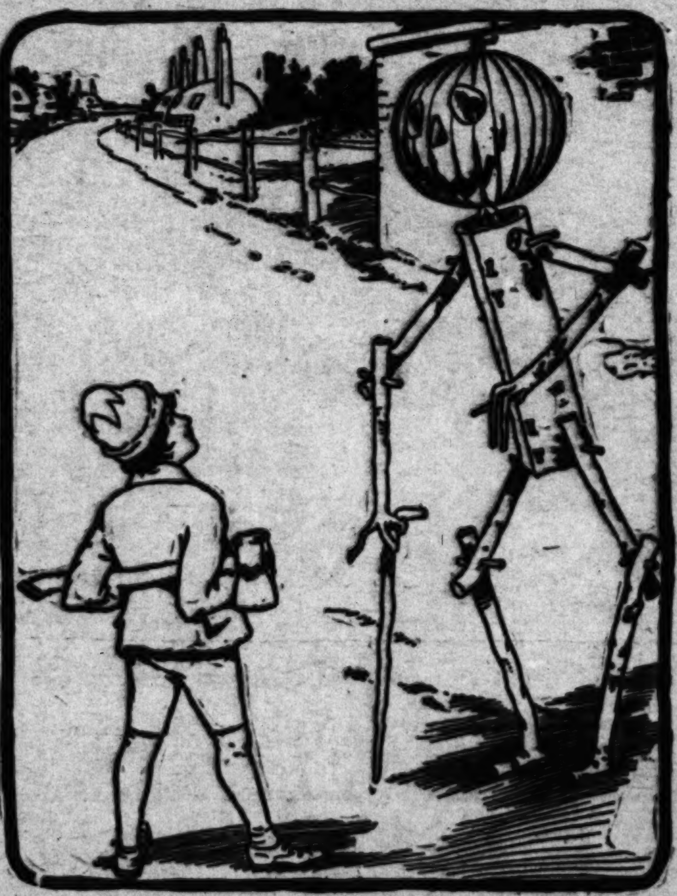
The child had no playmates, so he did not know that boys often dig out the inside of the "pumpkinjack," and in the space thus made put a lighted candle to render the face more startling; but he conceived an idea of his own that promised to be quite as effective. He decided to manufacture the form of a man, who would wear this pumpkin head, and to stand it in a place where old Mombi would meet it face to face.

"And then," said Tip to himself, with a laugh, "she'll squeal louder than the brown pig does when I pull her tail, and shiver with fright worse than I did last year when I had the ague!"

He had plenty of time to accomplish this task, for Mombi had gone to a village—to buy groceries, she said—and was a journey of at least two days.

So he took his axe to the forest, and selected some stout, straight saplings, which he cut down and trimmed of all their twigs and leaves. From these he would make the arms, and legs, and feet of his man. For the body he stripped a sheet of thick bark from around a big tree, and with much labor fashioned it into a cylinder of about the right size, pinning the edges together with wooden pegs. Then, whistling happily as he worked, he carefully jointed the limbs and fastened them to the body with pegs whittled into shape with his knife.

By the time this feat had been accomplished it began to grow dark, and Tip remembered he must milk the cow and feed the pigs. So he picked up his wooden man and carried it back to the house with him.



Tip Stood the Figure Up and Admired It

During the evening, by the light of the fire in the kitchen, Tip carefully rounded all the edges of the joints and smoothed the rough places in a neat and workmanlike manner. Then he stood the figure up against the wall and admired it. It seemed remarkably tall, even for a full-grown man; but that was a good point in a small boy's eyes, and Tip did not object at all to the size of his creation.

Next morning, when he looked at his work again, Tip saw he had forgotten to give the dummy a neck, by means of which he might fasten the pumpkin-head to the body. So he went again to the forest, which was not far away, and chopped from a tree several pieces of wood with which to complete his work. When he returned he fastened a cross-piece to the upper end of the body, making a hole through the center to hold upright the neck. The bit of wood which formed this neck was also sharpened at the upper end, and when all was ready Tip put on the pumpkin head, pressing it well down onto the neck, and found that it fitted very well. The head could be turned to one side or the other, as he pleased, and the hinges of the arms and legs allowed him to place the dummy in any position he desired.

"Now, that," declared Tip, proudly, "is really a very fine man, and it ought to frighten several screeches out of old Mombi! But it would be much more lifelike if it were properly dressed."

To find clothing seemed no easy task; but Tip boldly ransacked the great chest in which Mombi kept all her keepsakes and treasures, and at the very bottom he discovered some purple trousers, a red shirt and a pink vest which was dotted with white spots. These he carried away to his man and succeeded, although the garments did not fit very well, in dressing the creature in a jaunty fashion. Some knit stockings, belonging to Mombi and a much worn pair of his own shoes completed the man's apparel, and Tip was so delighted that he danced up and down and laughed aloud in boyish ecstacy.

"I must give him a name!" he cried. "So good a man as this must surely have a name. I believe," he added, after a moment's thought, "I will name the fellow 'Jack Pumpinhead!' "

[Next Sunday's story—Mombi, who has just secured from a wizard magic powder which brings to life anything it touches, tests this powder on the pumpkin-headed man which Tip has put in the road to scare her. Jack Pumpinhead comes to life, but Mombi cannot forgive Tip, so brews some concoction which will turn him into a statue when he drinks it. But Tip is a smart boy, and you will see whether or not he ever takes this potion. —Ed Times.]

"JUNIOR TIMES" MAKES BOW TO YOU TODAY

This is the First Number of Weekly Magazine for Boys and Girls; to be Regular Feature

Boys and girls, permit us to present to you The Junior Times!

This is the first number of a weekly magazine for young folks, to appear regularly hereafter as a part of the Sunday issue of this journal.

While it is primarily intended for the amusement of the younger members of the family, the Junior Times hopes to find friends as well among the grown-up boys and girls who have not forgotten how to play.

The Times has searched the country for the best juvenile features obtainable. In those appearing on these pages and others to follow it believes that it has found them.

Every week the Junior Times will provide as much wholesome fun as can be crammed into eight pages for boys and girls of all ages. The features selected cover as wide a range as possible.

Added to them will be lots of things of interest to young people from right here in Los Angeles. The juvenile department of the Public Library, the Boy Scouts, the city playground department, the Woodcraft League, and other organizations for boys and girls will all help to make The Junior Times a success. Its own readers will be asked to contribute, to suggest, to criticise. This is YOUR magazine, not ours. We want to put into it what you want—not what we think you ought to want.

Here are some of the things The Junior Times will start off with: On its front page today are Donahey's inimitable Teenie Weenies, the most famous juvenile characters since Palmer Cox's Brownies. The Teenie Weenies are little bitsa people, but they have a lot of surprising things happen to them.

By all odds the most popular fairy stories of the modern day are the Tales of Oz, by L. Frank Baum. Everybody remembers the Wonderful Wizard of Oz. With this issue begins a new series of Oz stories by Mr. Baum. They are the best yet.

What Mr. Baum is to fairy tales, Dan Rudolph is to toys. Mr. Rudolph will make for The Junior Times a brand-new series of mechanical cutouts—pictures in pieces which you paste on thin cardboard, cut out with scissors and put together according to the careful directions printed on the page. Then by a little lever on the back you can make the pictured animal or doll or clown go through the most life-like and comical antics you ever saw. Don't fail to try the cutout on the third page of this issue.

Everybody likes magic, grown-ups as well as boys and girls. The Junior Times will print every Sunday full, illustrated directions for doing easy but mystifying tricks with matches, buttons, cards, coins, etc.

Dickey, who draws pictures for the Saturday Evening Post, and other national magazines, will also draw for The Junor Times. If you are not acquainted with Dickey's dogs, turn quick to page 4 and see them. This is an all-dog comic, and will appear every week.

The Ink Bottle is another cutout, but on a different plan from these of Mr. Rudolph. Save your Ink Bottle cutouts—they make a dandy puzzle game when you have a few sets.

Did you ever see a normal, healthy boy, who didn't like to get out in the barn with a hammer and saw and a few nails and make things? Neither did we. So the Junior Times has engaged Frank Solar to write a series of illustrated pieces telling just how to make the kind of things that every boy wants to make. They are practical, useful things, too, and they will last.

Privately and just between ourselves, we think the Fun Maker is almost the best thing in the Junior Times. It starts off today with full directions by which the boys of any neighborhood can put on a real for-sure circus, with an elephant, a trick mule, a snake charmer, a strong man, an educated ape, a tattooed lady, acrobats, Wild West show, clown carnival, chariot race 'n'everything you ever saw in a real circus—or pretty near, anyhow. There will be be two more circus articles next Sunday and the next. Start now to get your stuff together. Get the next two articles and go to it! You'll have a circus you can charge the oldsters a dime or two bits admission to and give them their money's worth, too. And a hatful of dimes means a lot to a baseball nine or a boys' club right now! The Fun Maker will not stop with the circus. He has a lot of other things up his sleeve that are just as good.

However, we're not going to tell you everything there will be in the Junior Times. Just get it for yourself and see. One thing we'll promise—it will be worth the money.

SEEDS IN A BAD FIX

Having helped his mother plant the seeds and place at the end of each row the pictured envelope showing here a radish, there a beet, and so on, little Edwin was quite distressed when he went out next day and found that the rainstorm had washed the envelopes off into the mud.

"Never mind, dear," comforted his mother, "it really doesn't matter."

"But, mamma," said the child, greatly worried, "how will the little seeds know what to be when they come up?"

MAKE TOM, THE PIPER'S SON, RUN

Here is Tom, the Piper's son,
With a bit of string
You can make him run.
And unless he runs away

He'll dance if you play a

Mount the parts of the figure on cardboard. Color the hat and buckles yellow and the checks in the suit blue. Make the trimming, tie and the ribbon on the hat orange. Stripe the stockings with gay colors. Now cut out and with strong thread fasten the figure together as in the little sketch. One piece of thread fastens the arms to the body and another connects the legs and body. Tie a piece of elastic to a string and run through the figure at the point marked "x." Fasten the end of the elastic to a chair or something solid and by holding the end of the string you can make the figure run or dance.

The many little Mother Goose rhymes, of which "Tom, the Piper's Son" is one, were not written by Mother Goose at all originally. They were composed by a Frenchman named Charles Perrault, who lived in the latter part of the Seventeenth Century. He had children of his own, and they delighted in getting him to tell them stories. After a while, when he was an old man, it occurred to him that other children might like to hear his stories too, so he wrote them down and dedicated the book to the royal children of France. In order to make them interesting to these children he pretended that his own youngsters had written the tales.

FOUR SWIMMIN' HOLES

ine, Sanitary Outdoor Bathing Pools Maintained by Los Angeles for Boys, Girls, Grown-ups

BY DUDLEY S. DEGROOT,

wimming Pool Superintendent Los Angeles Playground Department

The playground department of the city of Los Angeles ow has in operation four large outdoor swimming pools and wo indoor ones for the exclusive use of residents of this city nd their children.

In the olden days, when the ids could go down to the "old wimmin' hole" in the Los Angeles iver, or one of the other near- y streams, there was no real need r such things as swimming ools.

SWIMMIN' HOLES GONE

But the city has grown so rapid- that within the last few years l such places have disappeared ntirely. As a result, the play- round department has stepped in, ith the sole aim in view of es- ablishing and maintaining places r good, wholesome play and ecreation, and for swimming for hildren, as well as adults, which ay, in part, at least, make up r the disappearance of these old aunts.

Gradually, under the able su- rvision of C. B. Raitt, who has en at the head of the play- round department ever since its ception, there has been built up fine string of playgrounds roughout the city, where, under e expert supervision of play- round directors, plays and games various sorts have been taught d carried on.

FIRST POOL IS BUILT

It was not until 1918, however, at the playground department nally obtained a really first-class vimming pool. During the sum- er of that year two fine outdoor ools were opened at Exposition ark. Through the courtesy of e park department, a site was rned over to the playground de- artment at the southwest corner the park, Santa Barbara avenue d Menlo street, upon which these o pools were built. A locker- use, one part for men and boys, e other for women and girls, s also erected, and here it was at the present plan and style of tdoor pool, which has been ed by the playground depart- ent throughout the city, was opted.

One pool was used exclusively men and boys, the other for ls and women. The pools im- ediately became so popular that was decided that similar pools ould be constructed in other rts of the city just as soon as nds were available.

n 1920 the North Broadway and royo Seco swimming pools came o existence. They were built on same general scheme as the rlier pools, although many im- ovements were added. Splendid thhouses, with hot-water show- and individual lockers, make pools complete to the last de- ce.

POOLS KEPT CLEAN

The pools average about 150 feet length by 50 feet in width, with greatest depth of 8½ feet and hallowest depth of 1½ feet. The pacity of each pool varies from ,000 to 300,000 gallons. It es from one to four hours to pty each tank and from two to en hours to fill them, varying th the pressure available at the e of filling.

The outdoor pools are open to public from about June 15 to ptember 15 each summer. The ly attendance varies with the mperature, an average crowd at position averaging about 800, at royo Seco 350 and at North oadway 250. On real hot days many as 1200 to 1500 persons accommodated at Exposition rk alone, showing the great pularity of this pool.

Suits and towels are furnished the city at a nominal cost. The n 1920 the North Broadway and andard rate throughout the city each of the pools is as follows:

ge—	Suit.	Towel.	Service.	Total.
years and under.	.05	.05	.00	.10
years and under.	.05	.05	.05	.15
years and over ..	.05	.05	.10	.20

Persons may bring their own ts if they like, although the use city towels is compulsory. Tow- and suits are laundered daily, r each usage, and a large sup- is always kept on hand.

PAY ONLY ACTUAL COST

It is the policy of the Play- und Department to charge the blic only enough to cover the ual cost of operation. By experience, the above prices have been found to just about cover these expenses.

This year the supervision of the pools, as well as the management of each individual pool, has been placed entirely in the hands of men, the majority of whom are still attending college. This at the outset insures active, wide-awake and intelligent management, by men who are willing and anxious to please the public and give service to the fullest extent of their possibilities. They are all young enough so that they have no difficulty in remembering when they were kids themselves, and in remembering, too, the kind of things that kids like to do. They are only too glad to be of any service asked of them by patrons, such as instruction in swimming, diving, life-saving, etc.

KIRKSEY IN CHARGE

At the Expisition Park pools, located at Santa Barbara and Menlo streets, Morris Kirksey is in charge as director. Mr. Kirksey, who graduated from Stanford University this year, is noted for his all-around ability as an athlete and particularly for his ability as a track man. He placed second only to Paddock in the 100 meter dash at the Olympic games at Antwerp in 1920, and for three years was never beaten by anyone, with the exception of Paddock. Under him are three lifeguards, Mr. Butt, who is putting in his second summer at Exposition Park in that capacity; Mr. McMillan, who was last year Director of Arroyo Seco Pool and who is now a student at the Southern Branch of the University of California; Mr. MacIntosh, a Junior at Stanford University and a half-miler on the Stanford track team. These men are all excellent swimmers, life-savers and divers, and are at the service of the patrons of the pools at all times.

WOMEN ARE POPULAR

As clerks we are fortunate in having with us again Mrs. Brown and Miss Ford. Mrs. Brown, who has been clerk at Exposition Pool each summer since its opening, is known by all for her never-failing smile and even temper. Miss Ford, a University of Southern California girl, is her able assistant, and is in her second year with the department. Besides this, on the force we have Mr. Gorham, men's bath attendant, in his second year of service, and Mrs. Hulegarde, in her first year of service as women's bath attendant. None the less important, although seldom seen, is Jim Anderson, the man who cleans the pools and refills them each night. In order that the pools may be open every day, Jim cleans one pool one night and the other one the next night, so that the water and the pool itself may always be clean and sanitary. To do this work he has a large electric lantern, using a 500-watt bulb, mounted on a tripod, which he uses so that he can see to do his work properly.

AT ARROYO SECO

At Arroyo Seco pool Theodore Walther is in charge as director. Mr. Walther is also a Stanford student, now in his senior year. He is a fine all-around athlete, good swimmer, rower and football man, and an honor student as well. Mrs. Whitford is his assistant and clerk, and is liked by all of the kids as well as the older people. She is in her second year with the department. Mrs. Butcher, women's bath attendent, is in her second year of service, and Mr. Maloney in his first year as men's bath attendant, completes the force at Arroyo.

At North Broadway pool Mr. Whiteford, in charge as director, is also a Stanford University senior, and an all-around athlete, particularly at tennis and swimming. Mrs. Burton, in her second year with the department, is acting as his capable assistant. Mrs. Clough, women's bath attendant, in her second year with the department, and Mr. Taylor, men's bath attendant, in his first year, complete the force here.

Mack Pitts cleans each of these pools two nights a week and keeps them in a sanitary condition at all times.

SMALL INDOOR POOL

At the Macy-street school a small indoor pool is under the direction of Mr. Droll, a University of Kansas man, each day from 1 until 7 p.m. No charge is made for the use of the pool. Each person furnishes his or her own suit and towel, although the former is not necessary in the case of the boys.

At the Vignes-street bath-house, corner of Vignes and Ducommun streets, the oldest city bath-house now in use, Mr. Howard, who, during the school year is director of physical education at the Central Intermediate School, handles his hardy gang in a capable manner. Here the boys are not required to wear suits, although suits are furnished to the women free of charge. Charge at this plunge is 3 cents a person, covering the cost of towel and soap.

A FREE LUNCH

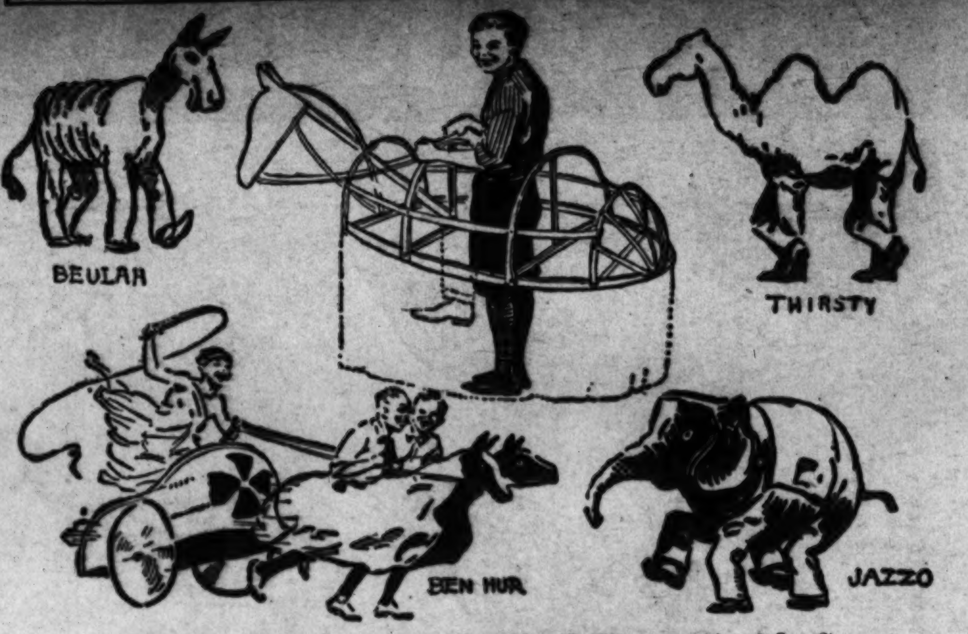
When first I saw the sea's long beach,
All sand, as far as eye could reach,
I said: "If I could stir and bake
What lots of sandwiches I'd make!"

DRESSING UP

Long skirts are lots of fun,
They swish as I run,
And lace ruffles trail beautifully across the grass.
Plumes on high hats nod in the glass.
How very, very tall it feels
To wear kid pumps with high French heels!
While, with this big fan and reticule
I could amaze the girls at school.
For games and climbing, I suppose,
I much prefer my own short clothes.

CROSS PURPOSES

Little Dutch Karl and little French Jean
Had an engagement together to dine;
But feastless they sat, for when Jean said "Oui,"
Poor little Karlie made answer "Nein!"



How to Put on a Neighborhood Circus—Article 1

(This is the first of a series of three articles which give complete instructions for rigging up and putting on a home-made, home-talent "Neighborhood Circus".)

It's a circus, boys and girls!

It's "the biggest show on earth," featuring Jazzo, the Jigging Jiant of the Jungles; Beulah, the Educated Mule; Prof. Weeks, the Strong Man; Lady Eneri, the Snake Charmer; the Clown's Carnival; the Wild West Act—dozens of startling events, worth going miles and miles and miles to see.

Vic Brown of Chicago, one of the big play men of the United States, is the man that worked it out. When he put it on in Chicago and in Newark, N. J., it was such a whooping success that the Fun Maker asked him to tell all about it. So here it is.

This is a home-made, home-talent circus. The boys and girls of a neighborhood can get together and stage it, or it can be staged on the city's playgrounds as the big event of the season. Complete instructions will be published in this newspaper in three articles, of which this is the first.

Make the Menagerie First

Now, to make the menagerie.

The back bone of the circus is the horse. It is hard to get too many horses. They are needed for Wild West acts and chariot races, to haul cages and the band wagon, and for many other special tricks and stunts.

In the center of the picture above is the skeleton of a one-boy-power horse. Once you can make such a horse, you can devise all sorts of other animals.

Use laths and barrel hoops that have been soaked well in water to make them pliable. Nail them together with fine wire nails and staples, very carefully clinched on the under side. Start the job by cutting four cross bars, 1x2 inches, two of them 14 inches long and the other two 18 inches long. Nail the two 14-inch pieces together with two 36-inch laths, making a rectangle 14x36 inches. Spring this out in the center and nail in the two 18-inch pieces. This completes the base of the horse.

Hoops for Ribs

Now, nail to this base, four hoops arched to form half circles, the end ones 8 inches high, the center ones 10 inches high. Two laths nailed lengthwise across these hoops, as shown in the illustration, will hold them firmly in place.

Cut out a solid-wood horse's head from a one-inch board. Attach it by means of a neck, as shown above. Cover the animal with some sort of cloth hide, using colored robes, and the one-boy-power horse is done.

But the big animals, the camels, giraffes, and elephants, and especially "JAZZO, the Jigging Jiant of the Jungles," must be two-boy-power. Make light-weight frames, that are strong enough to stand considerable straining. These are suspended from the boys' shoulders by straps attached on the inside.

How to Make "Jazzo"

Jazzo's backbone, for instance, should be a straight-grained piece of light pine, 1x2 inches, and 9 feet long. His ribs are big hoops from 40 to 55 inches in diameter. His wire-framed ears, his trunk, and his tail can all be moved by inside strings and sticks. Jazzo can do truly wonderful tricks, for he is "manned" by two boys that can clog dance in unison.

Devise other animals. Half the fun of the whole thing is figuring out how to make the trained lions, tigers, bears, and the other more ferocious animals that can be safely seen only when kept in wooden cages on small wagons.

Make a number of good stout chariots. Use strong wheels, and don't make them too narrow or they will upset; 30 inches is about the right width.

Clip this article out. Start working on the animals. The next article tells all about the side-shows and special acts.

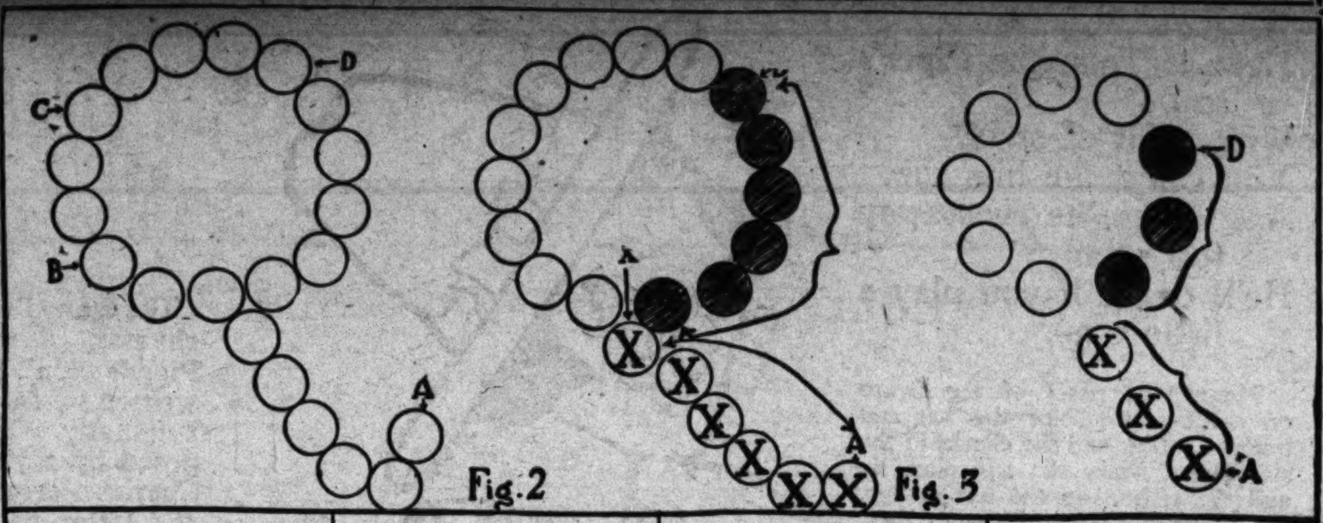
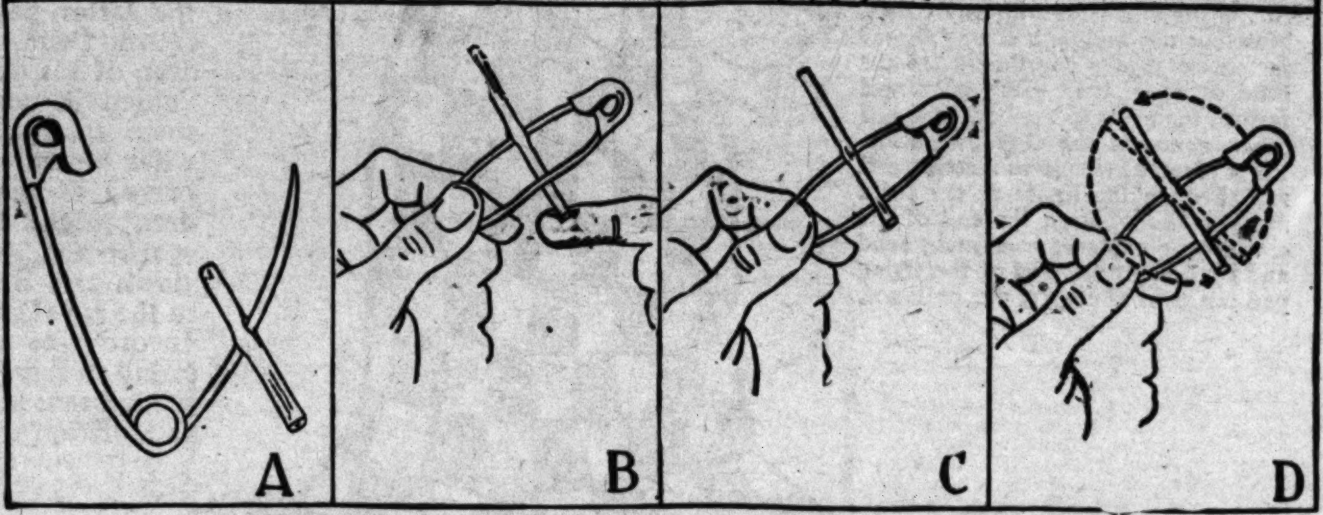
EASY MAGIC YOU CAN DO



THE MYSTIC Q



SOLID THROUGH SOLID

THE MYSTIC Q

Take a number of checkers, pennies, cards or matches, and lay them in the form of a Q, as shown in Fig. 1. Tell any one to start at the tail of the Q and count up the tail and around the circle to the left, as far as he chooses. Then, starting with the checker he stopped on, he is to count back around the circle in the opposite direction, counting the same number of checkers.

For example, the spectator counts from "A" to "B," which is nine checkers (Fig. 2.) Then he counts back from "B" to "D," which is also nine.

The method of counting is first explained by the performer, but the actual counting is done while his back is turned. Upon looking at the checkers the performer immediately picks out the one upon which the spectator finished, namely "D."

The trick is repeated indefinitely with different numbers of checkers being used each time; nevertheless the performer is always successful.

The secret is extremely simple but produces a puzzling effect that baffles the keenest spectator.

The spectator will always finish on the same checker, no matter what number he chooses. For example, had he chosen to count twelve instead of nine, he would have counted from "A" to "C." Then, starting with "C" and counting back around the circle, twelve would have brought him to "D," the same checker he reached when he used the number nine.

But how does the performer know the checker upon which the counting will terminate? Note Fig. 2. The performer merely counts from the point "X," around the circle to the right, the same number of checks as the tail of the Q contains. There are six checkers in the tail (designated by X marks.) From point "X" to "D" there are six checkers (shaded.) Thus the performer can tell on which checker the counting will terminate as soon as the Q has been laid down.

Of course a repetition of the trick might serve to disclose the secret, as the spectator would notice that the counting ended on the same checker each time. This drawback can be easily overcome, however, by rearranging the Q after each demonstration, shortening or lengthening the tail, which will put the final checker "D" at a different point each time. (Note Fig. 3.)

SOLID THROUGH SOLID

A matchstick is impaled on the point of a safetypin, as shown in Fig. "A." The performer holds the safetypin in his left hand as in Fig. "B," and deliberately strikes the end of the matchstick with his right forefinger. The match is knocked right through the steel bar of the safetypin, so that it comes into the position shown in Fig. "C." Time and again the trick is repeated, with an almost uncanny effect, a seeming impossibility being accomplished under the very eyes of the observers. If so desired the performer can let the spectators knock the matchstick through the bar of the pin themselves, which they do successfully, but with no idea how they managed to do it.

The trick is exceedingly simple and can be learned in a few minutes' practice. It depends upon an optical illusion that completely deceives the quickest eye.

The match does not actually pass through the steel rod of the pin. It does, however, pass from the position shown in Fig. "B" to that of Fig. "C." But it makes the trip backward. Fig. "D" illustrates the actual course taken by the match.

By merely striking the match a quick, sharp blow it does the trick. The match rebounds from the bar of the pin and makes the reverse trip with amazing rapidity until it strikes the bar from the other side. The upward movement of the right forefinger and the quick swing of the matchstick complete the deception and the effect is that the bit of wood actually penetrated the steel rod of the pin.

The illusion is so deceptive that it fools the performer himself. Even when one knows the secret he is unable to detect it.

Before demonstrating this scientific novelty the head of the match should first be broken off and a bit of the bottom of the match should also be broken, so that both ends appear the same. The ends of the match change places when the trick is done, hence they should correspond exactly. The match must also be pierced exactly at the center.

An even better effect may be obtained by using a piece of wood a little longer than a match and a little thicker than a leadpencil. A small hole is first bored in the center of the wood, which should fit tightly on the pin. With such an apparatus at his disposal, the performer may repeat the trick many times without breaking the wood, whereas the matchstick is liable to break after a few demonstrations.

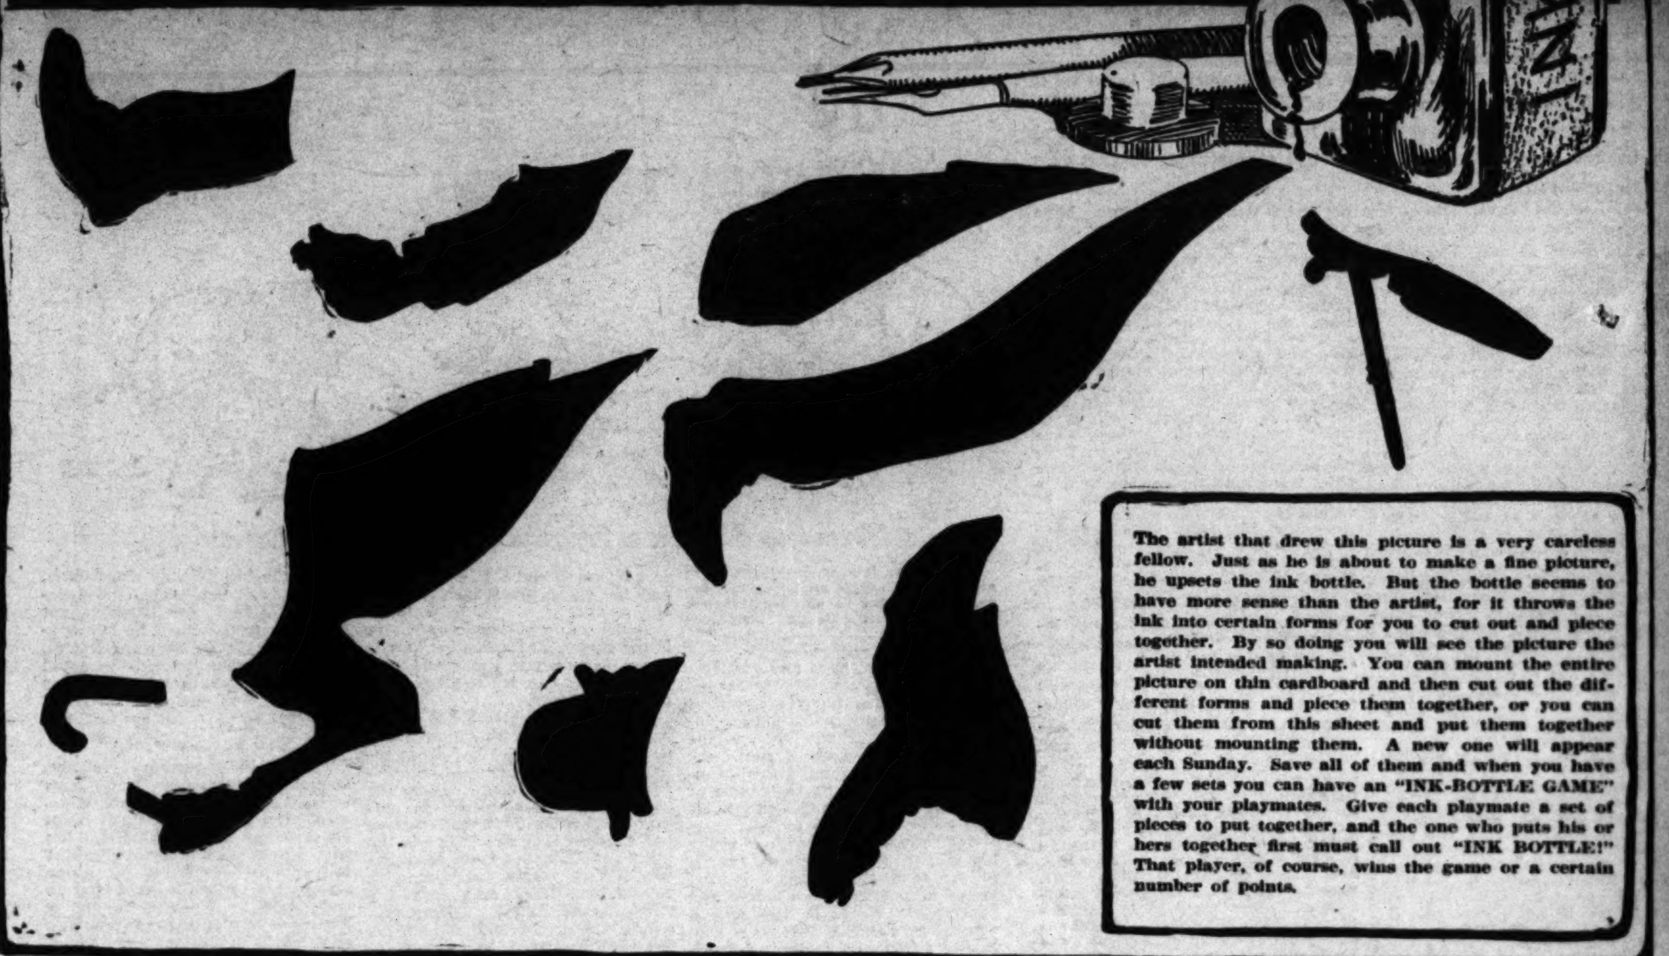
The Ink Bottle



The artist that drew this picture is a very careless fellow. Just as he is about to make a fine picture, he upsets the ink bottle. But the bottle seems to have more sense than the artist, for it throws the ink into certain forms for you to cut out and piece together. By so doing you will see the picture the artist intended making. You can mount the entire picture on thin cardboard and then cut out the different forms and piece them together, or you can cut them from this sheet and put them together without mounting them. A new one will appear each Sunday. Save all of them and when you have a few sets you can have an "INK-BOTTLE GAME" with your playmates. Give each playmate a set of pieces to put together, and the one who puts his or hers together first must call out "INK BOTTLE!" That player, of course, wins the game or a certain number of points.

TEENIE WEENIES

and here nails, pins and other scrap metal were melted down and molded into various shapes.

Signs hung all about the place, warning curious Teenie Weenies to keep out, but they were really not needed, for the doors were always kept tightly locked and it was quite impossible to see through the windows. Everything was most mysterious—even the General was not allowed in the place, and the Turk, the Scotchman, the Old Soldier and Paddy Pinn, who were busy from morning until night in the tiny shop, would not answer a single question. Of course, all the Teenie Weenies were curious, but, having been told to keep away, they were polite and did so. Most of the little folks thought an automobile was being made, and the Dunce was quite convinced it was an automobile when he saw Paddy Pinn and the Turk removing pieces of tin from a tomato can.

"They use tin for the body of the car and for the hood cover," said the Dunce to a group of Teenie Weenies who were discussing the subject.

After many weeks of pounding in the tiny workshop, the Turk announced he would have something of interest to show if they would all gather in front of the shoe house at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Every last Teenie Weenie was on hand long before the appointed time, and exactly at 2 o'clock a most wonderful little automobile dashed up with the Turk at the steering wheel.

"General," said the Turk as he stepped out of the car, "it occurred to several of us that you are a mighty busy man and that you ought to have a car to carry you around about your duties. So we have built this sixty-mouse-power car for you."

The blushing General was so overcome he could hardly make a speech of thanks. After he had thanked the Teenie Weenies for their kindness in a pretty speech, he was bundled into the machine and driven around the rose bush on a trial spin. It took him several days to learn how to drive the car, and finally he considered himself a good-enough driver to ask the Lady of Fashion out for a ride.

The two little people had a lovely long ride, and everything went well until they were almost in front of the shoe house, after their trip, when something happened.

The front wheel of the car ran over a hickory-nut shell, which jerked the steering wheel out of the General's hands. The little fellow got excited and, instead of putting his foot on the brake, he stepped on the gas. The tiny car shot out for the old teapot where the Chinaman lived, pulling along a clothesline which had just been hung with a fresh washing.

The poor Chinaman, who was returning from the hospital with a bag of soiled clothes, was just able to jump out of the way when the car smashed into the laundry with a loud crash. The Lady of Fashion and the General were thrown out of the car, but luckily neither of the little folks was hurt outside of a few bruises. The car was pretty badly damaged, however. The front bumper was broken, the radiator was badly damaged and the crank was broken off.

The damaged car was soon towed back to the shop, where repairs were made, and in a few days it was in first-class shape again.

Full Bloom

Little Mary was visiting her grandmother in the country for the first time.

Everything was new to her and she spent hours running about the big garden.

Once she chanced upon a peacock, a bird she had never seen before. After gazing in silent admiration, she ran back into the house and cried out:

"Oh, granny, come and see! One of your chickens is in bloom!"

Terrible Jimmy

Jimmy, somewhat of a braggart, was telling his father and mother of his experiences while out camping.

"And all at once I stepped right on a big rattlesnake," he began.

"How did you know it was a rattlesnake, Jimmy?" asked his father, skeptically.

"I could hear its teeth chattering the minute it saw me."

AND HERE'S HOW YOU MAKE IT

The fighting parrots is an amusing toy, a good construction problem, and makes an ideal gift for a child.

No special tools are needed for the construction unless dowel rod stock is not available. In that case a dowel block with which to make your own rods will be a convenience, although the rods may be planed and sandpapered to shape if care is taken.

Parts A and B are laid out on wood by means of one-half inch squares. Trace the outlines through these squares and then cut the figures out carefully with a coping saw. Smooth holes in the two parts must be accurately located. In order to get them bored straight through the wood, bore first from one side and then when the hole is made half through the wood, bore from the other side of the stock. These holes receive the dowel sticks that hold the parts together. The dowels should fit parts B and C snugly, but A should move freely on the dowel which supports it.

Part C needs no explanation. Simply saw and plane the wood to the required dimensions and then sandpaper it well.

Bore a small hole in each parrot near the bill, to receive a string by which the toy is operated.

The assembling is the next step. Brads or small screws are used to fasten the various parts of C together. Glue the dowels into C. Place A in position. Then glue the dowels into B. There should be a little play between A and the other parts, but only enough to insure ease of operation.

Paint the toy as suggested in the drawing. Part B, you will note, is painted so that the wing will be completed and also to show the bird's feet. It is not necessary to follow the color scheme I have suggested. Use your own ideas. But in any event, take great care in painting the toy.

Tie a string to each bird as shown. The strings should be seven feet long from the point where they join to the shingle which is tied to them.

The hardest task in a young mother's day

IN the young mother's schedule nothing recurs with more annoying regularity than the daily washing. Most stupendous of all this are the mountains of diapers.

No way has yet been found to save a mother all the work of washing diapers, but there is a way of saving her the hardest part.

Tomorrow, or the next time you wash diapers, do them this way: Let them soak for an hour or more in big, lasting suds of Rinso and lukewarm water. Then rinse thoroughly, getting all the soap out.

Rinso is a new kind of soap—so pure and perfectly balanced that it gets diapers spotlessly clean without rubbing. The mild Rinso suds soak the dirt right out of the fabric without weakening a single fibre.

Don't wash diapers the long, hard way another time. Save yourself the wearisome rubbing which is such a drain on a young mother's strength.

Rinso is made by the makers of Lux—the largest soap makers in the world. It comes in two sizes—the regular size and the big new package. Get Rinso today—at grocery and department stores everywhere. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

ADOHR CERTIFIED GUERNSEY MILK

THE RECOGNIZED STANDARD FOR QUALITY

Adohr milk is produced under the supervision and control of the Los Angeles County Medical Association. Our record for continuous high scores has never been equalled in the United States.

Guernsey milk has a rich, mellow, seasoned taste; the cream column is a deep golden color and the milk is yellow even below the cream line. It is richer in butter fat than ordinary milk, as well as protein, which is the substance that is essential to growth, development, health and repair of tissues, especially in children.

Adohr milk is raw Guernsey milk from healthy tested cows, milked by medically examined employees in modern, spotlessly clean barns and sealed in the bottle within a few minutes after being drawn from the cow. As soon as the milk is bottled it is packed in ice, where it remains until delivered at your home. All equipment used in producing Adohr milk is sterilized and the bottles are thoroughly washed and then sterilized at 300 degrees temperature.

THE JOY OF LIVING

morning. But it's washed out. I've lost it. And now I'm adrift."

Billy was perplexed. He had been wholly unable to place Aimee. He wondered if she were a governess. A question was on his lips, but he checked himself for fear of giving offense.

"Lost it?" he exclaimed. "I guess it's just as well! You look a heap happier! Dud job, eh?"

"Ghastly! And sentiment by the bucketful!"

"Huh!" said Billy, with a shudder. "You'll want a change after that. What job d'you think of chasin'?"

"I—I don't know."

Billy looked at her eagerly. A sudden flash came into his eyes, as one who conceives a superb idea.

"Say! Let me find you one! I've a brainwave!"

"What do you mean?"

"Go shares with me!"

"Shares?" echoed Aimee. She was conscious of a curious little thrill. "Share what?"

"See here!" said Billy, eyeing her keenly. "When we were doing fifty-five on the Sphinx, you never wilted—never turned a hair!"

"Of course not. It was gorgeous!"

He came nearer, intensely earnest.

"Know anything about motor engines?" he said quickly.

"I've often taken down the old 'bus at home, on a wet day, and reassembled it."

"Where was that?"

"At the place where I had a job," said Aimee.

"Great!" he cried. "You're the thing I've been looking for all these months. I've been thinking of a man, but you're just as good. Better! Now, listen to the brainwave. I'm over here to sell the Sphinx. There's a big deal on in London. But what I want's a quiet spot where I can develop some of the gadgets with no crooks around to steal 'em. Get me?"

"Yes, go on," said Aimee, catching his enthusiasm.

"I'm heading now for a little town called Stanhoe, thirty miles south of here. Stanhoe's quiet as the tomb. I've struck it before. There's an old mill I b'lieve I can get hold of, and fit up as a garage and workshop—"

"Yes, I see!" said Aimee eagerly.

"Come on into it with me—come to Stanhoe!" said Billy explosively. "You'll catch on to the Flying Sphinx in a minute, an' then popularise her as a lady's mount! The finest mount for a girl ever put on the market. There isn't one yet. You can do it! You've got the nerve—an' the grit! I'll teach you to tend an' drive her. Is it a go?"

"Go!" said Aimee, dizzily. She was carried away by the splendor of the idea. "Well, but how—"

"There's money in it. And better than money—fun! Rafts of fun!"

"How about stopping in Stanhoe? You can't pay for me. Oh, well, that doesn't matter!" exclaimed Aimee, carried off her feet. "I've plenty of money—enough for a month. I can—"

"Shucks! All these are business details," said Billy impatiently, with a sweep of his arm. "We can fix 'em any way that suits you. Never fog up a great idea with details. Will you come?"

"Will a duck swim!" cried Aimee. "Of course I'll come!"

"Fine!—partner!" cried Billy, flinging out a big brown hand.

Aimee took it, and received a shake that bruised her fingers.

"Take your perch, old chap!" said Billy, straddling the Sphinx. "Off for Stanhoe!"

They whirred down the long slope with the westering sun broad on their right above the fir trees. It was a roughish ride on the carrier. There was no pillion-seat: Billy was evidently not accustomed to carry passengers.

"Say," said Billy, over his shoulder. "I didn't catch your name, did I?"

"Aimee—Snooks," replied the passenger on the spur of the moment, as well as she could for the wind whistling in her teeth.

"Snooks!"

Aimee laughed. It was very like Scroope, and quiet as musical.

"Near enough!" she gasped. "But 'Old chap' will do. Is that American?"

"American? Gee, no! It's the only English I know. Let it go at that—Amy is too feminine for a partnership. And now we'll let her out. This," said Billy joyously, as he opened the throttle wide, "is what the doctor ordered!"

The Flying Sphinx, freighted with the passengers, coasted down the hill and devoured the miles to Stanhoe.

On the outskirts of the little market town of Stanhoe was a cyclists' rest house. Here the two travelers had tea under a laburnum tree on the lawn. Billy locked the amazing motorcycle in a shed, by the proprietor's leave, and the pair walked into the town on foot.

"I guess we don't want to parade the Sphinx in Stanhoe itself," remarked Billy. "She gets such a crowd rubbering at her when you leave her on the roadway. You don't mind walking in? It'll be night soon, an' we've got to find reservations somewhere."

"Can we put up at the mill?" inquired Aimee innocently.

"Why, no. There's nothing at the mill yet, except rats. But I saw a dinky looking little inn last time I was through; the sort you read about in English novels. Probably, Dr. Johnson's got his name carved on the paneling. We'll get rooms there all right."

Aimee received the suggestion with perfect equanimity.

Two more utterly insouciant and carefree young people never entered an English village on an April day. No jot of doubt, of fear, or hesitation assailed them. Billy, intensely masculine though he was, appeared to be possessed of a virgin mind. Such a thing, though uncommon, is by no means nonexistent among the sons of Adam. It may be that the air of the Colorado foothills favors its growth. His possession of it called for no comment from Aimee. Her mind was of the same order.

They approached the sober portals of the old King's Head, in the sleepy market square. As they did so the landlady, a tall and angular female, appeared in the doorway. Billy, who for once was wearing his cap, lifted it to her.

"Can we get rooms here?" he said cheerfully. "We'll be staying a few days."

The landlady folded her arms, caressing either elbow with the other palm, and inspected the pair. She did not retreat from the doorway.

"Yes, I think so," she said somewhat slowly. "May I ask what name, sir?"

"Mr. William Spencer," said Billy, "and—"

"Mrs. Spencer?" added the landlady.

"Shucks!" said Billy, startled. "What are you giving me?"

The landlady's gimlet eye traveled to Aimee's left hand, and fixed itself there.

"I see. You are Mr. Spencer's sister, of course?"

Aimee collapsed in a merry peal of laughter, and glanced at Billy. The landlady's eye froze.

"You will find," she said, staring icily over their heads, "no accommodations in this house!"

The door closed in their faces.

Billy and Aimee, left alone in the porch, stared at each other in complete bewilderment.

"What on earth has stung her?" said Billy wonderingly.

"Goodness knows. I suppose she didn't like my looks. Of course, I'm a bit dusty."

"Dusty!"

"I know what it is," said Aimee, with inspiration, "we've no luggage, and the old frump thought we might clear out without paying."

"Well, it's got me beat!" said Billy impatiently, as they moved away. "Are there many like her around these parts?"

"Oh, you meet people like that everywhere," said Aimee. "I'm always running up against them."

It did not enter into their heads for a moment that anybody could put a dubious construction on their association with each other. Had such an idea dawned, they might possibly have turned and parted company on the spot. Instead, the rebuff drew them closer together.

"This has sort of soured me on Stanhoe," grumbled Billy.

"Don't let's be beaten," said Aimee. "Think of the mill and the garage." She left him suddenly and addressed an inquiry to an elderly man who stood beside a farmer's cot. In a moment she rejoined Billy.

"Mrs. Sunning, 2, Ivy Cottage, lets lodgings," announced Aimee triumphantly. "You don't mind lodgings, do you? Better than a hotel—more freedom."

"Freedom for mine!" said Billy. "Let's try it!"

Ivy Cottage proved to be a pretty little Jacobean building fronting on a green lane just outside Stanhoe. It was divided into two abodes, with a laurel hedge and a garden common to both, bright with alyssum and daffodils. An apple-cheeked woman, who was picking weeds out of the path, approached, introduced herself as Mrs. Sunning, and Billy at once stated his needs, offering to pay in advance.

"Why, yes, sir," she said, smiling, with a civil bob to Aimee. "I've a nice sitting room and a li'l bedroom; Mrs. Dale, next door, has another, if you can do with that?" Mrs. Dale appeared, and confirmed the offer. Both of them looked at the pair with smiling interest and wonder.

"Great!" said Billy. "You take the room here, old chap, and I'll take the other. We'll share the parlor."

Aimee accompanied Mrs. Sunning indoors; the little parlor was clean and cosy, the bedroom, upstairs at the back, tiny but clean. She expressed her satisfaction, and at once invaded the other house.

"What are your quarters like, Billy?" she said. "No reason why I should bag the best half." Aimee inspected his bedroom, found it very like her own, and suggested some alterations.

Billy waved them aside.

"It will do me fine!" he said. "I'll join you as soon as I've washed. You might order some grub; that tea was mighty light."

Aimee returned and made her toilet, descended to the parlor and ordered a meal. Mrs. Sunning acquiesced in everything.

"He's a wunnerful pleasant gentleman, Mr. Spencer," she remarked, and then, hesitating and reddening, she looked at Aimee. "I—I suppose, miss," she said with much embarrassment, "it's all right?"

Aimee stared.

"All right? How?" she said. "Everything's all right. Very much so!"

The woman's eyes betokened belief—and relief.

"Bless your pretty face, who'd think anything else?" she said. "You'll excuse my askin', miss. You see, Lady Erythea is my landlord, and she owns all Stanhoe."

Aimee felt a galvanic shock.

"Whom did you say?" she asked dazedly.

"Lady Erythea Lambe of Jervaulx Abbey, the big place half a mile south the cross roads. She fare wunnerful strict, she do. It's as much as my tenancy's worth to have any goings-on here. That's all."

The woman left the room. Aimee stared round her blankly, then collapsed into a chair. She flung her arms across the table, buried her head in them, and broke into paroxysms of impish laughter.

"Oh, my Christian aunt!" she sobbed. "My Georgie! My Alexander!"

Her shoulders were still shaking wildly when Billy came in.

"Say, what's wrong?" he exclaimed in alarm, as Aimee raised a tear-stained face. "Crying—eh? No, laughing! That's good! That's the cure for sentiment! But what's the joke?"

"Just something I thought of, that's all," said Aimee, wiping her eyes.

"That's all right," said Billy imperturbably. "Guess I ain't inquisitive. But folks mostly tell me their troubles sooner or later."

"I suppose they do," said Aimee, regarding him thoughtfully.

Mrs. Sunning brought an abundant meal; chiefly eggs and tea. Aimee found it the merriest feast she had ever sat down to. Finally, Billy declared he must go and fetch the Sphinx.

He was away so long that Aimee became restless, and wandered out along the roads, being careful to avoid the direction of Jervaulx. Attempting a short cut back in the dark, she promptly lost herself, and arrived at the end of an hour, muddy and scratched with brambles. Billy had returned.

"Partner," he said solicitously, "you look done up."

"Me! I'm never tired. I could go on all night."

"You look it, though. I was going to show you a few things, but I suppose I ought to let you turn in. I'm sleepy, too. We'll tackle it tomorrow. Gee, what a day it will be!" he chuckled. "We'll make things hum!" He held out his hand. "Good-night, old chap!"

Aimee accompanied him to Mrs. Dale's door, and, returning, retired to her own room. She was about to let down her hair, but desisted, and instead sat on the bed for some time, thinking. She heard Mrs. Sunning retire, and presently silence reigned throughout the house.

A curious sense of loneliness crept over Aimee's spirit. She remained sitting for nearly half an hour. Presently she blew out the candle, and leaned out of the open window. The window of Billy's room at the other end of the building was in darkness. It had not taken Billy long to retire.

"Billy!" she murmured thoughtfully. "Old chap!"

She laughed gently.

"He isn't a frump, anyhow!"

The reverie took shape. Then, with a lit- [illegible] the door cautiously, she found it locked, and the latch [illegible]. Also no key was visible. She realized she was locked in the house.

A feeling of intense annoyance seized Aimee. Where was the freedom she had sought? She returned to her bedroom, put on her shoes, leaned out of the window, and inspected the wall critically. It was covered with ivy and trellis-work.

She swung herself cautiously out on to the sill, and began very quietly to descend the trellis. An owl hooted derisively as it winged by. Aimee, active and long-limbed, could climb like a cat. And as noiselessly as any member of that great feline tribe, she dropped upon the soft soil of the garden plot.

To Miss Rita Deming

THIS is a reply to a letter written to us by Miss Rita Deming. But, you all, who are members of the Congregation, as Rita is, and who say your prayers morning and every evening as she does, may read the reply, also, if you care to do so.

And those who are not really members of the Congregation—because they do not say their prayers, but who read this page just the same—may, too, read this. It is not a personal letter, exactly, although it is to Rita. And we are sure she will not mind who reads what we now have to say.

Rita is 12 years old, and folks who are 12 years old are wise and considerate and kind. Besides, Rita has a yellow cat. And anybody who has a yellow cat and pays attention to it, knows a lot of things that other folk who have no yellow cat, can never hope to know.

"For a long time," says Rita in her letter to us, "I have been so interested in your stories of your Yellow Cat in the Sunday Times Magazine. Probably because I, too, have a yellow cat which is the wisest cat that ever lived with the exception, possibly, of your Yellow Cat. He is so wise that if he could only talk as your cat does, he could tell what no one has so far been able to tell, why the World War started and why we got into it."

Well, Rita, that's a puzzler, sure enough. It is a puzzler even for a yellow cat, and maybe it would be best for us not to insist that either your yellow cat or ours, try to answer it, just now. Let us wait until they are nearing the end of about their seventh or eighth lives before we ask them.

In the meantime you will be growing up to be a woman. And we want you to resolve that you will do all you can to put a stop to wars. It is a thing that women can do if they make up their minds to it. Once upon a time one good woman—just one good woman alone—saved a city. And the women of the world now, if they will combine, can save the world from war.

Maybe this is pretty deep for you, Rita, and you may have to talk a great deal about it to your yellow cat. But, you will understand it in the end. And when you get so that you can feel what your yellow cat says to you, he will tell you that ever since the dawn in Egypt, and long before that, wars have been murderous follies and nothing else. And that women have always suffered most from them.

And it was very good of you to write such a nice letter to us, Rita, and we thank you very much.

Hollywood

A MEMBER of the Congregation of the Faithful asks us to say a good work for Hollywood. It is a request easy to comply with. It is a pleasure to speak a good word for Hollywood. And this is what we propose to do.

We rise in our place in the synagogue this blessed Sabbath morning to say that there is no lovelier spot in all the world than Hollywood—no town where there are kindlier people. Whoever says anything other than a good word for Hollywood speaks not by the book, and the truth is not in him.

We used to love to go there in the old days and sit with Paul de Longpre while he was painting pictures of marguerites and roses. And to stand on the slopes of the lovely hills in the springtime when the wild flowers made a carpet of the campagna down to the sea. And we can still go there, and enjoy the trip, although Paul de Longpre has journeyed long since to heaven, and the campagna is crowded with the marts of trade and the domes and towers of motion picture studios. It isn't every place in the world that one can sit on a fence and see Charlie Chaplin go by.

And, gosh, if we had taken the advice of a friend of ours who used to be an ink-maker, we would be a rich man now. He advised us to buy a lot in Hollywood that was for sale at the price of $600. And today you couldn't buy that lot for $60,000.

Hollywood is rich and famous and still beautiful. And, this being the case, she cannot hope not to be envied.

Mr. Rockefeller and Happiness

ONE day when we were in the roaring town with the man who plays the phonograph, we found that we had a little spare time. And the man who has the phonograph suggested that we go over to Pershing Square to rest on a bench. Our feet were tired as the dickens walking on those uncharitable and inhospitable stone sidewalks that are as cruel as death to a hill man's underpins.

We will hear some good arguments over there in the park, said the man who has the phonograph. The fellows who hold down those benches claim to settle all the questions of life, he said.

As for ourself, we were not strong for going. We detest arguments. They never settle anything. They are a bore, and they often start a fight. But, we didn't want to act contrary, and so we went.

And on the bench where we managed to get seats, there was an argument going on, to be sure. And to our surprise it was a good argument. And we got deeply interested in it.

The argument was between two men from Kansas City, we think, or maybe from a place near there called Emporia, or something like that. Anyhow, it was from Kansas they were from, although it really is not important where they were from, as far as that goes. The important thing is that it was a good argument.

And the gist of it was that one man contended that if he had Mr. Rockefeller's money he could make a lot of people happy by giving the money to them. And the other man contended that he couldn't make people happy by giving them Mr. Rocekeller's money, or anybody else's money. That with money their stomachs could be filled and their backs covered with clothes and they could have concertinas to play on and buy tickets for the circus, and maybe go into a barber shop and have their finger nails manicured. But that all that wouldn't mean they would be happy.

No doubt, said the man, Mr. Rockefeller makes many people happy, but he doesn't do it with his money, because he can't do it with money. But he can make people happy with a kind word, with sympathy, with gentleness and love, the same as you can. To dispense happiness a man doesn't need to have a bank roll, an oil well, a plumber's shop, a job in the movies, or any other source of vast wealth, said the man on the bench. Happiness is a thing that does not depend on money, and has no connection with it whatever, he said.

By gollies, we said to the man who has the phonograph as we started for home, we are real glad we went with your to Pershing Square.

An Orchard.

Good is an Orchard, the Saint saith,
To meditate on life and death,
With a cool well, a hive of bees,
A hermit's grot below the trees.

Good is an Orchard; very good,
Though one should wear no monkish hood.
Right good, when Spring awakes her flute,
And good in yellowing time of fruit.

Very good in the grass to lie
And see the network 'gainst the sky.
A living lace of blue and green,
And boughs that let the gold between.

The bees are types of souls that dwell
With honey in a quiet cell;
The ripe fruit figures goldeniy
The soul's perfection in God's eye.

Prayer and praise in a country home,
Honey and fruit; a man might come,
Fed on such meats, to walk abroad,
And in his Orchard talk with God.

KATHERINE TYNAN.

The Caboose

ONE night, a couple of weeks ago, when the neighbors were gathered in the little gray house in the hollow in the green Verdugo Hills—the little gray house in the hollow that has the lilac bush in front of it and the two big rocks behind—the man who reads the papers was telling us of the great railroad strike that was going on.

And there was a discussion, then, concerning the subject of strikes in general. But, that isn't what we want to tell you about. What we want to tell you about is what we got to thinking of, ourself, while the talk about railroads was going around among the neighbors.

Our mind drifted away entirely from the talk, and it was as though we were not hearing a word of it then. It is a thing that often happens. And it is an experience that has come to almost everybody, some time or other. To sit in a crowd where a discussion is going on, and to find your thoughts drifting away from the subject to another thing altogether.

Well, sir, apparently without any reason, our mind drifted away to a night that we had spent in a railway caboose at the end of a freight train long ago in Arizona. Isn't it queer how a little cell of memory will open in the back of a man's head, sometime, and he will recall an incident that he had not thought of for years and years?

It was long ago—long ago, and life, for us, was young. And we had gone wandering in the mystical land of Arizona, digging down into buried cities, fraternizing with the Apaches and other ancient tribes, climbing forgotten walls where the Cliff Dwellers once had their homes, hobnobbing with Col. Jim McClintock and others of Roosevelt's Rough Riders in Phoenix, and sitting under the unforgettable stars of immemorial deserts.

And, one night, we missed a passenger train that we wanted to take. And there was no place to eat or to sleep. And, just then, a freight train came along and stopped at a tank for water. And we told the conductor the fix we were in. And the conductor said for us to get in the caboose and make ourself at home.

Well, to make a long story short, as the saying is, we got into the caboose and rode in it the whole night long. And it was a night filled with a thousand wonders. If ever we happen to get rich, we shall buy a caboose and travel in it at the end of a freight train.

Railroad men live in a world of their own, and particularly is this true of railroad men who run freight trains. The caboose is their traveling home. You wouldn't believe all there is to a caboose until you have spent a night in one. They can put you to bed in it, and cook a dinner for you in it. And it is a great place for story telling when the freight train is wandering over miles of desolate deserts or stopped on a side track waiting for the passenger train to go by.

And, that night, the boys told us that there is a song the caboose has which runs something like this.

"I have to give way to the Pullman
 That carries the traveling throng,
And I follow the loaded box car
 That rumbles and grumbles along.

"But there isn't a car in the outfit
 That ever was put in use,
That means so much to a railroad man
 As the little old red caboose."

And now, years and years afterward, as the memory of that wandering night comes back to us, we think of what Eddie Guest said in one of his haunting songs, that "It takes a lot of living in a house to make it home."

And railroad men who run freight trains do a lot of living in the little old red caboose. And it gets to be home to them.

And, sometime, when our ship comes in from sea, and we have tons and tons of money, the same as Mr. Rockefeller and movie actors have, we shall buy a caboose and travel a lot in it at the end of a freight train.

Man and the Monkey

A MEMBER of the Congregation of the Faithful who is a geologist asks to be allowed to stand up in the synagogue to state that "Geology is all against the Darwinian theory."

Brother William J. Bryan will be glad to know this. And we are also glad to know it. Dang it, a man doesn't like to think that he is descended from a monkey, no matter how respectable and law-abiding the monkey may have been.

Of course you meet a man, now and then, who acts like a monkey, but that really doesn't prove anything.

A College Man

IT WAS one day when we had been in the roaring town and as tired as the dickens walking on those awful stone sidewalks, that we met this man that we want to tell you about.

We had sneaked into a big hotel to rest in one of those lovely leather chairs they have. Walked in and assuming as far as we could the air of a guest who belonged there and had rented a room and everything. And we got away with it, as the saying is, and landed safely. Nobody seemed to know the difference.

And there was a man sitting beside us who appeared to be perfectly at home, but, after awhile, we began to suspect him. "It takes a thief to catch a thief," as the saying is. We had no right there, and we soon sensed that he had no right there, either. He hadn't rented a room any more than we had.

And right away this man started up a conversation with us. And, as the talk went on, he frequently referred to the fact that he had been in college. And, at last, we pinned him down as to which college he had been in, and danged if it didn't turn out to be a Barbers' College.

Yes, sir, it was Brown's Barbers' College in Peoria or Kansas City or some such place as that that the man had been in.

And, do you know, that the more we think it over, the more we like the idea of a barber college. Where a barber is taught not only how to cut a man's hair and to shave and shampoo him, but the classics and ancient history, and Greek and Latin, too. A college that turns them out scholars and gentlemen and good barbers in the bargain.

Because we have so much to do with barbers, and must listen to them so much, and have to sit in chairs and put ourselves at their mercy.

quired, with calculation in the question and none whatever in the timbre of his utterance.

"Not since night before last," Lela answered in aggrieved tones and with the appearance of a cloud upon her brow. "Wasn't it cheap of him? He didn't ring up or anything about going to the meet. Why, if it hadn't been for you, Joe, I might have been moping there in that old attic all day long. Oh, well!" and she shrugged her shoulders, "if he wants to sulk he can sulk. Great big baby like that getting the sulks about—about something."

Joe felt something knock dismally inside of him, which should have warned him that his love was not so dead after all; but it did not. Yes, he perceived gloomily, she and Fat were engaged all right; the girl's manner told him that; but since, during an entire period of thirty-six hours beyond the moment of his victory, Fat had mysteriously failed to press his attentions, the natural result was that the lady in the case waas miffd, and—little poacher!—she was willing, therefore, to accept more favors from Joe. Knowing what he knew, Joe felt a certain sense of responsibility for Fat's failure to appear, but was not thereby moved to enter any defense for the absentee.

But a new interest had by this time seized upon the volatile girl, as she noted with enthusiasm the pennants with which Joe had dressed the corners of the car, and the packages of confetti and serpentine on the front seat, for use at the pavilion in the afternoon.

"Joe! You're a dear!" she exclaimed impulsively, and clasped the nearest of his hands and shook it. "Why—why—your palms are all calloused," she discovered with amazement. "You've been doing hard work—manual labor."

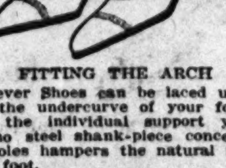
Joe threw up his hands and laughed at the preposterous idea; but this was mainly a maneuver to get one of them away from her clasp. He could not hear her seemingly innocent, comradely touch. Perhaps this was because, as the day advanced, he lost his extremely analytical viewpoint. His heart began to covet her again, and he could not be comradely with another man's treasure. Instead of analyzing he began to find excuses for her, and was even sadly happy that, although lost to him, he was nevertheless permitted to give her a day of pleasure.

Cantilever Shoe
For Men, Women and Children

How Women's Feet Differ

Nothing is more individual than the arches of women's feet. Two women may be fitted to the same size of shoes; one may have high arches, the other low arches. Sometimes a woman's left arch is a trifle lower than her right arch; in ordinary shoes she suffers because of inadjustable support under one arch.

The task of fitting her properly, likewise most women, in steel-shanked shoes is often impossible. Steel-shanked shoes are made with inflexible arches; they require your feet to fit them; you can't adjust them to your individual needs. That is one reason for the Cantilever Shoe, a good-looking shoe, fashioned with a flexible arch.



FITTING THE ARCH

Cantilever Shoes can be laced up snugly around the undercurve of your foot; they furnish the individual support you need there; no steel shank-piece concealed between soles hampers the natural flexibility of your foot.

Cantilevers are good looking; their flexible arches allow your foot muscles the free exercise they need; your circulation is that much improved; you don't tire so soon; you look better for not feeling tired; and you avoid foot-strain and the small army of troubles physicians ascribe to that.

AS IF MADE FOR YOU

Allow us to show you in what good-looking Cantilevers we can give you your individual fit, support and flevibility.

dozen automobiles parked in the circle outside the rustic chalet, with more arriving every minute, and already seventy-odd merry studes were lunching. For Lela to learn that Joe had thoughtfully telephoned an advance order, and to have in consequence just the cutest little table for two reserved upon the vine-grown piazza at just the very best spot for overlooking the entire gay scene, was absolutely thrilling.

Besides the sheer joy of the experience, it ministered greatly to Lela's feeling of self-respect to find herself looked after in this way. And Joe had done it—was doing it. Not Jack English or Milt Franklin, sons of millionaires, but Joe Hancock, the co-op waiter, to whom each single dollar was at least as large as the mono at its full. From time to time the girl found herself looking Joe over curiously to see what it was in him that she might have missed noticing before.

As for Joe—he was not studying the girl any more. A [illegible] under her spell once again, he was just noticing things in her character with the interest of a re-appraisal that was rather rueful. At the track meet, for instance, he noticed her loyalty to Pioneer, her outbursts of joy when a Pioneer man won, her litite gasps of pain when he was beaten, her moments of tense anxiety and extreme excitableness when the issue hung in the balance. She was only a freshie and yet no senior in all that crowd lived the anguished joy and despair of that contest more fully than she. To a man who loves his college, such an attitude is most commendable.

"Oh!" shrieked Lela at the last, jumping up and down frantically. "Pioneer has won! Pioneer has won! Joe, we have got the rag!"

She seized her escort and shook him violently in the excess of her joy. Nothing could restrain her. She russed pellmell down the tiers and into the procession of the Pioneer rooters, waving her arms, throwing clouds of confetti, and whirling reels upon reels of gaily colored serpentine.

She marched in the rooters' procession until not enthusiasm but nature had worn itself down. Even then, bedraggled by the crush and her voice only a husk, she still raised the college cry of old Pioneer while the celebrating crowds surged by. Eventually Joe got her into the car and down to San Marino for dinner.

There the ministration of water and the vanity box repaired whatever damage the excitements and extravagances of the afternoon had done to her appearance, while the bounteous and expensive dinner which Joe's pride had provided began immediately to restore the resilient vitalities of youth, so that long before the dessert was reached Lela was able to enter with vivacity upon that remaining delightful anticipation, the Junior Prom. Tickets, she had heard, had soared to unbelievable prices, but Joseph Hancock was calm and unperturbed outwardly about this—if secretly exultant—for again he had waved the magic wand of his dollars and provided them. Flowers, also, he thought of, purple orchids at about $1 per petal.

"Joe—Oh, Joe!" the girl breathed excitedly into his ear. "Aren't you won—der—ful!"

Joe smiled bravely, and even got the sparkle into his eye over Lela's manifestations of supreme happiness, as expressed in a hundred little mannerisms of voice and eye, of pose and gesture, that were both appealing and revealing; but in his heart there was a fresh stab of pain, induced by the reflection that all these earnest gesturings of gratitude merely meant that she was thankful to him for a reckless extravagance that had not ceased till it had gone the limit for her.

But while Joseph Hancock arraigned his circumstances, practical Lela Mason thanked her lucky stars and went on to extract the last thrills of the day when the Junior Prom, which, to her, marked the climax of the social experience in her young life and left her in a state of sighing ecstasy.

In this state Joe took her home. Irma Woods, for room-mate, rode with them, partly to make surer of the proprieties and partly because she wanted to spite Charlie Moran, with whom she had quarreled on the way over. In the small hours they drew up at Mrs. McIlheney's, to find that worthy woman's doors still open, the light still burning on her wistaria draped porch, and herself drowsily, but conscientiously, counting her chickens as in groups of twos and threes they came fluttering in.

"Thank goodness, you're the last!" she ejaculated from the doorway, surveying with amiable relief the pair of attic roomers as they mounted the steps. Irma entered and went upstairs; but Lela lingered.

"Put out the porch light and lock the

For Lela this was the end of her most perfect day, and she felt the necessity of so declaring once more to its author and finisher, Joseph Hancock, before she parted from him for the night. Besides, now that it was over, she had to ask him a question. That curiosity reputed to be ingrained in her sex, rudely strangled all day, had to be satisfied now—had to be! She was tired, but still spirited. Pale and large eyed, she stood there, screened by the wistaria and beamed upon by the porch light, which gave her a sort of halo.

"It's been wonderful beyond expression, Joe!" she crooned. "Oh, there isn't a word in the dictionary for the pleasure you have given me today!"

Even Joe enjoyed a certain sense of satisfaction in the finality of achievement. The day was over. He had managed everything. In no particular had he failed. The little girl had had a bang up time, no doubt about it. He had given it to her, and now he paused a moment to take farewell. Farewell! It was going to be bitterly hard, much harder than he had imagined, because in these last hours he had reconstructed entirely his views of her. He no longer misjudged her. She was not mercenary—merely fun loving and childishly simple hearted, so utterly honest that she had seemed to be dissembling when she was frankest. Life had dealt scantily with her, and now, when, as it seemed, a tidal wave of the world's pleasure came rolling toward her, who could blame the child woman for throwing her arms wide and trying to drink in as much of it as possible? Not he. Not Joe Hancock, with whom life had also dealt simply. Not one single blessed bit. She was a treasure, and he had lost her—that was all; and there she stood beaming on him, positively beaming her gratitude.

"How ever did you do it?" she demanded, as of one who had worked a magic. "Where ever did you get the money?"

"Oh, it was some that I didn't have any use for," he laughed, but there was a cynical note in that laughter which frightened the girl.

"Use for?" she asked in an apprenensive whisper. "Joe? You—you have spent money that—that wasn't yours? That you hadn't a right to spend?"

"Oh, it was mine all right," he said drily. "I had a right to spend it."

"But on me?" A tardy conscience was begining to stir the girl.

"Every cent of it!" he reassured her promptly, and then hesitated. He had meant—it had been his program—to tell her, at the end of this wild orgy of extravagance, how he had got the money, and what for, and let conscience twit her, if it would; but now that his feeling toward her had changed again, he was momentarily in doubt. The doubts resolved themselves, however. "I earned it for you," he confessed, "wheeling bricks—two solid months of afternoons of wheeling bricks—"

"Is that where you were?" Lela almost screamed.

"—to get money to buy a diamond ring, so that we could be—be engaged."

Lela's heart leaped wildly. "Joe! You old dear!" she exclaimed, and her face was a sunburst of glad surprise, while, if ever there was adoration in a woman's eyes, it looked out of hers.

Not even Joe Hancock blind as his erroneous deductions could make him, failed to comprehend this. For an instant his face expressed astonishment, bewilderment, mystification. Then he gripped her by the elbows and held her almost violently while it seemed that he tried to read her very soul in her eyes.

"You—you don't love Fat Franklin?" he demanded.

"Joe," the girl began to answer in tones that, while tremulous with emotion, were none the less subdued, for she perceived that he had been the victim of painful misapprehension, "Joe, dear, I didn't love anybody in the world until today—never saw anything in any man to love until today, and that man is you, Joe—you! You are great! Great! I love you, and I never could love anybody else."

For a moment Joseph Hancock was dazed, still as a statue, unwilling that any other sensation should register in his mind except the wonderful thrill of hearing this bewitching little creature say that she loved him, and of seeing her look it with every beam out of her sparkling eyes; then speech and action found themselves.

"Oh!" he groaned in transports of relief and joy. "Oh, you darling!" And he gathered her close into his arms and held her there as if determined that she should never escape from them.

Yet whole eternities of bliss upon the mountain top of existence may be ticked off in a few seconds, and presently the pair

"But about the ring! Why—why didn't you buy it?" Lela inquired, and then Joe told her about seeing Fat purchasing the huge diamond, and his deduction therefrom.

To this Lela contributed her own explanation.

"Milton told me night before last that he loved me," she recited, "and that he wanted to marry me, but I told him that he'd said that to a hundred girls already, and he puffed out his lips, sulking as usual when he doesn't get what he wants, and went away muttering that he would show me."

Lela shrugged Milton Franklin out of further consideration with one switch of her shoulders, as if impatient that Joe Hancick should stand before her as the sole male fact in the universe. Joe meanwhile had possessed himself of the engagement finger, and stood looking at it half foolishly.

"But now," he remarked ruefully, "I haven't got any ring to put on it."

"You've got the finger," Lela reminded.

"And that's better," he said, kisisng it. "But aren't women the queer things?" he inquired, still a bit woozy in the head and struggling to adjust his consciousness to the rapturous symphonies which swept from heartstrings whence a few minutes before only dirges had been sounding. "You never find out about 'em at all until you fall in love with 'em, and then you begin to learn a lot of things quick. To think now that if I hadn't been throwing away my money in bucketfuls—"

"Yes, I would," Lela interrupted, reading his thought and blushing as from some moral delinquency. "It wasn't just the spending of money. It was seeing how daring and forceful you were, and how you wouldn't hesitate at any cost to—to make me happy!" And she blushed again, this time with delight. "But oh, wasn't it terrible though—spending all that money of—of ours?"

"Miss Mason—Miss Mason!" called a voice from above stairs with mild remonstrance in its tones.

"Here, kiss me good-night!" directed Lela.

Joe Hancock obeyed dutifully, and turned and ducked down the steps penniless, but rich.

LURE OF THE TRAIL

feet on the south, with white lines of surf where the combers break on the sandy beaches. There on the narrow strip of land "between the mountains and the sea" lie Santa Barbara and Montecito; and a few miles to the westward, Goleta, mostly hidden by its famous walnut groves. Out at sea are the Channel Islands, the surviving peaks and ridges of a drowned mountain range, companion, in a past geological age, of the Santa Ynez chain, upon which you are now standing!

But it is the view northward that always most fascinates me. It is sharply set off from the ocean side by the long, rooflike ridge of the Santa Ynez Range, the north slope of which is steeper and more abrupt than the seaward side, plunging precipitously to form one side of the V-shaped gorge of the Santa Ynez River. On the farther side of the gorge the mountains rise in a bewildering jumble, until thirty miles away they culminate in the pine-clad ridge of the San Rafael Range—forming a wilderness of ridges, canyons and gorges that a generation ago was more frequently visited and better known than it is today.

The culminating peaks of the San Rafael stand out on the sky-line, more than half as high again as La Cumbre. There, almost due north, is Mission Pine—christened "San Rafael," and so laid down in the maps; but destined always to bear the more familiar name, because from there came the timbers for building the Santa Barbara Mission. A few miles to the eastward stands Big Pine, rising nearly 7000 feet, and highest point for many miles around; then Madulce Pine—called Strawberry Peak on the older maps—around whose flank runs the trail from Santa Barbara to Bakersfield. They are all mountains of grandeur and fascinating interest. And if you are like me, after viewing them from La Cumbre, you will not rest satisfied until you have camped among the pines upon their summits. And that they may call more loudly for you to come, I am planning to tell you of the trails which lead thither, and where you may make your campfire when you have arrived.

LOVE AND LEARN

By Peter Clark Macfarlane

HE WAS in his sophomore year and eked out meager resources by waiting four hours a day in the co-op dining hall. She was a freshman and came there to eat. He was lank of figure, but of an open countenance and a hopeful disposition. She was timid, pale, and cheaply garbed, with little to commend her to the masculine eye except golden braids, which in her diffidence she tried to conceal, and two soft, blue eyes with a wistful light in them that could not be concealed at all. When she could get it she took the most inconspicuous table. This happened to be one of his, and a waiter learns to read human nature. She studied the bill of fare critically, frowningly, as if consulting a very fastidious taste, but he knew as a matter of fact that she was doing "math"—figuring three ways from the soup or two from the dessert to get a combination that would give her the greatest sense of fullness for the slightest depletion of her purse.

The second time she honored one of his tables Joseph Hancock smuggled an extra pat of butter to her under cover of some excess bread. The girl noticed it, of course, and gave him a shy, grateful look. That was the first time that he knew that her eyes, besides being blue and wistful, had mines of polished diamonds in the depths of them. The kindling of those sparkling lights gave Joe some kind of thrill, the exact duplicate of which he had never known before.

"Gosh!" he gasped out in the entryway, and consulted the mirror in the washroom to make sure his hair was slicked back as smooth as glass and as shiny as onyx.

When for dinner the girl again chose one of his tables Joe felt flattered and encouraged to speak, but kept the remark carefully within the line of his professional relation to her by suggesting, "Coffee's poor tonight, but I can recommend the milk." He said this in an undertone necessarily, and undertones almost inevitably have a note of the confidential in them.

To this note the girl responded. "I'd prefer milk," she admitted, lifting the soft, blue eyes, "only—only it doesn't taste like the milk we used to get down on the farm."

"This will," assured Joe proudly. "Leave it to ourself."

At the icebox he dexterously manipulated the pitchers and the glasses under the very eye of the Jap custodian, and the girl got a glass that was half cream.

"Oh!" she sighed, after taking a sip, and glowed upon him.

"On the q. t.," he warned, not with his lips but by lowering the screen of an eyelid for a second, the accidental presence of the head waiter in the vicinage having compelled such discretion. The girl caught the import of the signal and bowed her face to her food, flushing slightly. This was the first time Joe knew there could be color in those transparent cheeks.

"The girl's anemic, run down, starved!" he diagnosed, and satisfied some impulse of his heart by smuggling two pats of butter to the side of her plate. She acknowledged them with a grateful look.

"My name's Joe Hancock," he confided, rearranging the salt, pepper and sauce bottles and pretending to brush imaginary crumbs from the other side of the table as excusing his lingering presence."

"That's a good name," the girl said, smiling at the sound as if it gave her pleasure.

"Like it?" remarked Joe, beaming.

"Hancock is—is so classic—in American history, you know," she responded, as trying to be very pleasant, "and Joe is such an honest name, don't you think?"

Joe blushed beautifully. "What's yours?" he demanded interestedly.

"Lela—Lela Mason," she responded with frank simplicity.

"Gee!" said Joe, his brows rising. "That's a peach of a name."

"You are awfully kind!" she commented, and then, lest he should misunderstand her meaning, tapped the glass of half and half significantly.

"Kind is my middle name—to some people," he boasted.

In the next few minutes, as young Mr. Hancock busied himself with sundry goings to and fro, occasional irresistible glances were stolen at the meek golden head yonder, and a design and a program began to take form within his mind, a design slightly predatory in one direction but nobly charitable in another.

"Chef," he began impressively, when approach and petition might be made to that dark, majestic presence who presided in the kitchen, "when I say 'Small steak,' you give me a small steak, don't you?"

"Ah sho' does, college boy," affirmed that sweating lump of ebony with an air of conscious rectitude.

"Well, now," proposed Joe in wheedling tones, "from this on, once in a while, you are going to hear me pipe 'steak small' instead. That's a high sign—take me? When you hear it grab a T-bone, cut the bone out of it, and fix it up so it will go by the checker as a piece of round."

The black chef looked thoughtful under his white cap, and increased the measure of his frowning dginity as he weighed this cool suggestion to organize a system of petty larceny.

"Ah gits you, Mistah Hancock," he admitted at length, "but what else does Ah git?" The emphasis was significant.

Joe thrust a half dollar into the yellow palm of a black hand that happened to be mysteriously open and conveniently near. "I can' keep this up, you understand, Sam," he explained, putting pressure upon the half dollar till it weighed like a golden twenty. "I'm workin' my way; but it's for a poor little girl, a freshie. She's half starved, and, just as a matter of humanity, I've got to fatten her up till she can do herself justice in her studies at least."

Joe got a good deal of plea into his tones, and the black man had a sympathetic heart, as well as a palm that itched.

"All right, Mistah Joe," he conceded grandly. "I'll collide wid you on de proposition; and, once in a while when you-all's finances will stand it, you collide wid me," and he tapped his pocket and rolled his eyes, both significantly.

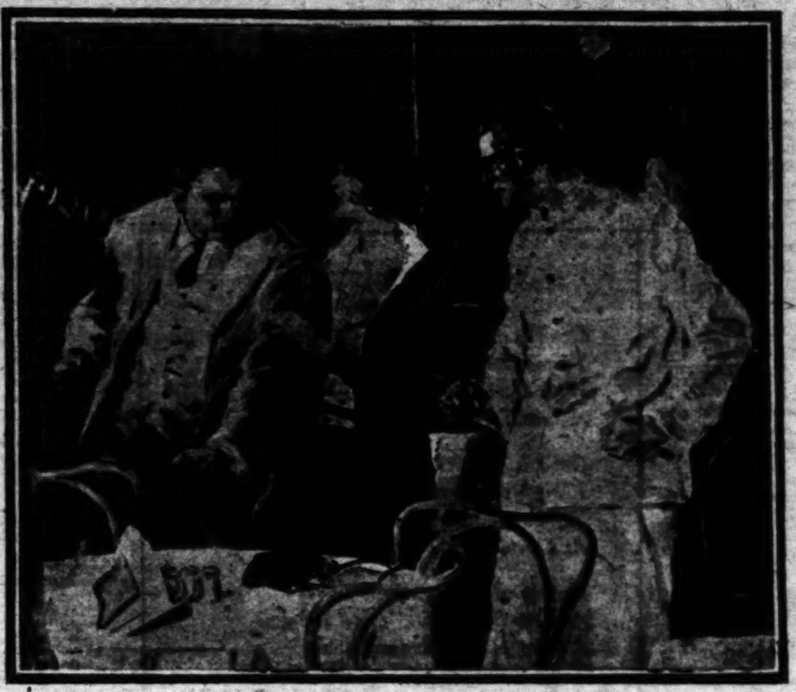
"You're on," declared Joe, with a croak of emotion in his utterance, and hurried outside to make a suggestion to a certain young lady as he tore off her meal check.

Now, in simple truth, the cheapest steak was beyond Lela's means; yet she could not appear ungrateful, and came the next night determined recklessly to major on that viand. It was a miracle steak that she got, rich, tender, juicy, unbelievably palatable. And as the days went on other miracles were wrought in the old dining hall. Instead of being drowned in a thin blue fluid called by the trade name of milk her cereal of mornings and her rice puddings for dessert were smothered in a froth of rich cream.

Joe Hancock, too, began to appear more in the role of presidigitator than a waiter. He could be loitering along the aisle, ostentatiously looking out for the wants of his patrons, and maybe backing up against her table as he made way for some one to pass, or even while he exchanged a few casual words with the head waiter; but, lo, when he moved off there would be a small extra pitcher of maple syrup for her hot cakes upon the table which had not been there before. Joe must have been carrying that pitcher around in his hip pocket till the opportune moment arrived; yet how he had done it without disaster was more than she could ever understand.

As for the benignant sleight of hand performer, by the end of the very first week he began to get an unselfish man's reward in seeing that Lela's hollow cheeks were filling and noting the first faint blush of a rose color that was to be permanent growing upon them.

"She's fatting up! She's fatting up!" he chuckled exuberantly. Then his mood became rapt and sober. "Bless her little heart!" he breathed softly.



"Control yourself, Mr. Franklin," he said with dignity to "Fat."

This utterance was followed by a peculiar dissolving sensation in his breast. Joe did not understand this. It was a feeling that embarrassed him. He obtained relief from it by approaching Lela with a bold suggestion, for practice had made him skillful and success had made him daring.

"Don't do any more 'math' over the menu card," he told her, seizing a moment when such confidence was possible. "I know what you like and I know what we've got, and I'll see you get the best there is each time, and I'll fix the check."

"But—is it right?" gasped the girl, with round, worried eyes, for conscience had been troubling her.

"Right!" ejaculated Joe, pursing his lips and frowning. "Of course it's right. This is a co-op hall, isn't it?"

Lela did not see just why this should make a difference, but Joe said it did, and he was a sophomore; she was only a freshman. Besides, the world had dealt rather skimpily with her hitherto, and hers was not a nature to fly in the face of Providence.

With Joe the casuistries resolved themselves quite as easily. He was getting so interested in this girl, so fascinated by the growing round of cheek and increasing shapeliness of arm and shoulder that his appetite diminished. He was eating very little himself. Whatever the co-op lost on Lela Mason, Joe was sure it made up on him; and yet he felt no pangs of starvation. It was food and drink to him just to stand off and gaze at her when she did not know that he was gazing; and it was positively thrilling to observe her delighted flush at discovering his glance upon her. She was still sparing of conversation, but such eloquent messages of thanks and grateful appreciation as she sent to him across that old dining hall!

And pretty? Why, the girl was going to be beautiful—was beautiful already. In his own absorption with that bright spectacle it did not occur to him that others might be discovering that nascent beauty also. That "Fat" Franklin, for instance, a proud junior, possessor of an automobile and such wealth that he could fare sumptuously on T-bone steak three times a day if he so minded, and who got creams and syrups and butter galore by the simple expedient of paying extra for them—that he, who was accounted one of the boldest and most successful "queeners" in the college, should this day for the first time have contemplated with the interest of discovery the reddening roses, the rounding curves, and the soft blue eyes of Lela Mason was a consideration quite below the threshold of Joe Hancock's consciousness.

"Some queen, I'll say!" murmured "Fat" into his coffee cup, and assayed her boldly with an expert eye.

For Joe to have known about this would have disquieted him greatly and today nothing disquieted him because, a second week of their casual acquaintanceship having passed, he had ventured to ask Lela to step out with him, and she had consented modestly. It was a blissfully boy and girl time they had together. They exchanged life stories and found several pleasant parallels. Joe heard with sympathetic admiration how Lela—mind hungering for an education—living with a maiden aunt poor almost as herself had scraped and pinched her way through high school and was at last here, pinching her way through the university and sharing the expenses and the discomforts of an attic chamber in Mrs. McIlheney's rooming-house with Irma Woods, a girl as poor and as ambitious as herself.

And on the very next occasion of their stepping out together—perhaps because it was in the moonlight this time and under the grand old campus oaks—Joe Hancock found himself desperately in love with Lela Mason; but when he tried to strangely put the new, the supreme emotion into words his tongue was tied, though his heart pounded and tore at its fastenings.

The next afternoon he stood before a jewelry shop, gazing upon trays of rings, diamond rings. And there a great idea occurred to him. A ring would break the ice. The production, the proffering of the golden circlet with its tiny eye of fire would disclose his heart and high intent in a single gesture. Thereafter all would be easy—easy. Daringly, as Hobson into the bottleneck at Santiago, he went in and priced the rings. But here disappointment couched. The only ones he would have considered adequate were agged at from $500 up. Mercifully, however, some diamonds are smaller than others. There were diamond rings as low in price as $25, yet the one which was the very smallest that it seemed to him his self-respect could offer and, at the same time, the very largest to which his impecuniosity could aspire, was priced at $110.

To be sure, Joseph Hancock had not $110 nor any portion thereof to spare above the raw necessities of his life, yet in his days of struggle he had learned one lesson surely. Money was to be got by working for it. He strolled about the town and found a pile of bricks that was to be moved a half block from where they had been dumped off the flat cars to the spot upon which they were to be built into a pottery kiln. It was a wheelbarrow job, and the contractor confessed he was in no hurry to have the bricks moved, construction being delayed by other elements. Joe engaged himself to move the bricks, working two hours a day, for the sum of $110.

How the unusual toil tired him! And how his fingers stiffened until he was no longer a successful juggler. Once he was nearly detected by the Jap at the ice chest. Another time he capsized a pitcher of maple syrup in his pocket and had to go through the duties of the breakfast hour with the gooey stuff saturating trousers and crawling maddeningly down his leg. Pride, of course, kept him from disclosing a mishap like this to the only person who could have regarded it sympathetically and not humorously.

But the greatest disadvantage of all was that the brick contract made such inroads upon his already over-mortgaged hours as left him now no time at all for Lela except on Friday nights. Moreover, his strategy of the ring, which involved a complete surprise, forbade him to offer any explanation of what he was doing with his afternoons. This was a vital error. It permitted Lela to infer that Joe Hancock's interest in her was merely benevolent. More dangerous still, it left her with ample time in which to receive the now proffered attentions of "Fat" Franklin, which she did with a good conscience and a woman's natural pride in having attracted one of the bigger fish in the pool.

But, blissfully unconscious of these errors,

The GOLD ONE

By Samuel Merwin

"Yes. It's perfectly natural."

"Natural? But, good God! It's got me all unsettled. I'm forgetting what I come up here to do."

"That is good."

They could hear Robert asking—in that uneven voice, as if he were choking a little—

"What do you want, Nina?"

"You know what I want!" cried the woman. "Oh, you've evaded me! You've dodged and lied! I've been tricked around by that man, your jackal—the king's jackal!" She was pointing at Frank Hildreth. "No, I will not be quiet! I'm through with that—through with being fooled—I'm going to tell all New York now!"

"Who is she?" asked Tim, shrewdly studying the tensely beautiful figure, the blazingly beautiful face, the exquisitely dramatic hands that gave added meaning to every word she uttered.

"It's Nina Bernice, the dancer."

"You don't say! Why I've seen her—up to the New Amsterdam. Some class, I'll—"

"Be still! Now's the time he needs his friends. We may have to go over there."

"Not me. I'm no friend o' his."

"Ssh!"

Robert was struggling in that odd way in his chair; trying to rise, plainly.

"You know what I want!" Nina Bernice was crying. "Just $1,000,000! Put it to my credit at the bank tomorrow morning, and you've sealed my lips! Fail me, and I'll sell these letters to the yellowest newspaper in New York." She waved a packet. "I may go down, but if I do, you'll go with me!"

"You are a common adventuress," said Frank Hildreth sternly.

"When I want a lawyer's opinion I buy it," she retorted.

"You are disturbing him at a time when the entire business fabric hangs on the name and character of five men, of whom Robert Battie is one. Pushing your miserable claim when there is hardly a solvent bank in New York."

She repeated contemptuously the one word —"Character!"

"Look!" muttered Tim, catching at Arthur's elbow. "His wife!"

Mary had wandered from the side of the nameless girl and was moving slowly, gropingly, about the room with hands outstretched.

"She's saying something!"

"Ssh!"

They watched and listened; faintly they caught these words—

"Robert—I'm trying to find you, Robert. It's growing very dark."

One of the telephones rang.

Tim started, and again caught at Arthur's elbow. "That thing like to 'a' scared me to death!"

"This tension is very great, of course. But keep still. See—he's answering the phone! He—yes—he's getting out of the chair!"

Frank Hildreth turned again on Nina Bernice.

"Mr. Battie will pay you a quarter of a million now—tonight!"

"A round million!"

"Yes—yes—yes!" This was Robert, standing squarely, solidly by the table, the telephone instrument in his hands. "Frank, the executor of the Williams estate, is dumping 11,000 shares of Battie Shipping on the market tomorrow morning. Quick, get Harvey Deane on the other phone! Right there! Main two-two-four eleven!"

Hildreth gave in the number; then pressed the transmitter against his shoulder. "Bob," he asked, low, crisply—"what did Battie Shipping close at tonight?"

"Down sixteen points," replied Robert grimly.

"Everything else is way off, of course. "There's no market. You can't buy that stuff in, not possibly."

"Certainly I can!"

"In God's name, how?"

"Sell everything I own personally. Take the loss. There's that much market. And I can mortgage this house before noon."

"But your standing? Your credit?"

"We're past all that. International Worsted went under this afternoon."

"No! Why, I thought—"

"They're gone. We're not sure yet about the Upmann banks; they may go tomorrow."

"Tomorrow—good God! Here's Deane now!"

"Tell him." Robert was the master now; his square frame seemed to tower heroically above a surge of panic stricken lesser folk, as the orders came snapping from his firm lips.

"It's the deflation," Arthur explained to Tim. "The war prices have cracked. I never saw one of these big men under fire before. And he's a big one! Take my word for it, they'll never lick him!"

"I never saw this side of him, myself.' mused Tim.

Nina Bernice tapped the floor impatiently.

"Well," she queried, "how about me?"

"You?" During one brief moment Robert considered her. "You are nothing. You may talk or keep silent. You may stay or go."

She stared; but he was busy again. Then she came rushing over to Arthur and Tim.

"Did you hear what he said to me?" she gasped.

Arthur sensitively, but firmly, averted his face. But Tim cried, hotly: "You're in all wrong, sister? You'd better just fade out!"

"You, too? Surely you're with me, Tim!"

"Not for a minute! Act on, cutie, but don't take me for your audience!"

"He'll hear from me!" she cried.

"Silence there!" called Frank Hildreth.

"Very well, I'll go. But he'll hear from me. There's one thread that'll never break. Never!"

"The scarlet thread always breaks," said Arthur, facing her now.

She moved irresolutely toward the door.

It was Tim who cried out so sharply that all turned; and then all rushed to the corner, where he knelt by the inert figure of Mary. And then Robert held her shoulders and head in his arms while tears fell from his bewildered eyes. And through the hush they could hear the throaty sound of a voice still speaking in the telephone.

Standing in the doorway, Nina Bernice laughed.

"He has heard from me," she said harshly. "I've killed all he ever had of her."

And directly back of her, in the shadow, Stephens was wringing his hands and saying over and over: "Perhaps I've gone too far! Perhaps I've gone too far!"

A voice was repeating monotonously. "Beg pardon, sir. Beg pardon, sir."

"Beg pardon, sir." Why, it was Stephens! Standing respectfully there before the fireplace. A calm Stephens. Robert watched his hands. They were clasped before him, as he had always clasped them when addressing one of the family.

"It's Mr. Hildreth, sir. And the—the lady."

"Oh—why—I've been asleep, Stephens."

"You've had a little nap, yes, sir. Shall I show them up, sir. Mr. Hildreth seemed to expect that I would."

"Why,—yes, Stephens."

"Thank you, sir."

Left alone for a moment, Robert glanced uncomfortably about the big room. It was empty. The Sargent portrait of John Battie stared firmly out of the shadows.

They were coming up the stairs. With a nervous start that was unlike Robert, as it would have been unlike John before him, he got to his feet and awaited them; a big, solid figure of a man, standing before the mantel.

Frank ushered her in with a touch of ceremony. Curious! And curious, as well, that she should wear a simple suit and a plain straw hat! Though there was nothing cheap about her; Nina Bernice had the gift of smartness. Most curious, she smiled—sensitively, uncertainly.

She carried a small parcel; he saw that. The letters, of course! And a book bound in leather.

The principal difficulty lay in his throat. It was going to be difficult to speak; perhaps impossible, at first. And confused, elusive memories floated like vapors in his brain. He didn't like that; for perhaps his greatest pride had been in that machinelike brain. He indicated chairs.

She took that one by the wall; sat very still, with her little feet together.

Robert found his voice; heard himself asking rather harshly (just as he would have asked such a question at the office on a busy day:)

"Well, what's this all about?"

The two others exchanged a glance. Why, he asked himself. Was Frank, by any chance, not playing fair?

Deliberately, then, with her slender pretty fingers, she untied the string and opened the parcel. Sure enough, there were the letters!

"I brought thse," she began.

He interrupted with—"Well, how much do you want for them?"

At this sharp attack she seemed to sink a little way into the chair. But after a moment she resolutely straightened her shoulders.

"Come—out with it! If we've got to talk business, let's talk business! I've got to compete with a yellow newspaper, I presume!"

"Bob," Hildreth cut in, "you really mustn't bully Miss Bernice!"

And after a silence, she said, in a low voice: "It's been a pretty hard thing to do, coming here. But it seemed the best way. First I want to give you these letters. As nearly as I can tell they are all here. Of course, if there should be any more, I'll send them to you. And I'm turnng over all the other things to Mr. Hildreth in the morning."

"Miss Bernice is going to be married," Hildreth explained, clumsily.

"Oh!" This from Robert.

"I thought you might have noticed my ring," she went on. He saw it now; a platinum band, set with emeralds and a diamond.

"You're going to be married?"

"Yes. I shall leave the stage. I have not felt happy about the past, but I shall simply have to make the best of that. I have found a new philosophy," glancing down at the leather bound book, "that has changed the whole course of my life."

"But there are colored threads," Robert heard himself saying that, and stopped short.

"Of course. In every life, I understand that. Certain different threads." She smiled; shyly, as a child sometimes smiles, and her eyes glistened. "But I am going ahead on a new footing. Marriage is a job, I imagine. Probably a pretty difficult job. I'm going to try to make good at it, that's all I can say. I know, at least, now that the only happiness lies in giving up absolutely. I am doing that. Gladly. I hope to have children."

The wistful smile flitted again across the delicately pretty face.

"That's all I can say—I'm going to try to make good at it. And the first thing was to clear this"—she indicated the letters—"all up. I couldn't leave it to any one else to do."

Her voice faltered. She glanced over toward Hildreth; moved as if to rise from the chair; hesitated; then did get up.

"I think," she murmured, "if you don't mind, I'll just go now."

She was moving toward the door, when Robert intercepted her, with outstretched hand.

She seemed about to flutter around him and out the door; but then, hesitating, she let her hand rest in his. And he was gazing gloomily down at her.

"So you have found a philosophy!" he said.

"Ye-es!" Her voice was a whisper.

"In that book."

She nodded.

"Peace? You've found peace!"

This time she nodded brightly, strongly.

"I wish," he mused, "I could find peace."

"You can! Will you let me send you this book?"

He slowly shook his head; slowly but with a returning firmness.

"No, Nina. No. But I envy you your fine simplicity."

"It comes down to faith," said she.

"Yes. That's it. It comes down to faith. Some sort. Faith in something or other. I'm afraid my faith has been only in myself." His voice softened, and his eyes filled. "But I wish you, Nina, every, every happiness. I'm sure you'll make good!"

He released her hand.

"Frank," he said, turning abruptly, "have you any idea where I could find Adrian, get in touch with him somehow?"

"I think he's right downstairs, Bob."

"Downstairs!"

"He came up the front steps just as we did."

"Weakened? I wonder." He caught himself. "Frank, the first thing in the morning please settle Adrian's trouble with that hotel."

"You'll pay it, Bob?"

"Yes. And one other matter. Better make a note of this. There's an old race track tout named Tim Mullane. Was a jockey once. The detective people can find him, somewhere between Canada and Mexico. He'd be where there are horses, if he's alive. I owe him $11,200. Find him and pay it. Good night."

He rang as they crossed the threshold. To Stephens he said, shortly: "Why did Mr. Adrian come back?"

"As a favor to me, sir."

"As a favor—"

"I'm so sorry, sir! I hope I haven't overreached myself—gone too far, sir. But I felt very bad over his trouble, and I didn't know but what we servants might be able to make up a—"

"Ask Mr. Adrian if he will see me again. Now."

"Thank you, sir."

The boy seemed to have aged. His complexion was nearly gray; and there were deep circles under his eyes.

"I appreciate what you're doing," he began.

"Oh, you—"

"Mr. Hildreth was just telling me."

"I realize that I was in the wrong."

There was a long silence.

"Shall you still be considering that voyage?"

The young man nodded.

"Why?"

"Oh—discipline. A real job. And a complete change. Got a big fight ahead of me. May as well start all fresh."

"Would you mind changing over from the Isthmus and Pacific line to one of our ships?"

"Better not. The other's more impersonal. I've been going through a hell of an evening. Guess I'm changing—fast. But I seem to see my way clearly enough now."

"Can I do anything for you before you sail. A little money—"

"No, thanks. Start clean."

"Well, good luck!"

"Oh, I'll look you up again to say good-by. Good night now."

"Good night."

Robert was a long time on his knees before the fireplace, reading and burning those old letters. The task finally done, he rang for Stephens. After a wait he rang again. His knees were stiff with pain. For the third time he rang.

There was a shuffling sound in the hall. Then Stephens appeared, in a nightgown and a knitted blue nightcap, his bony feet thrust into carpet slippers. He was rubbing heavy eyes.

"Stephens!"

"Yes, sir."

"You needn't bother to put the flowers in Mrs. Battie's room in the morning. I'll do it myself."

"Thank you, sir. That be all, sir?"

"That's all."

It was 3 in the morning. Robert sat on the edge of his bed balancing one shoe in an unsteady hand, wondering about faith.

MISS MARY SMITH

He was not surprised to learn that Miss Mary Smith was not at the hotel and that her luggage had already been sent to the boat. She was, however, on the City of Havana when he bribed his way on board. There, in the final hour before its sailing, Mr. John Smith put in the most eloquent and soul satisfying hour of his life. The result of this hour he gave to the second Mary Smith at 7 o'clock that evening as he radiantly faced her across a small table at the Ritz.

"You see," he explained, "I've just become engaged to be married. And under some conditions a man's engagement day can be rather full and strenuous!"

Our Progress

Our fettered minds, the more we free
The more we see
Our ignorance and vanity.
The more we think, the more we know
Our march to progress—oh how slow.

To higher spheres the more we try
In thoughts to fly
The less care we to gratify
Desires ungodly, mean and low;
The nobler aims and deeds we show.

LOVE AND LEARN

By Peter Clark Macfarlane

HE WAS in his sophomore year and eked out meager resources by waiting four hours a day in the co-op dining hall. She was a freshman and came there to eat. He was lank of figure, but of an open countenance and a hopeful disposition. She was timid, pale, and cheaply garbed, with little to commend her to the masculine eye except golden braids, which in her diffidence she tried to conceal, and two soft, blue eyes with a wistful light in them dark, majestic presence who presided in the kitchen, "when I say 'Small steak,' you give me a small steak, don't you?"

"Ah sho' does, college boy," affirmed that sweating lump of ebony with an air of conscious rectitude.

"Well, now," proposed Joe in wheedling tones, "from this on, once in a while you are before. Joe must have been carrying that pitcher around in his hip pocket till the opportune moment arrived; yet how he had done it without disaster was more than she could ever understand.

As for the benignant sleight of hand performer; by the end of the very first week minded, and who got creams and syrups and butter galore by the simple expedient of paying extra for them—that he, who was accounted one of the boldest and most successful "queeners" in the college, should this day for the first time have contemplated with the interest of discovery the reddening roses, the rounding curves, and the soft blue eyes of L.la Mason was a consideration quite below the threshold of Joe Hancock's consciousness

[illegible] and deprivations in the increasing solicitude of Miss Mason and the ever beaming warmth of her smile—up to that moment when, glancing out of the window of the dining hall as the midday meal was in swing, he observed the girl coming down the graveled path chatting gaily with Milton Franklin.

Now it must be explained at this point that Milton Franklin had the faculty of rubbing certain kinds of people the wrong way, people whom, for one reason or another, "Fat" considered less than his equals. He was not popular with waiters. The mere sight of him with Lela gave Joe an incipient case of dispositional pip. Joe was not even aware that they knew each other, yet from their manner they seemed painfully well acquainted. The sudden stoppage of his heart passed, however, with Lela's cheery greeting, and that organ thumped proudly as the girl started toward her accustomed table. But there followed to her place this obese and self-assertive young Franklin person.

"Allow me!" "Fat" said grandly, and pushed in Lela's chair for her; then took the opposite one.

"I'd like to push his face in—the slob!" growled Joe away down in his larynx.

"Waiter!" "Fat" called with an authoritative voice. "Waiter!"

Joseph Hancock was instantly furious. Duty compelled him to take Mr. Franklin's pompously given order, but even while doing so he was planning to provide that presumptious interloper with an experience and a dinner he could never forget. By the time Joe actually reached the purlieus of cookery his specifications were complete.

"One steak—sma-a-all!" he bawled, and drawing near enough for the purpose, he slipped the chef one of these rare half dollars, whereat the whites of the dark eyes rolled and a black face nodded alert comprehension. "And, say, Sam!" Joe's eyes narrowed to sinister slits and his tone was lowered to that terse and eager whisper in which dark plots are laid, "Besides that have you got a steak in the house so tough a dog couldn't eat it? If you have and can do anything to make it tougher than it is already, do it; then camouflage it with onions and slip it to me."

"He-he-he-he!" laughed the chef as he read the gloomy tracery upon the boy's face as one reads headlines in a newspaper. "Some guy done buttin' in on dat lil gal, huh!" he gurgled.

"Butt-in is r-r-right!" growled Joe, grinding his teeth.

Face beaming, throat chuckling, hands conspiring, the black chef "collided" with enthusiasm, and the contrast between the two dinners served at the one table that night was a malicious triumph. The perspiration stood out on Milton Franklin's face as he sawed at his steak. Lela's cut easily, and she lifted the juicy morsels to her lips with the consciousness that she had never had a finer.

"Say," Fat protested to her as his exasperation and his meal reached their climax together, "this is the soggiest potato I ever saw in my life. Not even this co-op hall can make 'em any soggier. This bread is positively petrified. No bride ever baked a harder loaf. And, furthermore, I'd like to meet the guy that put hair oil on my rice pudding."

He fumed a moment while Lela looked embarrassed and murmured: "Oh, I am so sorry, Mr. Franklin."

"Most delightful company I've ever had in this hall, Miss Mason," mumbled Milt, "and poorest dinner! Miserable waiter you've got. We'll eat at my table tonight, and we'll get some service."

The last sentences of this speech were framed particularly for the ears of young Joseph Hancock, just then bringing the soup to the next table, but it was Lela who answered it, flushing with indignant surprise.

"Why, no!" she negatived loyally and turned her blue eyes up to bestow a glance of eloquent comfort upon Joe. "I've had a delightful dinner. I think I have the best waiter in the hall. I wouldn't leave him for anything."

Without appearing to have overheard, Joe's features wreathed themselves in a heavenly smile. Sweet revenge and sweeter reward had floated to his ears in a single speech.

"He's rotten, I'll say," declared Fat grumpily.

At the words fresh rage got up in the heart of Joe, rage and a further thirst for revenge, that parched and constricted his throat like a consuming fire, while kindly fate immediately afforded the opportunity for retaliation. The fidgety young froshie just behind Fat, for whom the soup was destined, not noticing the near approach of the first [illegible] fraction of time in which to half rise and readjust his chair. In so doing his shoulder either came in violent contact with the ministering hand of Joe, or seemed to. Anyway, the soup plate was tilted and sent a small Niagara of rice-tomato fluid cascading in a hot douche down the back of the Franklin neck and inside the Franklin semester shirt, thereby, in fact, debarring that garment from being a semester shirt at all, since it would now lose its right to that title through having to be laundered at a time when the semester was only well under way.

"Wow! What in blinking blazes? I'm scalded!" These and other phrases, ideas, and ejaculations did Milton Franklin erupt as he leaped violently into the air.

"You—you clumsy idiot!" he cried, and lifted his hand to strike. A rather mighty hand it was; for, despite his fatness, Franklin was something of an athlete and noted for his strength of arm.

But already Joe Hancock's next strategy was developing. His glance was bent upon the fidgety, embarrassed froshie who, guilty or not guilty, was to furnish the alibi demanded by the exigencies of the waiter's situation.

"Now, see what you did!" he exclaimed hotly. "When you sit down, why don't you stay down? If you're going to get up under a plate of soup, why don't you ring a bell or something? You better apologize to Mr. Franklin now."

"Him apologize?" snorted Fat, sarcasm and anger mingling. "Not him! You! And apologies won't let you off, either."

Actually Fat was drawing back that brutal fist of his and going to swing it against the smooth but now slightly tanned cheek of Joe Hancock and Joe, full of fight, was ready for him. He was younger by a year, he was slighter by twenty pounds, but all that trundling of wheelbarow loads of bricks had given him arms of steel, and it is possible that one of these, landing conveniently on been as if he had a brick in each hand, and that oneo ofthese, landing conveniently on the rotund target of a stomach which Fat presented first, and the other following to the chin, might have made wreck of Milton Franklin. But nothing of this kind happened, for instantly the little girl was standing between, straight, taller than she had ever appeared before, her cheek glowing, her eye expressing indignation, resentment and blazing rebuke.

"Control yourself, Mr. Franklin!" she said with dignity. "I could see it was a pure accident. Mr. Hancock was not in the least to blame."

"An accident?" queried Fat incredulously. "Not, much it wasn't any accident. This fellow's taken a dislike to me, 'sall." But Fat's fist had ceased to menace. The girl's eye had cowed him or elapsing seconds had given him time to cool off.

"Why, Mr. Franklin! How could you say that?" reproached the girl, and Milton began to feel ashamed for his brashness and to be more immediately conscious of the embarrassments of his physical condition.

Besides, the head waiter was on the scene by this time, rebuking Joe, staring severely at the fidgety freshman, and assisting, by the sacrifice of many paper napkins, in wiping off the neck of Mr. Franklin's person and the back of his coat. But no amount of wipings and no sacrifice of napkins could make Mr. Franklin presentable for the street or the lecture room. He had to depart ignominiously for his rooms, a bath, and a new set of garments from the skin out. He went dripping soup from two heels and with a lowering glance at Joseph Hancock.

Gloating and exulting in the discomfiture of Fat—and before her—Joe, unaware how soon he was to turn a new page in the book of his knowledge of womankind, started out to have a happy afternoon with his bricks. Never had the toil seemed so light. Never had a panorama of such entertaining memory pictures reeled before his mind. Whenever these reached their climax, with Fat red-faced and deluged, sputtering and squawking, Joe was compelled to set his barrow down and give way to fits of uncontrollable laughter.

It was in the midst of one of these attacks of the risibles that he turned the new page, when right before his eyes a huge open automobile, full of merry "studes" of both sexes; came whirling down the street and was held up momentarily by the passing of an electric train. In that moment Joe discerned that Fat Franklin was at the wheel, and that the merriest of the party was the girl who sat beside him, a girl in a blue sweater, with a knitted cap of the same color pushed to one side by a wealth of golden braids, which she seemed as anxious now to display as she once had been to conceal—for it was Lela!

She was rocking from side to side in sheer exuberance of spirit, allowing the cadences [illegible] no doubt—to peal out so that they sounded to the lover's jealous ear even above the rumble of the passing train. In the same instant that she saw all this Joe curled up and dropped behind the screening heap as if one of his own bricks had struck him where his belt buckled. For a moment he was sick with the pain of just such a blow. Then manfully he sought to master himself.

"Didn't take her long to make up with him!" he groaned in a hollow voice, and then raised his head cautiously. They were gone. "Me wheeling bricks and her joy riding!" he muttered sickly.

The afternoon was spoiled for Joe. But luckily—or unluckily—it was Friday afternoon, and Friday afternoon had always been succeeded so far by Friday night. Friday night was his night to be with Lela, when he could see her, step out with her, talk with her, with no Fat Franklins, no automobiles, no anything else to make the slightest claim upon her attention. Yet he decided this evening, when she came into dinner, to be distant.

But he couldn't manage being distant with her. For one thing, it was plain that Lela had been discovered. Half the seniors in the place were tossing goo-goo glances in her direction tonight. Humbly, confidentially, Joe communicated his intention to visit her tonight "as per usual." To his consternation, she confessed a "previous."

Joe was hurt, and showed it; whereupon the young lady reproached him with:

"I didn't suppose you'd mind if I got the chance for a ride. They have come so seldom, you know; and besides, the visibility has been kind of low of late as far as you were concerned."

The remark was without emphasis and purely by way of explanation, but it stung, it pierced; and the gall sack of a young heart's bitterness was suddenly filled.

"Mind? Sure not. Go ahead. I'm glad you can get 'em. Get all you can of 'em," Joe urged, and was careful to urge it cuttingly. "And don't mind me. I'm nobody. You don't need me any more."

The girl stared with round eyed astonishment, and then resentment curled her beautiful lips.

"Oh, all right," she retorted, "if you want to be selfish!" and switched her golden braids.

Selfish! He—selfish, after all this sleight of hand! Could she, after accepting his uncounted pitchers of cream and boneless T-bones, turn about and coolly accept another fellow's automobile rides? And on his night, too? If it were so, elastic indeed was the conscience of a woman.

Joe turned scornfully from her presence, but some time during the ensuing sleepless nights perceived that the fault was all his, that he had been a fool. He had argued that because she accepted his T-bones so radiantly she loved him. Were the other young fellows to infer that because she accepted their automobile rides with equal radiance she therefore loved them? Unthinkable! Quite unthinkable. But the beans were already spilled, for next morning Lela Mason did not sit at his table. Upon the other side of the room she ate cereal with thin, blue, watery fluid upon it and hot cakes lubricated with one little pat of butter per cake and sweetened with one lonesome tiny pitcher of sirup.

Joe was mad for Lela to know that his resentment had melted, that his heart was bathed in the bitter waters of remorse and his soul environed in an atmosphere of deep contrition, but she would not even look in his direction.

Days went by like this, and even weeks—weeks of agony for Joe, but weeks of giddy happiness for Lela Mason. A hard, skimpy life had become suddenly rich, varied, and joyous. Half a dozen of the best known men in college contended for her idle hours, others among them besides Franklin owning automobiles, and she took zestful advantage of her opportunities. Yet the bright-faced girl was too full of comradely gratitude to make Joe suffer interminably for this brash rudeness of exasperated youth.

One night Joe found her sitting serenely at his table. She greeted him with the old frank smile, and his heart plunged like a wild horse in his breast. Hope dwelt once more in him, high hope, because he felt that the times were peculiarly auspicious for him. For one thing, the bricks were almost wheeled, and, for another, the day of the annual track meet and field sports between Pioneer and Granstetter universities was at hand. Fat Franklin, a man of sporting proclivities, were bound to have his interest in romance swallowed up for a brief interval before and after that field day by absorption in its event, for fierce was the rivalry between the two institutions.

On the very day before the meet Joe wheeled his last brick and [illegible] of wheelbarrows and bricks for life. But the contractor proved that he was a man with a heart by adding somewhat to Joe's stipend.

"You did a neat job," he confessed. "Here's a bonus of $15."

Bonus! The word had never had an adequate meaning to Joe until that minute. "Thank you," he gulped, his eye lighting with gratitude as he perceived how much more lustrous a diamond could be purchased for $125 than for $110.

But when Joe, after shedding overalls and dolling for the street, coasted into the offing before Roy Lee's jewelry store he encountered the shock of his life. Fat Franklin was just entering the place. Through the window Joe saw him purchase a giant sparkler, saw him dig in all his pockets for money, and thereafter write something on a card—an I.O.U. for a balance, no doubt. And Fat was no sentimentalist, but cold and practical. If, the day before a loyal Pioneer man would need all the money he could raise, Fat Franklin had stripped himself of funds and mortgaged his future allowances, it was because he had already made definite arrangements with the finger which that diamond was to adorn.

The world turned black before Joe's eyes. He crushed the $125 down deep in his pocket and turned sickly away. In front of him was Fat's car, standing at the curb. He recoiled from the car fiercely and turned north, when—that his heart wound might be torn afresh—here came Lela Mason, looking, if possible, more sweet and winsome than he had ever known her to appear before.

But Joe could have no grievance against Lela because he had lost her. The sight of the girl stimulated while it pained him. He was even able to recall that she always came down from "lab" about this time, free for several hours, and instantly grasped the situation. Fat, with his car conveniently parked at the corner and his diamond ring in his pocket, was waiting to take her for a ride; and during that ride . . .

Within Joe's soul was the sound of weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth and the reign of the darkness that was outer and terrible as he thought of what was to occur upon that ride. Yet Joe's was no craven spirit, and pride has saved many a face.

"Hello, Lela!" he chirped, bluffing monstrously. "Gosh, but you're looking snappy this aft."

The girl stopped dead to gaze with playful surprise.

"Is this you, Joe, or somebody else?" she demanded. Gracious grandmother, but it's a joy to see you on exhibition in the p.m. hours once more. On what sector of the educational front have you been effacing yourself in the afternoons of late?"

Joe could only flush.

"Still keeping the dark secret, hey?" she rallied. "Oh, all right; I won't tease. I'll just be thankful for small favors. Whither shall we dawdle for an hour?" She tossed him an armful of books.

Something clicked in Joe's reeling brain. Obviously then Lela had no date to ride with Fat; yet Fat, Joe was perfectly sure, had in his mind a date for a ride with her.

Now, there is something in the male wooer that can make him endure with stoic fortitude his own excruciating agony while finding a grim pleasure in tantalizing, at the moment of his victory, the rival who has beaten him. Joe saw a chance to spoil Fat's plan for a ride and the fixation of a diamond ring, and eagerly he leaped at it. He had the time, he had the girl, and yonder at the curb stood a shiny new touring car with upon it a sign: "For hire, $2 per hour." In Joe's pockets was $125 that was now of no use to him whatever.

"What say to a ride, Lela?" he proposed, and jerked his head in the direction of his public car.

"Oh, I would love it!" she exclaimed, eyes sparkling.

Joe gazed at those eyes enviously. Looking at them so near, so cordial, and so warm, it was difficult to realize that he had lost them; yet within him, carefully concealed, was the knowledge of the truth, and sorrowfully, as one takes flowers to a funeral, he was paying his last respects.

Outwardly Joe was a game sport.

"Jump in!" he said to Lela, and held open the door for her.

"Where to, sir?" inquired the mahout.

"Down the line," said Joe in a big way. "Give her the gun."

Lela shot a little glance of admiration. It was astonishing how well he did it. She had never felt admiration for Joe before, only gratitude; now she nestled close to his side, looking up at him with a vague, new kind of emotion.

THE LEGEND OF THE CHIHUAHUA DOG

By [illegible]

I TELL the story just as it was told to me. It happened many years ago and you, with your modern knowledge, may find cause to doubt. But—did you ever own a Chihuahua dog? Yes? Then YOU will understand.

In the olden days in ancient Mexico there lived two warring tribes of Indians. One tribe had its dwelling place upon the mountain top, while down within the valley the other one held sway. They were bitter enemies, hating one another with the intense animosity that a worn-out feud can bring to the children of men. Long ago even the chieftains had forgotten the original cause of the trouble, still the war went on, as it must continue to do in every country on this earth until love, the higher law, prevail.

Bitter as was their warfare, these two tribes met each year upon a high plateau to worship the Sun God of their common belief. For three days and nights they became as friends and the sacred rites of their religion were carried out according to the ancient customs of THEIR ancestors, then part—to that this is strange? Ah well! Do not the people of today meet each week upon the Sabbath to worship in accordance with the customs of their ancestors, then part—to hate, to plunder and to kill. Is it not very much the same as in the olden days? But we will not discuss the matter. I tell the tale just as it was told to me.

To the chief of the mountain people at last there was born a daughter of such surpassing loveliness that even the birds in the tree tops ceased their music to gaze upon her as she passed. Sweet was her voice and wondrous the glory of her silken hair. As she grew older men fell at her feet to worship her, as they should have done only to the good God, but the maiden loved none of them, and her father vowed that her hand should not be given where her heart could never find its haven.

I had forgotten to say that a few years before the birth of the mountain princess, a son had come to bless the home of the valley chieftain, and he was very comely and full of pride, and the people of his father's tribe looked him as one of the olden gods returned to earth. However, as the years went on and this young lad grew in strength and valor there seemed to be no mate for him among the maidens of the tribe; and he was often lonely and his heart longed for a resting place.

And it came to pass that when the princess had reached her eighteenth year and the prince had attained the years of his maturity, the tribes met upon the high plateau for their annual season of worship. Since their birth these two young people had played together when their fathers met at this great festival. Only last year they had laughed and teased one another in youthful glee—but this year there was a difference. For the first time the young prince became aware of the bewitching beauty of the princess and the maiden gasped with surprise at the comeliness of the son of her father's enemy. That night during the figures of the dance their hands met and the boy's love, like a white dove, flew to the heart of the girl and nestled there. As they passed again in the next measure, the prince of the valley whispered to the princess of the mountain clan: "Tonight at the foot of the big tree beyond the trail toward the eastern sky." And such is the wisdom of love and youth that the girl nodded with perfect understanding.

Now in the minds of the young there is no great fear and the young princess, resting against the heart of her lover, spoke with confidence: "They will kill us, but I would rather die within the circle of your arms than to live for a thousand years." And the prince answered her: "To hear your voice is sweeter than life and if they kill us we will go together." Then he bethought himself of a spring where he had spent the three days of his initiation which every Indian youth must endure before he enters into manhood. "There we shall be safe for a little time, at least," he told his sweetheart, and immediately they set forth upon their perilous journey.

For two days the luck of youth was with them, but upon the third evening the tiny feet of the princess began to stumble and the lad's heart grew cold within him, as he looked upon her delicate face and realized, for the first time, his great responsibility. Tired and discouraged they wandered on, until suddenly in the gathering twilight, the princess gave a cry that brought the boy's arm about her in sudden terror, but her voice reassured her, as she said quietly: "My foot touched a little animal and it gave a cry of suffering." Searching at the foot of a tree, they, at last found a tiny stricken rabbit. A running sore was tearing its side with pain, and the girl gathered it into her arms to comfort it. At last the prince took the rabbit from her and laid it tenderly among some leaves. "We can stay no longer here," he told her. "We must reach the spring before another day or our pursuers will be upon us." But the girl, with tears in her eyes, begged to be allowed to carry the little creature with her. "Perhaps it too is fleeing from those who would take its life," she said. "If we reach the spring we may be able to revive with the pure, sweet water. If we do not, let us take a chance to help one of God's suffering children."

So again they started forth, and the little rabbit nestled close within the tender arms of the maiden and rubbed its furry nose against her shoulder. At last, after great hardship the young prince sighted the mystic spring and wept for joy because his beloved would now find peace and rest, if only for a little time. The last lap of a journey is always the most difficult, and the poor, tired princess was almost fainting as they knelt at the rippling water and prepared to refresh themselves. Then as the girl started to lay the rabbit down upon the ground she noticed that its eyes were closing in the last, long sleep and, forgetting her own thirst and fever, she dipped her hand into the spring and began sprinkling upon its head.

At the touch of the first drop the rabbit vanished and before them stood a fairy queen, whose dazzling beauty eclipsed even the loveliness of the girl who knelt before her. Smilingly she laid her wand upon the head of the kneeling maiden. "For many years," she said, "I have been under the spell of a wicked enchantress, and only the pure, unselfish love of a mortal could break the charm. To us you have given freedom. The same I give to you. Stretch forth your hands. To evade your pursuers, I leave with you that which has the hearing of a jackrabbit the sense of smell of a prairie dog, and the intelligence of a human being."

Then the queen was gone and in the outstretched palms of the princess lay—the first Chihuahua dog! And with such help need I add that the prince and his beloved were able to reach permanent safety? Of course, you may doubt—but, no, I forgot. YOU have owned a Chihuahua dog. YOU will understand!

CARE OF THE BODY

Following is from "Youth," by George Starr White:

"Some say that a cancer cannot be cured without cutting it out, yet the very authorities that say this will in the same discussion say that ninety-five times out of a hundred a true cancer will return within three years. In other words, no cancer was ever cured by cutting it out. If it does not return within three years, it was not a cancer.

From my own observation I can say that nine out of every ten cases diagnosed as cancer are not cancer. Others go so far as to say that not one case in a hundred operated on for cancer is cancer.

"Dietetics and hygienic measures no doubt will not only prevent cancer, but will cure it, if not too far advanced.

"The fear of cancer is similar to the fear of hydroprobia. In the one case the first lump discovered is thought to be cancer, and in the other case, the first bite from a dog or cat is thought to produce hydrophobia. This is the result of a systematic fear propaganda, for mercenary reasons."

Gandhi on "Medical Science"

MAHATMA GANDHI, the Hindoo prophet and philosopher, does not think much of "medical science." In a letter to a friend he wrote:

"Medical science is the concentrated essence of black magic. Quackery is infinitely preferable to what passes for high medical skill. Hospitals are the instruments that the devil has been using for his own purpose in order to keep his hold on his kingdom. They perpetuate vice, misery, degradation and real slavery. If there were no hospitals for venereal diseases, or even for consumptives, we should have less consumption, and less sexual vice among us."

Ludlow, The Scene of Milton's "Comus"

BY BELLE COOPER

WRITTEN AT LUDLOW CASTLE
(In the hall where "Comus" was first performed.)
Where wall and sill and broken window-pane
Are bright with flowers unrooted against the skies,
And nothing but the nesting jackdaws' cries
Break the hushed even, once imperial came
The muse that moved transfiguring the name
Of Puritan, and beautiful and wise
The verses fell, forespeaking Paradise,
And poetry set all the hall aflame.

Now silence has come down upon the place
Where life and song so wonderfully went,
And the mole's afoot now where that passion rang.
Yet Comus now first moves his laurelled pace,
For song and life forever are unspent,
And they are more than ghosts who lived and sang.

JOHN DRINKWATER.

WHEN the Associated Press dispatches announced that Viscount Lascelles and his royal bride had left to spend their honeymoon in Shropshire a deep interest was suddenly manifested in this historic county.

"Where is it situated, and what is its chief attraction?" was the immediate query among my young friends.

"It is on the Welsh border, and is famed as the scene of 'Comus,'" answered up hesitatingly.

"Come, you're back at Milton," laughed one of the questioners.

"Not not necessarily," I replied; "I have just read up on Shropshire to enjoy at first hand the rustic simplicity of Alfred Housman's poems in 'A Shropshire Lad.'"

"I know you are very fond of up-to-date poetry; but do tell us about Shropshire and 'Comus'," begged another interrogator, and to stem the current of endless inquiries the main items are jotted down here.

Shropshire is a western midland county of England, bounded on the west by North Wales and on the east by the counties of Stafford and Worcester. Salop—as it is often called, from an ancient name for Shrewsbury, its county seat—is situated on the Marches of Wales, and early became noted for the number and luster of the great families connected with it. Earl Godwin, Sweyn, Harold, "the Last of the Saxons," Queen Edith, Edward the Confessor, Edwin and Morcar, all held lands here in the days before the Conquest.

Ludlow Castle, Residence of Britain's Princes.

TO DEFEND this border county against the Welsh, numerous castles were erected. Out of some 200 castles in England, Shropshire alone is credited with no fewer than thirty. The most noted Salopian castle is Ludlow—the "Prince's Palace"—one of the finest mediaeval castles in England, erected in the twelfth century, and splendidly situated on a commanding height in Ludlow Town at the confluence of the Teme and the Curve. It was once a royal residence, surrounded by walls, one of the seven gates of which still exists, Lynney Gate, at one end of Broa street. Edward IV selected Ludlow as the residence of his sons, the Little Princes of the Tower, who in their happier early years played in its spacious courts and prayed in its circular Norman chapel. Here Arthur, eldest son of Henry VII, celebrated his marriage with Catharine of Aragon, afterwards the queen of his brother Henry, and it was here that the prince of sixteen summers died. The betrothal of Catharine, six years his senior, to Henry, who was only 11, was undoubtedly to save the large dowry which she had brought with her from Aragon. It was an ill-starred mariage de convenance. For generations Ludlow was the seat of a viceregal court; in fact, it has been called the "Star Chamber" of Wales. At one time some sixteen Welsh and English counties chafed under Ludlow jurisdiction. "From Ludlow and Court of the Marches, good Lord deliver us," became an additional local petition in the liturgical services.

Ludlow has literary as well as historical associations. Here, in a lovely, half-timbered house fronting the castle walls, John, Earl of Bridgewater, to the office of is said to have written his masque, "Comus," to celebrate the appointment of John, Earl of Bridgewater to the office of Lord Marcher, or Lord President of Wales and of the Marches. Henry Lawes, a leading musician of the times, gentleman of the royal chapel of Charles I, and active in the production of several masques in London, composed the incidental music and directed the stage production. Lawes is highly eulogized by his pupil Milton in the sonnet of which the octave runs:

Harry, whose tuneful and well-measured song
First taught our English music how to span
Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas's ears, committing short and long,
Thy worth and skill exempts thee from the throng,
With praise enough for Envy to look wan;
To after age thou shalt be writ the man
That with smooth air couldst humour best our tongue.

Inigo Jones, an architect and mechanician of national repute, was engaged to create the scenery and mechanical devices for the stage effect. Every effort was put forth to make the masque an unqualified success, for it the favor of the honored guests, crown officers, knights of the shire and burgesses was won by the courtesies of the entertainment at his official residence, the Earl felt that his task of government would be much lightened.

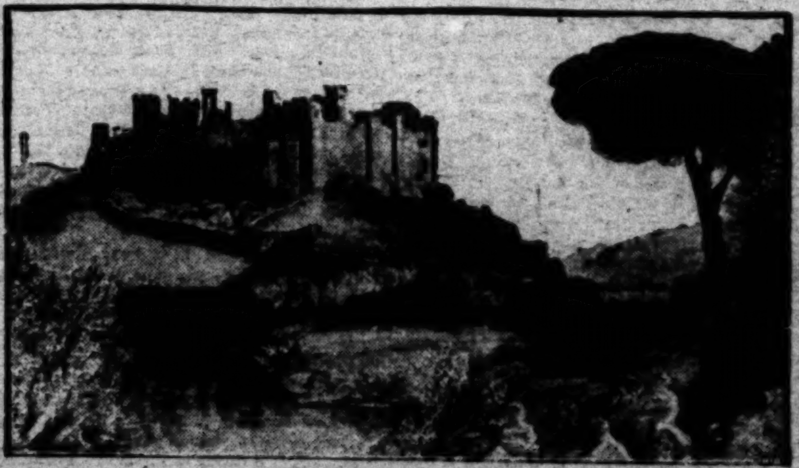
MILTON'S MOTTO FROM COMUS, WITH AUTOGRAPH

Milton's "Comus" Was Given in the Great Hall of the Castle.

THE great hall of Ludlow Castle in which the play was presented on Michaelmas night, September 39, 1634, is sixty feet long and thirty feet wide, and is still in situ. The plot of the masque was suggested by a simple accident to the Earl's three children in Haywood Forest; Milton seized the possibility of "turning the common dust of opportunity to gold." The story is of a girl who becomes separated from her brothers in a wood, and loses her way. The magician Comus, the god of revelry, appears with his wild rout, and tries to bewitch the girl. She is protected by her own purity, is watched over by the Attendant Spirit, and is finally rescued by her brothers. The theme recalls the old ballad of "The Children in the Wood," but has been transformed into a kind of a morality play.



Ludlow, "The President's Castle." By J. M. W. Turner.

The stage represented a gorgeous dissolving palace. The mechanism provided for the raising and the lowering of the Spirit by invisible wires, and a sudden blaze of light or the deepest gloom might be readily produced by lighting or extinguishing the candles in the sconces. At one side were the chair of state, where sat the givers of the feast, the noble peer and his lady, so placed that, without their moving, a little manipulation of the scenery brought them for the final scene within the circle of actors instead of spectators.

Henry Lawes himself played the part of the Attendant Spirit, while the heroine, "The Lady," appeared in the person of Lady Alice Egerton, the 14-year-old daughter of the Earl, a pupil of Lawes, under whose instruction she had learned to sing the lyrics that fell to her part. The First Brother was impersonated by Sir Thomas Egerton, the 12-year-old son of the family.

The play, with its quickly shifting scenes, its rich dialogues, its exquisite music, and its ingenious stage-setting, won the plaudits of the spectators. In the realm of literature, "Comus" ranks, not only as an immortal apotheosis of virtue, but as the greatest composition of its class. While in Geneva, in 1639, Milton was asked for his autograph and an expression of sentiment. He chose the closing lines of "Comus:"

—if Virtue feeble were Heaven itself would stoop to her.

Here, also, within the renowned walls of Ludlow, in a room over the gateway, was written a great part of Samuel Butler's "Hudibras," that inimitable "Don Quixote" in meter, of which the hero, a canting Puritan knight, is said to have been one of Butler's masters—Sir Samuel Luke of Cople Hoo, near Bedford. Butler, a native Strensham-on-the-Avon, Worchestershire, was at the time of writing "Hudibras" steward of Ludlow Castle, an appointment he had received from the Earl of Carberry, the first Lord Marcher after the Revolution. The hoary castle has been denuded by the Roundheads of most of its furnishings, and Butler on taking up his abode there spent a considerable sum of money in furnishing his rooms.

Ludlow Castle, which was finally dismantled in 1689, now belongs to the Earls of Powis. The present Earl was numbered among the honored guests at Princess Mary's wedding. Ludlow is a magnificent ruin, and its rich historical and literary associations have impressed the imaginative youth of Shropshire.

The town of Ludlow itself is not without interest. Thomas Churchyard, the sixteenth-century poet, and a native of Shrewsbury, gives this metrical description of Ludlow Town:

The towne doth stand most part upon a hill,
Built well and fayre, with streetes both longe and wide;
The houses such, where straungers lodge at will,
As long as there the counsell lists abide.
Both fine and cleane the streetes are all throughout,
With condits cleere and wholesome water springs;
And who that lists to walk the towne about
Shall find therein some rare and pleasant things;
But chiefly there the ayre so sweete you have
As in no place ye can no better crave.

Alfred Housman, the modern Shropshire poet, makes Ludlow symbolic of all Shropshire in the lines of a poem replete with local patriotism:

THE RECRUIT

Leave your home behind, lad,
And reach your friends your hand,
And go, and luck go with you
While Ludlow tower shall stand.

Oh, come you home of Sunday
When Ludlow streets are still
And Ludlow bells are calling
To farm and lane and mill,

Or come you home on Monday
When Ludlow market hums
And Ludlow chimes are playing
"The conquering hero comes,"

Come you home a hero,
Or come not home at all,
The lads you leave will mind you
Till Ludlow tower shall fall.

A parallel expression of sentiment from the same pen, but containing a more detailed description of Ludlow youths, is a charming lyric which might be entitled "Ludlow Fair":

XXIII

The lads in their hundreds to Ludlow come in for the fair,
There's men from the barn and the forge and the mill and the fold,
The lads for the girls and the lads for the liquor are there,
And there with the rest are the lads that will never be old.

There's chaps from the town and the field and the till and the cart,
And many to count are the stalwart, and many the brave,
And many the handsome of face and the handsome of heart,
And few that will carry their looks or their truth to the grave.

I wish one could know them, I wish there were tokens to tell
The fortunate fellows that now you can never discern;
And that one could talk with them friendly and wish them farewell
And watch them depart on the way that they will not return.

But now you may stare as you like and there's nothing to scan;
But brushing your elbow unguessed-at and not to be told
Then carry back bright to the coiner the mintage of man,
The lads that will die in their glory and never be old.

The sentiment that recurs in the last line of the stanzas is a familiar one with the poet.

No Other Place Like Home

It may hae stood upon a moor
Or near some rock-ribbed dome
The wee thatched cottage that ye loved
Sweet childhood's happy home
The home that sheltered parents dear
Where first ye learned tae pray
An' where arose the solemn psalms
Upon the Sabbath day.

Aroon aboot in simmer time
The gowan meadows smiled
An' o'er the moss-grown fences, climbed
The pale pink roses wild,
And in the deep (dark) tangled wood
Amid the birch and pine
Ye rambled o'er the mossy turf
An' gathered brackens fine.

Time melts, like clouds o' filmy mist
When memory's sunbeams play
An' all the intervening years
An' shadows fade away.
An' since again amid these scenes
Wi' lightsome hert ye roam
An' sing wi voices vibrant wi' love

CARE OF THE BODY

able to foresee the ultimate, dire results of toxicosis in infancy, childhood or youth, in years to come, that are so patent to one who has the ability to trace causes to their eventually logical effects on the body.

"The mentally blind have no vision, no prophecy, no foresight as to future events arising from dire causes becoming all the while more and more formidable in their blighting effects on the body and mind.

"The fact that there are so many so-called incurable diseases, points to the self-evident conclusion that the fundamental cause of them is overlooked. Hence, the failure to cure or prevent them. When we can find the basic cause of the so-called incurable diseases, we can prevent them by intelligent, hygienic foresight.

"An eminent specialist and author on the disease of the throat and nose, was asked what he regarded as a cure of these troubles. His reply was: 'When the annoying symptoms are removed.'

"Just this sort of ineffective patchwork or makeshift treatment in the art of healing has brought the practice of medicine into disrepute with all thinking people. It should not be so, and it is up to the doctors to redeem themselves from the reproach they now so fully deserve.

"We must get at the remote fundamental cause of premature, fatal diseases, and use every effort to educate the layman as to the hygienic demands of his body. Then, if he fails to heed the advice, the blame will rest on the layman and not upon members of the healing art.

"In this great city, where doctors from all the medical schools of the world congregate and locate and are supposed to have superior advantages in surgery and medicine, they are nevertheless found to be very inefficient. They cannot interpret the meaning of a coated tongue, to say nothing about a chronically coated one.

"Father B. sent a few young men to me for examination, and my report called forth the following remark: 'It is a wonderful revelation of the inefficiency of our nerve and stomach specialists.'

"A physician should be able to make a proper diagnosis of the approaching ills for years to come, especially between the ages of 20 and 40 years, after seeing the coated tongue of an infant, child or youth.

"From a coated tongue, you can tell the whole story of the 150 symptoms, from which a neurasthenic is suffering, far better than the victim can, as he omits many of them; or you can enumerate the symptoms from which the victim is going to suffer, up to the day of his death. . . .

"A chronically coated tongue simply predicates the toxic foulness of the food-tube and sewer-pipe, as well as of all the tissues of the body.

"I am very close to a true clinical fact when I say that all human beings absorb into their bodies three-fourths of all the fecal and gaseous contents of their intestinal sewer, daily, and not a few absorb into their system nine-tenths of their feces and gases over a long period of time. . . .

"The wise doctor foresees the oncoming ills and prevents them. The fool is overwhelmed by his ills and pays the full penalty for neglect.

"The first hint or sign of denutrition and anemia means that the bodily resistance is on the wane. As it progresses it opens the door. One malady follows another until they have destroyed health and life altogether.

As long as physicians are without vision, without foresight, without prophecy based on clear data before them, the healing art will remain in the present noxious desuetude.

"Now, we know the common or the universal cause that slowly but surely undermines bodily resistance to a stage where the long-stored-up foreign substances and hygiene, and practice it, there will be a new danger life by their ravages.

"Little drops of water make the mighty ocean; so do the little bodily symptoms, in time, send the image of God into a premature grave. . . .

"When we thoroughly understand bodily hygiene, and practice it, there will be a new race of men and women who will retain the bloom of youth beyond fourscore years, full of joy and sweetness beyond the power of poets to portray."

"Mixed Diet"

OF ALL kinds of diet there is none more illogical or harmful than the "mixed diet," which we are told so often by "authorities" is the best. Observing the [illegible] diet, into four classes: (1.) herbivorous; (2.) graminivorous; (3.) carnivorous; (4.) frugivorous. Beside man, the hog is the only animal that habitually lives on a mixed diet, and then only after he has been "civilised"—or rather corrupted—by man. Also, it may be noted thatthe hog is more liable to disease than any other animal, except man.

Flesh foods and starch foods require an entirely different process of digestion beforethey can be assimilated in the body. Therefore, when both are eaten at the same time, it naturally tends to dyspepsia, and to more serious disturbances.

Will Power

A CORRESPONDENT writes:

"About two years ago I asked you for advice for the cure of syphilis. I started the cure right away. The healing crisis symptoms came up all right, after three weeks, but in very mild form. All these symptoms disappeared, except the inflammation of the eyes, which lasted about six months.

"Just to know what an M.D. would have to say, I hunted up a 'specialist' in syphilis. He looked into my eyes and gave me the diagnosis: 'Blind in six months.' Then he was ready to pump into me that celebrated '606' but I got out by the side door of the office. Today I can read, without glasses, the finest print by any light.

"I feel strong and healthy. Will power is the first principle to make such a cure effective. Nature never works in a hurry, and she never makes a mistake. Nature only cures if you have the will power to give her a chance.

"These M.D.'s make hundreds of thousands of dollars out of the bogieman, syphilis. Why do they not send their patients out into the fresh air and sunshine, with fresh water, and give them natural diet?"

Cancer

AT A MEETING of the Radiological Society of North America in St. Louis, Dr. Albert Solland said:

"The three best agents for the control of cancer, are radium, X-ray and surgery, and any of the three may effect cures, though none is an absolute cure, due to the fact that cancers are not always confined to one spot. Often they are malignant in one spot but may spread widely throughout the body tissue."

Exactly. Cancer is a constitutional disease, and can never be cured by local treatment atlone.

The X-ray is more or less dangerous. An operation never cures, and the cancer always returns, sooner or later, with increased virulence, unless the mode of life is changed.

There is no possibility of curring cancer without regulation of the diet.

Dr. John Shaw of England who has devoted most of his professional career to cancer research, and for many years had advocated the treatment of the disease without operation, says:

"It is an unmitigated benefit that public interest has been aroused in the question of cancer research by the generous offers of certain philanthropists. Is it reasonable, however, to suppose that men who hold (or held) thatthe treatment without operation of an operable cancer is "criminal," and that its alleged cure is itself proof positive that the tumor was not really cancerous, can be impartial judges of the value of non-operative treatment?

"I venture to believe that the time will not be far distant when operations for cancer will appear as anomalous as blood-letting to the practitioner of today."

Rupture Kills 8000 Annually

Eight thousand persons each year are laid away—the burial certificate being marked "Rupture." Why? Because the unfortunate ones had neglected themselves or had been merely taking care of the sign (swelling) of the affliction and paying no attention to the cause. What are you doing? Are you neglecting yourself by wearing a truss appliance, or whatever name you choose to call it? At best the truss is only a makeshift—a false prop against a collapsing wall—and cannot be expected to act as more than a mere mechanical support. The binding pressure retards blood circulation, thus robbing the weakened muscles of that which they need most—nourishment.

But science has found a way and every truss sufferer in the land is invited to make a FREE test right in the privacy of his own home. The PLAPAO Method is unquestionably the most scientific, logical and successful self-treatment for rupture the world has ever known.

The PLAPAO PAD, when adhering closely to the body, cannot possibly slip or shift out of place, therefore cannot chafe or pinch. Soft as velvet—easy to apply—inexpensive. To be used whilst you work and whilst you sleep. No straps, buckles or springs attached.

Learn how to close the hernial opening as nature intended, so the rupture CAN'T come down. Send your name today to PLAPAO CO., 223 Stuart Bldg., St. Louis, Mo., for FREE trial Plapao and the information necessary.—[Advertisement.

A NEW SIZE—A NEW STYLE

The Man Killer

BY FREDERICK IRVING ANDERSON

THERE were no primroses on the river's brim for Mr. Parr, deputy of police and inveterate man hunter by twenty years of habit. He could only see red, even when he was looking at green.

"Up there," said Mr. Parr, apropos des bottes, as the French say, indicating with a jerk of a thumb the sheep nibbled eminence of Beacon Hill, "up there women manslaughter their husbands with the utmost impunity."

He turned to scowl ferociously at his companion, Oliver Armiston, whose whole attention was occupied in holding his mettlesome roadster down to three miles an hour on high, behind a fleet of stone-deaf moving vans.

"I call it 'Murderers' Row,'" rasped the man hunter in Oliver's car, showing his teeth in a mirthless smile Armiston bleated feebly at the rumbling obstruction ahead. He had been bleating for his right of way for the last ten minutes. Several times the rearmost car had swung out, and just as Oliver gave his eager engine the gas a car would come snorting through the gap from the opposite direction, and before Oliver could pull himself out of the ditch the insolent moving van would be perched on the crown of the road again.

Mr. Parr returned his fierce look to Murderers Row. Coy rooftrees, ornate and glinting, returned his regard over the feathery taps of exotic shrubbery. Beacon Hill was gorgeous, especially on such a June day as this. Nature and landscape architects had conspired to eradicate the last taint of poverty from this part of the island, the 'Hampton Country. Oliver continued to bleat plaintively with his horn.

"The first one," mused Parr, glowering at a red tile expanse of roof showing amid aisles of lank locusts, "the first one used white arsenic."

The aggrieved Oliver, one immovable eye on the van ahead, suddenly snarled at the inextinguishable deputy.

"The first what?" he demanded.

"The first lady," said Parr suavely. "She was quite frank about it. The second—that one with the holy cologne bottles on the ridgepole—used a pearl handled pea shooter. Lord! You wouldnt have thought it would kill a flea. But it did! He snapped his chops over this reflection. "The third one"—he ruminated further—"where you see the green shingles—preferred a sawed-off shotgun. There was hardly enough left for the coroner."

Parr removed his cap and scratched his head reflectively.

"The fourth one,." he began, and paused, surveying his companion with renewed ferocity. "I don't seem to recollect what happened the fourth one. Maybe nothing."

The man hunter subsided momentarily, adjusting the wrapper of his cigar.

"Parr," said Oliver patiently, "you've been seeing blood ever since we left the city line. You've been pointing out the landmarks of oilcloth murders and trunk mysteries and garrotings all along the road. Forget it! You're on your vacation, man! Take a nip of the air. Look at the sky. The grass. The trees. The flowers. Can't you imagine some innocence somewhere?"

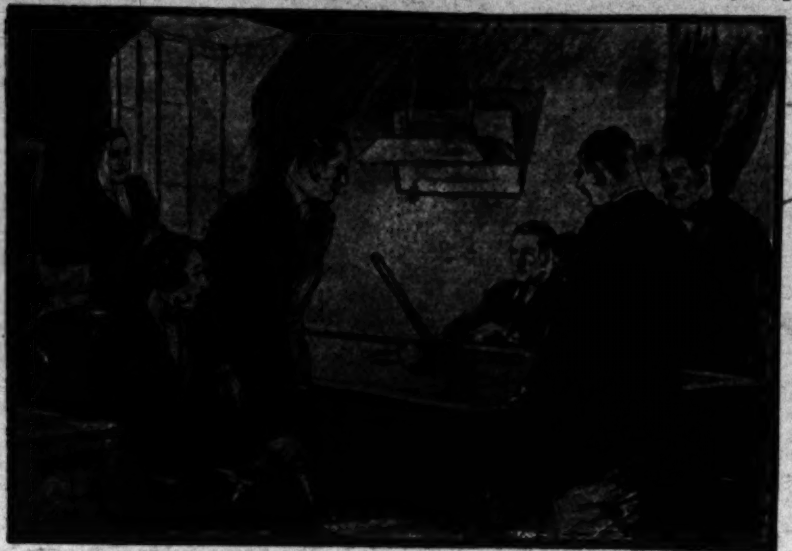
"O, if it doesn't interest you,' said Parr glumly. It was true he was on a vacation—the first in twenty years. He had consented to come, but with misgivings.

"Turn to the left!' he commanded suddenly, waking up; and Oliver obediently turned into a little side road. "Give her her head! There's a parallel road a half mile out. We can run around that mob of piano movers if we can't run through them." Now the deputy was positively jocular. Somewhat cheered, Oliver stepped on the gas, and the lithe car jumped into a sprint like a quarter horse. "I know this country like a book," roared Parr in Oliver's ear as he clutched his cap. "I used to live here—off and on—when Murderers' Row—was in—eruption."

A winding road lost itself among nicely barbered trees, to emerge at an upper level, where an ornamental garden looked over the edge of the escarpment. There sat the fourth house of Murderers' Row. It was an ornate affair. Carved in stone was its name—"White Bars."

At this instant Chance, that mischievous handmaiden of Fate, doubtless summoned by the pregnant auguries of the situation, took the center of the stage. Drama was in the air. The scene was set, the actors waiting. In the first place, there was Parr, inveterate man hunter, whose fame extended from Cape Cod to Waikiki. Beside him sat Oliver Armiston, extinct writer of tall tales, whose undue fame as a fiction criminologist had for some years held his imagination in leash. For a back drop Murderers' Row looked down espectantly through the shrubbery as though thirsting for fresh notoriety.

It was just here that Chance put her shoulder to the wheel. A moving van, abandoned by its keeper on a saucerlike incline in the road, started to roll down hill. It come to halt with a gentle bump. The bump itself was harmless enough, but the effect was like the kiss of a trigger on fulminate. A thousand devils, suddenly liberated in the interior of that van, sprang to life, swinging gigantic flails.



The wooden maul, teetering on its rounded edge, was the focus of glazed stares.

"The man killer! The man killer!" bellowed the head piano mover through the hideous clamor; and, as the herd ran pellmell to the van, a pair of glistening hoofs, driven by a fury incarnate, crashed through the rear doors. The hoofs were gone and come again, this time carrying the two doors off their hinges with a shower of splinters.

Parr and Armiston lined up alongside just as a demond horse, backing and kicking itself free of hobbles, crashed to the roadway on its haunches. A knot in the torn halter rope caught fast in a broken hinge, and held—for the moment at least. The mad beast now seemed bent on strangling itself. Farr, noting the agony of the animal and its obvious aristocracy, tried to dodge in to its head, but he quickly desisted and backed off, helpless, rubbing an ear that had been fanned by those lashing sharp shod hoofs.

Just then, with a clatter of hoofs from behind, three riders wheeled through the stone arch of the gate, two men and a woman. They cannonaded up, careless of the fact that Parr and Armiston stood in their path. The woman slipped out of her saddle in the middle of a full stride with the dexterity of a trained matador. With a sharp, eager croy of "High Gun! High Gun!" in a bound she was at the animal's head; she clamped a long fingered, jeweled hand on its muzzle. The effect was sheer magic. Instantly at that touch the murderous horse became subdued, though it continued to tremble slightly as she rubbed her cheek against the velvet nose and fondled an ear. High Gun arched his graceful neck to her shoulder.

"O! You darling baby!" she cried ecstatically, stroking the sleek neck. She loosened the demon's throatlatch and took off the torn halter. She let the halter drop and stood examining the creature for a pensive moment; then she slowly walked around the horse, running a hand over the pasterns and hocks.

She was in boots, breeches and jacket, with a starched ruff, and beneath her little hard hat her mahogany hair was drawn so tightly as to accent the natural sharpness of her features. She was of a type indigenous to this 'Hampton country, as fit and as sleek as her horse. Parr stared in frank admiration.

Another caress and she turned her back on the man killer and strode across the road, where her own mount, a spare roan, was picking grass in the ditch. Her "darling baby" followed at her shoulder, nosing her playfully. She slipped the bridle from the roan and inserted the bit, clinking, between the villainous teeth of the demon; with quick, sure movements she made the ears snug, drew tight the headstall. In a twinkling she had transferred the saddle and blanket, and, putting her beautiful neck in jeopardy, she reached under High Gun's belly for the girth. With a knee braced against the animal's ribs, she drew the girth tight and made it fast. Neither of her two companions offered to assist. She was so splendidly competent that comment or aid seemed superfluous.

One of the men had dismounted and, with one arm hooked over his steed's roached neck, hung idly watching her. He was a startlingly tall man, large boned; he bore a curious resemblance in facial contour to the horse beside him. If he admired the graceful shining creature or the woman's skill in subduing it, or if he were aware that strangers were looking on at the dramatic spectacle, his equine countenance gave no hint.

The second man sat idly looking down on them with a feebly amused expression. He had the tufted brows and the sharp beak of a hawk; his lean face was decorated with an absurdly slender mustache that seemed to have been "tweezed," as some ladies these days "tweeze" their eyebrows. It was he who spoke first.

"You'll break your fool neck," he ventured absently.

The woman said, not to the languid prophet, but to the other:

"That barrel, Cecil! What?" Her long eyes glittered with pride as she caressed the horse with a look. She took out a cigarette, and as she tapped it daintily on her gold case, she asked with a look of approbation—not for herself, but for her precious High Gun. Cecil nodded stonily. These two were undoubtedly high priests of the paddock, versed in a cult hidden to ordinary mortals. She thrust out a varnished boot, and Cecil, with one seven-league stride, was beside her; he gave her a leg us as though she were a featherweight in the hollow of his hand.

"He'll break your fool neck," croaked the male Cassandra from his high seat, wasting another mouthful of breath.

The shining, eager beast, at the touch of her knees, made the ditch in one bound; with a flirt of the ribbons she gave the horse its head, and it sailed over the stone wall through the brown of the rail birds, who threw themselves desperately to right and left with wild yells. Cecil was only a jump behind her, and with resounding hoofs the second gentleman now bestirred himself; he slapped the roan over the rump with his crop and followed it clattering through the gate and up the drive.

Armiston and Parr were back in their car, and Oliver's low spirits bobbed up like a cork as he let in the clutch and started ahead; that demon horse had at least served to eliminate road hogs from the vacation scenery. Parr now lapsed into a brown study, chewing a match end. Some distance down the road Oliver broke the silence. He said:

"I had the queer sensation back there of being invisible. You, too, Parr. Those three never saw us—no more than if we weren't there.

"That's aristocracy, my boy," said Parr. He was wearing his fiercest frown. "You've been in society today, son," he added. "That was Jimmie Penwarden."

"Eh? Which one?"

"The one that rather hoped Mrs. Jimmie would break her neck," said Parr. "She may," added the man hunter thoughtfully, "but I doubt it."

Jimmie Penwarden was famous primarily for Mrs. Jimmie; he took blows for her when she did something astonishing, which she was forever doing. Also Jimmie was notable in his own right for his clothes. Twelve months in the year he was stalked in his haunts by intrepid photographers for illustrating society journals published for the delectation of the hoi-polloi. It seemed an idle thing—man's attire—to hang ambition on; nevertheless Jimmie was the object of envy among his kind. He followed Mrs. Jimmie about assiduously, fetched and carried for her with the utmost willingness. If there was a shade of rather bored tolerance in her attitude, she accepted him as a necessary and even valuable adjunct; Jimmie rarely got in her way.

The road Armiston traveled accompanied a busy brook down a long winding hill, emerging in the bowl of the valley where basked a ramshackle hamlet inhabited by the few adventurous natives who had stayed behind after the conquest of these hills by the idle rich.

They were half way down the village street when Parr exploded in a "Hel-lo!" Armiston, wondering brought the car to a gentle stop at the curb. The deputy commissioner of police leaped out and the next instant was joyfully buffeting an inoffensive rustic asleep in a chair tilted against the sunny side of what appeared to be the temple of justice. On the sleeper's suspender, shining like a beacon, sat a polished star proclaiming him to be a sheriff. It was Jeremiah Zabriskie, Poohbah of these parts.

As Sheriff Zabriskie came out of a sound sleep and recognized his old friend Parr, Armiston had a swift premonition that they would never see Shelter Island on this trip It speedily developed that the three grand occasions of the career of Mr. Zabriskie—the triple eruptions of Beacon Hill—were indissolubly associated with the famous Mr. Parr. Daily during the phenomenal run of the three widows pleading unwritten law in this same court the sheriff and Mr. Parr (the latter as consulting engineer) had been photographed together for the Sunday Supplements.

The first ebullition over, the sheriff admitted that he had just dispatched a boy for a bushel of shrimp to chum with—for in these milk-and-water times he had taken refuge in fishing.' Mr. Parr straightway invited himself and Oliver.

Afternoon lengthened into evening. There was a good supper. The Sheriff's wife, after giving motherly attention to the batch of prisoners in cells in the basement, stood at Oliver's elbow during the meal with lively reminiscenses of the days when the lightning of violence had struck and struck again and yet again, on Beacon Hill, with horrible iteration. As the people who live within the shadow of a volcano date all events from its eruptions, so the dwellers in this happy valley reverted with pride in all their talk to the three cataclysmic crimes that had focused the eyes of the world on them.

When she raked off the crumbs of the repast she presented Oliver, as a special favor, the entombed records of those grisly occasions, the proces verbal of crimes that had been read by the whole country with its morning coffee. The details stared at him in glaring headlines in the pall of cold type. Thumbing those pages, and picking up a thread here and there, Oliver got the reek of it—the fluttering murmur of the veiled woman in the box; the buzz of flies; the drone of clerks; the barking challenge and lettuce and young onions in a box on a shelf, in an outbuilding, or in your kitchen. ...yhow, you should and must get it, by hook or by crook, even if you have to procure it sent by mail, at 8 a pound, from the nearest place where it is obtainable. Eight cents a pound is a small price to pay for health.

Following is from an article in the Forecast (New York) by Jessie A. Knox:

"To cook cabbage properly, cut it in quarters, remove the core and soak the cabbage for at least half an hour in cold water. Drain, cut in small pieces and cover with boiling water. Boil rapidly in an uncovered saucepan for fifteen minutes, add salt—one tablespoonful to a medium-sized cabbage—and continue cooking for ten minutes or until the cabbage is tender. Drain, chop and season with salt, pepper and butter. The cabbage, cooked in this way, will be white, delicate in flavor and texture and easy of digestion. There will be no objectionable odor in the house, as is the case when the pan is covered and the cabbage cooked an hour or so. Long cooking darkens it or sometimes turns it pink and nearly always develops a bitter or strong flavor. The vegetable may be shredded or put through a meat chopper and cooked for ten minutes, when it will be found to be tender and delicate in flavor. This method, however, causes a large loss of the mineral salts and is not recommended as a general rule.

"There is no need for the family to tire of cabbage as a vegetable or salad, as there are many combinations and methods of serving that can be used. Cabbage purees, puffs, rolls, stuffed cabbage, the many varieties of salads and relishes, stewed cabbage, cabbage au gratin; all these give the housekeeper no excuse for omitting cabbage from her bill-of-fare on the plea that her family tires of it if she serves it often."

Good Suggestions

FOLLOWING is contributed by Carl Schultz, M.D.:

"Do not drink with your meals. If thirsty, drink an hour before and an hour after meals. Do not drink milk, cream, coffee, tea or any alcoholic beverages. Do not drink anything too cold or very hot. Do not eat meat. Do not eat vegetables and fruit at the same meal. Do not eat when you are tired, excited or angry. Do not eat fried or greasy food. Do not eat hot or fresh bread. Do not eat hot cakes, pies or candy. Avoid all condiments. Eat slowly, masticate your food well. Rest before and after each meal as long as possible.

"Have pure and healthy th... talk abou your disease. Look ... thing from the bright side. Don't worry. Don't overwork. If you do mental work, take each day some physical exercise. Practice deep breathing. Learn to understand nature. Follow the laws of nature and you will have no need of a physician."

How to Read Men

FOLLOWING is from that excellent little publication, Our Dumb Animals:

"Warden Davis, of the Jackson (Mich.) prison, has a peculiar method of reading the nature of his prisoners. "A mean man hates a dog," said Warden Davis; "you put that down as morally certain. I have stationed my old family dog here—good old soul, never had a mean thought in his life—at the gate as the convicts filed through, and watched their faces as they saw him. The men whom we know to be wicked, black-souled criminals either look away from the dog or glare at him with a look of wild ferocity, while the better class of convicts smile pleasantly at the old chap, and frequently favor him with a pleasant word."

The Water Cure

AMONG the numerous rational methods of aiding nature to eliminate disease, there has in this country of late been a tendency to belittle or ignore the importance of water treatments, or hydrotherapy. Only those who have had experience with scientific hydropathic treatments can begin to realize what a wonderful power there is in water. Give a man a hot bath and scrub him, then put him in a wet pack and see—and smell—what comes out of him.

Water treatments must, however, not be pushed to an extreme. There is danger in over-doing the application of cold water to sensitive organizations.

Big books (mainly German) have been

... hydrotherapy is a science, to practice which requires much more experience and skill (and much more work) than to sit at a roll top desk, and write out prescriptions in dog Latin.

Hurry

"MORE haste, worse speed," is an old proverb, that Americans would do well to bear in mind. Hurry is closely allied with worry And worry—a form of fear—is one of the greatest foes of health.

Haste caused 18,000 persons to lose their lives at railroad crossings in the United States during the past year.

Following is from the Dearborn Independent:

"Hurry is a chronic American disease, an evil habit that has fastened itself, cancer-like, on our life, and has sent its roots deep down into our vitals.

"Hurry is not speed. It is not energy. It is not the opposite of slothfulness. It is not a means by which great ends are accomplished.

"A study of the men of affairs, who have made, or are making history, will demonstrate that hurry is not a characteristic of the man who is doing things worth while.

"There are exceptions, of course, but almost invariably the man of affairs is deliberate. He accomplishes much, but he does it calmly, measuredly, and according to schedule.

"His schedule is so planned, perhaps, that every moment of the working day is assigned, but there is sufficient time for each task when its time comes. He does not hurry.

"The hurrying man is one who, with immature plans, is trying to keep up with a poorly arranged schedule, and is always a little behind.

"Hurry, because it involves lost motion, makes for inefficiency.

"Some men imagine that hurry is a virtue, that their feverish activities help to keep them in the limelight.

"Such activities may impress some persons, but not those who read below the surface.

"Among the most reprehensible of the hurry tribe are those to whom traffic rules are anathema, and who are willing to take long chances to save ten minutes in a trip to or from town.

"It is this class that furnishes the daily menu of automobile casualties.

"Perhaps the most effectual punishment for this type of individual would be to give the traffic officers authority to order every speeding car to the side of the road, and there padlock it for half an hour, or more, according to the gravity of the offense.

"Another class of the hurrier who, however, injures only himself, orders and eats his meals with a rush.

"One chef is quoted as saying that the curse of American cooking is the injunction, "Rush this order, please." Neither good preparation of food nor good digestion goes with such an order.

"Whoever is living a hurried life is living a poorly planned, disordered, nervous, inefficient life, and is meanwhile rushing the undertaker!"

Fundamental Cause of Disease

THE fundamental cause of all disease is the slow poisoning of the body, through foulness of the colon, and retention and absorption of poisonous waste matter. This is caused by faulty alimentation and elimination.

Alcinous B. Jamison, M.D., writes:

"The hygienic care of the soil and waste material in the gastrointestinal appartus requires our best thought and care, in order that it may function properly from birth to the end of a normal existence.

Gastrointestinal foulness and systematic toxicosis has been and continues to be the bane of human existence. THE MAN KILLER of contending lawyers; the rustle and uneasy shifting of the craning audience; and the indrawn breath at the inevitable verdict that justified cold slaughter by delicate women. This was the personnel of Murderers' Row, in which Parr took such a proprietary interest! They lived "kind of to themselves," the sheriff's wife said. O, yes, they still lived up there on the hill.

Oliver could picture the gradual and qualified withdrawal of the countryside as the glamour of the sensation waned, and the moment's tragedy queen lapsed into the smallbeer heroine. Every crime has its aura; the verdict of the court is not the last word. Even through his disgust, Oliver was conscious of the curious thread of paganism in these related histories.

He read himself tired, saturated himself with the realism of stark words. Finally he put himself to bed in the sepulchral silence of the village night.

He was trying to blind his eyes to the glare of the early sun, when he became aware that Deputy Parr, with shining morning face, was standing over him trying to impress some weird fact on his half-awakened senses.

"'They moved in the fourth husband last night,'" repeated Armiston automatically; then he sat bolt upright, staring.

"Hurry," commanded Parr, starting out. "We'll wait for you, down below."

It was the fastidious Jimmie whose fool neck had been broken, not Mrs. Jimmie, as he himself had so blithely prophesied on the occasion of High Gun's dress rehearsal, the day before. No doubt had it been turn about Jimmie would have felt constrained to appear (outwardly, at least) quite as bitterly resentful against her as she now felt against him. One doesn't get one's self brained by a pet horse without involving one's next of kin in a bad half hour with the police.

Nothing had been disturbed. There is a grewsome etiquette about such things, prompted doubtless by some common horrid understanding that the law, like a microscopist, demands its specimens frozen in an attitude, so that if necessary they may be sliced micrometer thin and examined by transmitted light. To the three experienced men who stood silently peering in over the half door of High Gun's box stall it seemed that a tyro could easily fit together the pieces of the swift catastrophe. Mrs Jimmie and their guest summoned by the departing shrieks of the victim, had arrived too late. The gaunt Cecil, however, had had the forethought, in that moment of finality, to thrust a fourteen-foot gate pole between the gratings to crowd High Gun into the far corner.

Poor Jimmie lay there on the clean straw, one hand extended as if reaching for the overturned measure of oats, High Gun's breakfast. The beautiful horse, silky as a kitten and quite as tame, turned its lustrous eyes on them as they spoke in lowered tones, whickering now and again with wistful friendliness. The perfect cast of a steel shod hoof at the base of the skull told the whole tale with ghastly terseness.

"Go about it! Get it over with!" said Mrs. Jimmie, as she tapped her gold case with a cigarette she had been about to light for the last hour. She had told her story in curt sentences. The whole thing had been over in a moment. Jimmie had always been afraid of the horse. But sheer bravado had sent him out. There were no servants, it seemed, in the house, the kitchen, or the paddock. There had been a walkout, in town, a few days before, when it transpired below stairs that the household would summer again in the 'Hamptons instead of at the North Shore for a change. A fresh batch had been consigned the day before, but something had diverted the shipment. There was nothing more—the facts were before them.

She hung the cigarette in her dry lips and surveyed the sheriff, shaved and starched for the occasion, through those glittering long eyes that looked as if they had never known a tear.

I'm not a sentimental woman," she said, without moving her lips. She added—"But it is bound to shake one."

She took to tapping the cigarette again, as if she found some relief from her acid reflections in this simple act. She was clothed as on the day before—in fact, this woman lived in breeches. One pigskin leg was balanced over the other as she sat hunched in an old arm chair in the disordered billiard room. Boxes and crates and bundles of burlap stood or lay about. At the end of the room, the blinds of a French window had been withdrawn, letting in the morning sun through blurred panes; and beside this window stood the rawboned Cecil, not looking up when Zabriskie entered. Cecil concerned himself with a sliver imbedded in the fat of a thumb. There were the remains of a breakfast on the dusty cover of a billiard table — three glasses, a carafe and fragments of hardtack, indicating the conventual meagerness of early morning fare in sporting high life.

Zabriskie, who was not overkeen, had the vague and fugitive impression that this wife and friend of the dead man had occupied the same impassive attitudes for the last hour—since, in fact, the telephone messages (one to himself, the other to Struthers, her lawyer in town) had been sent off shortly after daybreak. It was as though the shock of the tragedy had cut the wires of communication between them. Zabriskie sensed an antipathy, a curious withdrawal each from each. They had nothing to say to each other; nevertheless for the time being they were tied hard and fast together by this act of inconceivable stupidity on the part of poor Jimmie.

"Well! Is there anything more?" demanded Mrs. Jimmie, as if the mere presence of this man of the law strained her endurance to the breaking point.

Zabriskie, rather ill at ease, ventured the suggestion that possibly the lady who had told all she knew of the case—bravely, too—might want to rest; the gentleman—and the sheriff cast a look at Cecil, who remained stonily inert, could attend to other formalities. Zabriskie seemed to ask her indulgence for the callous juridical curiosity of the law even on an occasion such as this; he wished to spare her the cruelty of any further inquisition. A wintry smile flitted across her face as, eyes downcast, she permitted the loutish official to stumble through what he so evidently meant as an act of delicacy. If the gentleman would accompany him, said Zabriskie, eyeing the wooden image at the window—

Mrs. Jimmie brought him up with a sharp "No!" Cecil had been let in for quite enough as it was. Instantly softening her tone she went on:

"You must pardon the feelings of a wife, sir. But it is I—I alone—who must answer all questions—see this through to the end. No one can speak for me—" After a little pause—"about Jimmie."

At this moment the roar of a motor announced the arrival of the forehanded Struthers, to be instantly hushed, as he lifted his racing car up to the terrace, with the echoing cries of frightened birds. The sheriff, hurrying out to join him, found Struthers drawing off his gloves and peering through the door of the box stall.

"Well, Jimmie," the lawyer was saying under his breath, apostrophizing the figure on the straw, "at last you succeeded in doing something original. Eh, Jimmie?"

He turned and discovered Parr standing there in the darkness of the box.

"Parr!" he said, queerly. He questioned the deputy with uneasy eyes. "There's nothing here for you?"

"I was passing,' said Parr.

"And you, Oliver!"

Armiston looked up with a curt nod from a keg where he sat nursing one knee. He knew Struthers as a shrewd fashionable lawyer who danced with the younger set and exercised their inheritances for them. Apparently Mrs. Jimmie, who was not a sentimental woman, had given him a coherent account by telephone in those first moments of her bereavement. Struthers cogitated for some seconds, eyeing Parr, who waited.

"It's bad business, Parr."

Parr sniffed. "He never knew what hit him," he said slowly.

"O, not that!" said the lawyer hastily, hardly giving Jimmie the grace of a look now. "Its Mallet!"

"Mallet!' said Parr, curiously.

The lawyer nodded.

"The honorable Cecil," he explained, with a jerk of his head over a shoulder. He's a—" He paused abruptly and stared at Zabriskie suspiciously.

"Sheriff Zabriskie," said Parr. "He's in authority."

"Cecil is official, you know, and incognito,' muttered the worried lawyer. He lowered his voice. "British Intelligence Service—won't do at all! We must keep him severely out of it! There'll be a riot in the papers, of course. Jimmie and Mrs. Jimmie!"—he jerked his head at the big house rising out of the morning mists—"and this empty house—and the three of them, alone."

Parr added [illegible]

"And up here, too."

"Eh. What do you mean?"

Murderers' Row,' said the deputy with a grim smile.

"Good God! I'd clean forgotten! I say, this is rotten!" Struthers turned and stared hypnotised at the three prim roof trees presiding over finely landscaped gardens just beyond. Three legally-justified uxoricides would shortly be opening their morning shutters and looking out sympathetically—it was already eight oclock.

A long silence intervened. Parr seemed to enjoy it. Zabriskie chewed meditatively at a straw as his eyes wandered about the circumscribed stage of the tragedy. Oliver's fingers began to itch—had he only had his typewriter to play with, he might think.

"O, I say, Parr! You're not going to let the yellows drag that in!" cried the lawyer aghast, as he suddenly conceived the length of the shadow those three other women had cast over this hill. His eyes were drawn to the patient dead man. "Poor devil!" he muttered. "He never had a cent. She had it all. His cousins, the Van Duersins, staked him occasionally, so he wasn't exactly a pauper. How do you happen to be here, anyway, Parr? You're rather out of your jurisdiction, aren't you?"

"No, this is an old stamping ground for me up here," drawled Parr. "Im getting to be a sort of guest conductor." He took Struthers by the arm, and they started to pace across the blue stone drive to the house. "The sheriff and I were cleaning fish this morning when the message came, I'm on my vacation," he added, with a queer smile. "Curious thing," he volunteered as they walked along, "but Oliver and I were driving by when that horse staged a dress rehearsal on the public road yesterday."

While they paused to talk in the drive, Armiston was prowling about the stall. The properties were so preciously few that he moved round and round. That gate bar held his attention. It was a massive thing, painted a glistening white, decorated with brass ferrule. It must have taken a giant to handle it singly from the outside—a giant laboring under superhuman excitement. Its smooth surface was nicked with many a glancing caulk of timber toppers, mementoes of high days and holidays up here on this beautiful hill. It had been driven, wedged into place, and stood as rigid as a riveted beam. Armiston, as he examined the outside end, noted from the battered butts that it had been pounded home. Evidently Cecil had taken no chances that those villainous heels would reach Jimmie again. A wooden maul lay there where Cecil had dropped it.

"I'd like to see that hoof," said Oliver, looking dubiously at the friendly High Gun.

"So would I," agreed Zabriskie. They approached the bar, High Gun nosing them and whickering again for his delayed breakfast. Zabriskie had been a blacksmith's apprentice in the days when horses were in flower among the commonalty down here. He ran a practiced hand along the clean back, down the flank to the pastern; with the touch of a mechanic who knew his trade, he picked up the foot and settled it heavily between his two knees, High Gun accepting the familiar move with quiet confidence.

It was the left hoof; the steel plate still bore its grisly signature.

"See if you can find a pair of tongs," said the sheriff. "That plate has got to come off, anyway."

In the toolhouse close by Oliver found the tongs and fetched them. Zabriskie tapped the shoe with the tool, from the habit of a mechanic.

"It's loose, anyhow," he mumbled. "He'd a' cast this plate in a few more jumps."

With a twist of the wrist he drew off the shoe, and let High Gun down on all fours again. They examined the hideous memento. Parr was calling Armiston, and Oliver, answering the summons, found them in the billiard room, the now pompous Struthers going through the form of introductions.

"The Honorable Cecil Mallet, gentlemen," repeated Struthers unctuously.

The Honorable Cecil looked up momentarily to acknowledge the introduction. He was still giving surgical attention to his sliver.

"I am afraid your precious High Gun will have to pay the penalty this time, Madam," said Parr.

"This time?" asked Mrs. Jimmie, narrowing her eyes.

"He has a record, I believe," replied the deputy, watching her quietly. Their looks met, like foils touching in the first salute.

"He brained a stable boy, a year or two back—over in Jersey?" continued Parr. [illegible] nodded.

"And was condemned to be [illegible] after that. Wasn't he?"

Again the woman bent her head.

"You smuggled the horse out of the State, ma'am." Parr was alarmingly direct; the woman stiffened.

"High Gun," she said to her cigarette, "is a lineal descendant of Adalbahram—the only one in this country. Because an idiot of a boy got in the way of his heels must I destroy the blood?" She raised her eyes to challenge Parr squarely.

During this interchange Oliver had wandered over to the French window, intent on a sliver of his own; he too had handled that gate-bar. He was operating with a small pair of tweezers.

"Did he fight?" he asked absently, picking at his finger.

The tall Englishman's mouth dropped open.

"High Gun I mean—when you shoved in that pole?"

"O! No!" The Honorable Cecil heaved a sigh.

"There!' said Oliver triumphantly. "I've got mine. Let me get yours for you." He took Cecils hand in his own without further ado, and with a single deft movement of his tweezers drew out the annoying sliver. "Its a young crow bar!" he said, holding it up. "You ought to get an antiseptic in that hole right away. I've got some in my car," offered the gracious Armiston, and he hurried off to fetch it.

Here in the billiard room the drama had practically reached an impasse. Parr was the obstacle. Cecil remained tongue tied at his post. Mrs. Jimmie chafing at the restraint made no attempt to conceal her resentment at the deputy commissioner's intrusion. Struthers, entirely alive to the effect of Parr's presence, strove to pour oil on the troubled waters. Parr himself sat back ponderously, letting the lawyer do all the talking, while his keen eyes missed no detail.

Behind his urbane front, as he lent ear, the old man hunter was in the throes of an unprecedented mental conflict. Within the last few moments, with no tangible circumstance to hang it on, the conviction had gradually grown in Parr's mind that he sat in the presence of murder. So irresistible was the impression that it seemed to his startled senses as if some one had shouted it aloud. In the next moment he was dismissing the idea as an arraignment of cold logic—he, a police expert judging before the facts! He looked about him, as if expecting to find some confirmation. Their attitudes and manner were unchanged. Mrs. Jimmie was petulantly tapping her eternal cigaret; Cecil had not moved a hair.

It was all too pat, the deputy told himself. An animal act—and it must be an animal act, if anything—never goes off exactly as it is scheduled, even on the stage. This one had run on oiled wheels. Glancing from one to the other, Parr assured himself again it must be an accident. It could be nothing not moved by a hair.

But the doubt persistently returned; it was like an obsession. Why? How? Struthers' monologue gradually penetrated his thoughts. Meeting with no opposition, the lawyer was arranging it all. They would run the Honorable Cecil down to the shore, and a fast motor cruiser would take him to town in a jiffy.

Of course, the woman was the intelligence; that wordless ninny by the window would be merely the tool—Parr was again coming back to his fixed idea. But how, how—and why? This was a problem for the hectic faculties of Oliver Armiston, which Parr for lack of a better understanding was wont to ascribe to clairvoyance. Oliver, in collusion with the familiar that dwelt in the keys of his trusty typewriter, had developed an uncanny introspection. Set a stage with its characters, load the scene with atmosphere, and the action flowed from his finger-ends. That was the fiction writer's metier. Parr had made use of him a score of times, solving the "frozen" plots that had baffled shrewdest operatives. Parr did not attempt to understand his methods, but Oliver's results had made criminal history. Oliver's explanation was cryptic—instinct can be reduced to a chart; impulse follows a groove. But where was Oliver? What was keeping him?

"Mr. Commissioner," broke in Struthers in oily tones, "we are exceedingly fortunate to have you with us. We need authority, and understanding—and appreciation of how international relations might be seriously embarrassed by a wrong step."

"What was the other gentleman? I playmates. She ran crying to another room and threw herself on the couch. At first I paid no attention to her, but that night I heard the poor child sobbing. I went to her bed and asked her what the trouble was. She answered me in a choking voice, 'Papa—you've broken my heart, papa.'

"I would give my life not to have scolded our baby, but it's too late now to recall what should not have been spoken. She did not feel the same to me after that, and I was sorry that I ever allowed my temper to get the best of me.

"The following day my baby put her arms around my neck and said, 'Papa, I didn't break the vase purposely,' and began to cry. . . . The poor, dear little thing would not forget. It was an awful reprimand to me, and I wept as it touched a responsive chord in my heart. I started to go. She called for me to come back, but I kept on going, feeling keenly the wrong I had done in scolding my baby. She ran to the street and called, 'Papa! dear papa! come back, papa!' I returned, and with tears in my eyes kissed her tenderly. When I looked into that child's face, she didn't seem the same to me.

"Later, when I got home from the office, her mother called to her and said, 'Marjorie, daddy's at the door," and my dear little daughter, instead of running to caress me as she formerly did, coldly greeted me, 'Hello, daddy,' and ran out to play with the children. I knew then that I had hurt her little heart.

"She was our first and only child, and I'm telling you, dear friend, that to have been without the love of my little girl is more than I can stand. . . . Poor little Marjorie. . . . She had always been good and kind. All the little boys liked her, and brought her apples and flowers, and the grown-up folks were so fond of my little Margie, so you see her feeling toward me was not as if she had been stubborn or naughty. . . . I wish parents would never speak unkindly to their little ones, especially when they are dutiful and affectionate, like my little Marjorie. . . . Just think of it, a child 12 years of age and had never done an unkind act nor spoken harshly to anyone, and here I am now grieving for the wrong I did in upbraiding my baby for a trifling thing. . . .

"Last February we buried our little Marjorie, and the sad sad memory of having spoken unkindly to that dear, sweet, innocent child is harder to bear than her taking away. . . . February the first she was taken sick. . . . As the angel of death hovered near, unknown to us, I lifted her frail body in my arms to kiss her. . . . She whispered in dying gasps, 'Papa—mamma—I—love—you,' and passed to the Great Beyond. . . . The poor, dear little sweetheart has left us brokenhearted. . . . I don't know what to do. . . . We do miss our darling so much. . . . We are going to the cemetery tomorrow, wife and I, to lay a flower on our little daughter's grave. . . . Sad and lonely is our home without our little Marjorie—our baby. . . . Poor little Marjorie—my baby—my baby."

Work and Diet

HERE is a Boston dispatch to a local paper:

"If you work sitting at a desk all day, you should eat more meat, than the man who saws wood or carries a hod.

"Who says so? Dr. Thomas M. Carpenter, physiological chemist of a Boston nutrition laboratory.

"The desk worker, Carpenter says, needs more meat to keep him warm. Thus he artificially secures the necessary heat which the hod-carrier and wood-sawer generate by muscular effort.

"The Carpenter line of thought is that food, in the last analysis, bears the same relation to the body that coal does to a furnace. Heat is the ultimate object."

If this physician is correctly quoted, he is an Ass.

It is true that a man who works hard all day with his brain needs more food than a man who loafs around a house, or a club, but if a man, sitting at a desk, should attempt to eat like a wood-chopper, he would soon be very sick. The wood-chopper oxydizes his blood by deep breathing, brought about through physical exertion and can therefore digest and assimilate an amount of food that would soon kill a sedentary worker.

Besides, meat is almost all protein—not a heat-producing, but a muscle forming food

Cause and Effect

FOLLOWING is a London dispatch, under date of July 2:

"Lord Curzon is reported to be suffering from the same malady that afflicts Woodrow Wilson. The British Foreign Minister is never expected to return to take up his duties at Downing street.

"It is reported Curzon is attended day and night by four male attendants to prevent his doing himself bodily harm.

"Doctors attending him are reported as not holding any belief that Curzon will ever be able to reassume his diplomatic duties.

"Lloyd George is expected soon to appoint a new Foreign Minister as Earl Balfour, who is carrying on the job temporarily, has definitely declined to accept the post permanently, pleading age.

"Scientists and savants are wondering what is the new form of diplomatic illness striking down politicians and statesmen since the war, affecting them mentally, as well as physically.

"Pointed out among the number of prominent men affected are ex-President Woodrow Wilson, Paul Deschanel of France, Lord Northcliffe, Lenin and now Curzon. Many insist that the Kaiser also is a carefully shielded victim of the same mysterious trouble.

"Curzon has long been a sufferer from dyspepsia and insomnia. but only recently new symptoms appeared and his condition aggravated."

When people overwork their brains, and pay no attention to diet and physical exercise, they naturally get sick. Such sickness usually begins, as in this case, with indigestion and insomnia. They are nature's warnings, but are usually disregarded. Or perhaps the misguided sufferer takes some "tonic"—of course "by order of a physician."

With three months' proper care of their bodies—sun and air baths, exercise, careful, abstemious diet, rich in the organic salts, avoidance of mental work—all these cases might be cured.

Cabbage

CABBAGE is a wholesome vegetable when properly eaten. When cooked, the sulphur in the cabbage causes an offensive odor. This is scarcely evident, when the cabbage is fresh from the garden or fields.

Like other vegetables, cabbage should be eaten raw, to get the benefit of the mineral elements, unchanged by heat. Sauerkraut is also wholesome. You need not eat dubious sausage with it. Cottage cheese, or peanut butter and sauerkraut, is a good combination.

Here is a recipe for a cabbage salad:

A small head of cabbage, half a dozen small green onions, one large green pepper, all sliced finely. Remove seeds and fiber from the pepper. Season with a tablespoonful of lemon juice, diluted with the same amount of water, and two tablespoonsful of pure olive oil, thoroughly beaten up, to which you may add, if you please, a little paprika. Add a little parsley, to neutralize the effect of the onions on the breath. For the onion you may, if you please, substitute the rubbing of a clove of garlic around the inside of the salad bowl. Raw cabbage agrees with those who cannot eat it cooked.

Raw green stuff is of the highest importance, abounding in the necessary organic salts, of which cabbage contains a high percentage. In France no meal in the humblest cottage is considered complete without a salad. Americans neglect salad, and suffer therefore. I always tell my consultants, whatever else they do, to be sure to consume daily some raw green stuff, nature's medicine.

Of course, no self-respecting person, who knows anything about food values, would insult his stomach with vinegar, which is more injurious than whisky.

There are many other varieties of salads, composed of green stuff or fruits, or both mixed together, which you may easily contrive for yourself. Don't say you cannot get raw green stuff. When any of my consultants tell me that, I ask them how it would be if an eminent physician told them their life depended on getting a certain drug from a far-away place. Would they not get it, if they had to mortgage their home? Just so. You can always get raw green stuff, if you make up your mind to do so. Even if you live in a cottage out on the desert, and have no fence, and little water, you may always grow a few radishes

LA CUMBRE

LA CUMBRE—the top, the summit, the highest point—the Spanish named that peak of the Santa Ynez Range which stands due north of the old Santa Barbara Mission, and which rises almost 4000 feet above the sea. It is not the highest peak in the range, as its name might seem to indicate. Santa Ynez Peak, twenty miles to the westward, some 300 feet higher; while to the eastward, just over in the edge of Ventura county, the range rises to 4768 feet.

But La Cumbre is the highest point for many miles in either direction just back of Santa Barbara. It stands up and asserts its supremacy. And the Barbarinos gaze up at it with that feeling of pride and satisfaction which comes only with exclusive ownership. When they look in its direction, it's the only thing they see. Yet newcomers universally have trouble in locating it from down in the city. I remember with what disgust a friend of mine—and he with only a year's residence in the place—viewed my sluggishness in "picking up" what to him was the only thing in sight.

"There! don't you see it, right over that white house!" he exclaimed.

"Oh yes, I see it now," I replied. "It's that sharp, rocky peak with some scattered pines on it."

"No, it isn't!" he said, somewhat emphatically; and I could see that my power of observation had fallen several notches in his estimation. "That one looks high"—he wouldn't even say higher, to save my feelings a little—"because it is nearer. Come over here!"

And he moved a couple of steps from where he had been standing.

"Now look straight over that chimney," he continued.

To make sure that I looked right, he took hold of me by the shoulders from behind, squared me up, and squinted past my head to see if I was aimed right. I was. And I saw La Cumbre, with the great angular rock resting on its crown. It stood out clear and strong, and I wondered why it had taken me so long to locate it. I have never altogether got over wondering about it, for whenever I look to the north from Santa Barbara, I see La Cumbre whether it is what I have in mind or not.

Whoever visits La Cumbre must do so either afoot or on horseback; for trails are the only highways that reach it. For some years there has been talk of an auto road along the ridge of the range from San Marcos Pass to the Ojai, but there seems no probability of its realization in the near future. What a scenic route it would be! It would know no rival!

Three trails lead to La Cumbre: Chamber of Commerce Trail, sometimes called La Cumbre Trail; Las Canoas Trail—usually callled Rattlesnake Trail, and the Tunnel Trail.

Chamber of Commerce Built Trail to Summit of Range

ONE of the most memorable things the Santa Barbara Chamber of Commerce ever did was the building of the trail which bears its name. That was many years ago. For the time, it was an undertaking of no mean difficulty, and of no small expense. It was a great advertisement for the town; for that was before the advent of the automobile, and persons who came west to see things counted the trails among the main attractions. And there are few trails in the world, of its length, whoch have more to show than this one which climbs the Santa Ynez Range back of Santa Barbara.

A companion achievement to the making of the La Cumbre Trail was the building of the Mountain Drive. This is a ten-mile road that skirts the mountains from the old Mission to Montecito, and which lies high enough up on the slope to look out to sea over the intervening foothills. It was a famous drive for many years—and is yet, for that matter, although scarcely "far-flung" enough to satisfy present-day cravings for "mileage." But I am writing of trails and not of drives, and only mention the Mountain Drive here, because, in a way, it is connected up with the Chamber of Commerce Trail to La Cumbre.

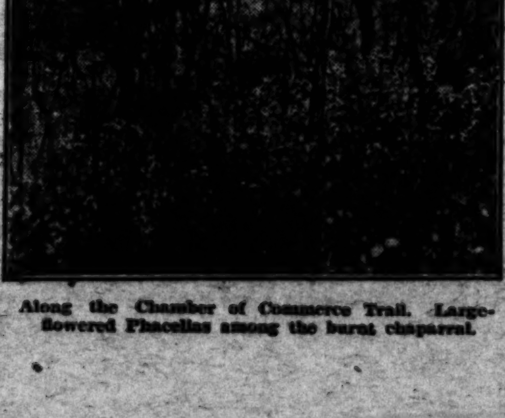
From the old Mission we follow the Mountain Drive for three or four miles, when we come to a trail branching off on the left. We can take the La Cumbre Trail here. A couple of miles eastward is another entrance—the trail from this one connecting with the other trail some distance up the slope. Persons coming up through Sycamore Canyon in the eastern part of Santa Barbara naturally take this latter entrance. There is also an approach from Las Canoas or Rattlesnake Canyon; and still another from Cold Spring Canyon. But I' never found the latter in a really passable condition for horses.

The Chamber of Commerce Trail is well-built. It is wide, with smooth footing, and has an unusually moderate and uniform grade—an accomplishment secured at the expense of length. But it was primarily built for a horse trail; and ease and comfort on a trip, and not time, were the essentials kept in mind when the route was laid out and the trail built. On account of its length, it is much less traveled than the more direct Tunnel Trail. But it will always be the favorite of horseback riders who are out for the joy of the sport with plenty of time on their hands; also with the more leisurely inclined trampers.

Your first trip to La Cumbre should always be by way of the Chamber of Commerce Trail. You may return by a shorter route; and probably will from necessity, if you make a leisurely trip upward, as you should—for you will not get started homeward until late in the afternoon. Most of the way the trail runs through chaparral, or where there was chaparral until the time of the disastrous fires of a few years ago. The shrubbery is now coming back, but very slowly. Formerly, in the early spring, the slope was blue in great patches with "wild lilac" and later in the summer other patches were whitened with chamise. And along the rugged rim of Las Canoas Cañyon there were thickets of gnarled and twisted manzanitas. I remember that after the first fire, about ten years ago, which burned principally along the Mountain Drive, the devastated areas were covered with an almost solid spread of wild flowers. In some places the great purple phacelias prevailed, while in other spots the wild morning-glories festooned the blackened skeletons of the chaparral with a luxurious growth that in the early morning was flecked with myriad white trumpets.



Along the Chamber of Commerce Trail. Large-flowered Phacelias among the burnt chaparral.

For three or four miles the trail ascends the slope in long loops, swinging in curves rather than in sharp zigzags. The view seaward is almost everywhere unobstructed. As you mount higher, the Channel Islands rise up out of the sea—veiled, perhaps, by fog, or blue with haze; but often, too, so clear that their canyons, cliffs, and beaches appear in detail. They are an interesting group, those Channel Islands—low-lying Anacapa on the east; to its right, mountainous Santa Cruz; then rugged Santa Rosa; and lastly, on the west, San Miguel, that sandy spit, where for nearly 400 years the bones of Cabrillo have lain in an unknown grave. I never climb the Santa Ynez Range, that I do not linger somewhere on the trail to look at the islands out there in the Pacific. Andas I look, my gaze wanders westward until it rests on San Miguel—not much more than a line off there on the horizon, forty miles away; but of fascinating interest to me, for there an adventurous explorer rested from his labors; from there his intrepid spirit took its flight; and there still lie the remains of the tenement that spirit left behind!

Las Canoas Canyon's Rim is Skirted by the Trail

SOMEWHAT more than halfway to the summit, a westward swing of the trail brings it out onto the rim of Las Canoas Canyon, where it passes along the face of a nearly perpendicular cliff near its top. It is well on toward a thousand feet to the bottom of the canyon, and in places the trail has been cut int the rock wall. No other trail in the Santa Ynez Mountains presents so sheer and dizzy a face.

After passing the cliff, the trail drops down into a little flat at the head of Las Canoas Canyon, where, when the trail was young, a Spanish-Californian took up a enough water for domestic purposes, but also some for irrigating. So Senor Flores, the owner, set out fruit trees of various sorts. But it seems the venture never paid, and when I first saw the place—more than a dozen years ago—it had been deserted for some time. The spring was still there, however, and the spot was a favorite lunching station for mountain climbers on their way to La Cumbre. Some of the peach, apple and pear trees were left, and had got such a good start that they bore fairly good crops year after year. Anyone who happened along when the fruit was ripe helped himself. The cottage, subject to the vandalism of every wanton who passed, was a skeleton with gaping doors and windows.

Each succeeding year as I passed that way I found the place more and more dilapidated. Finally, one September day when I arrived at El Descanso, by way of the Las Canoas Trail—for it here joins the La Cumbre Trail—hot and thirsty, I found the spring dry? The tunnel put through the mountain by the city of Santa Barbara to increase its water supply had drained the reservoir which formerly supplied the spring. That was the finish of El Descanso as a resting place. And it was a hard blow to the Chamber of Commerce and Las Canoas Trails. Travel has largely shifted to the shorter—though steeper—Tunnel Trail.

From the Flores place—El Descanso—the La Cumbre Trail strikes westward for the top of the range at a long angle and a gentle grade, and comes out on the summit at a saddle above the head of Mission Canyon. Here it is intersected by the Tunnel Trail, which passes over the saddle and drops into the gorge of the Santa Ynez River.

La Cumbre is Capped by a Big Angular Rock

FROM the saddle it is still somewhat more than a mile to the top of La Cumbre. The trail thither passes westward from about the middle of the saddle, swings to the right a little, and for the rest of the way keeps on the north side of the ridge. There is still some climbing to be done, too, for the elevation at the saddle is between 3300 and 3400 feet, while the peak of the topmost rock of La Cumbre lacks only fifteen feet of 4000. This stretch of trail on the north side of the ridge is often covered with two or three feet of snow in January and February, and here is where the Barbarinos go at that time to get a touch of real winter. The last time I passed over this bit of trail it was under more than a foot of snow, the top of which was a crust hard enough for skating.

La Cumbre is capped with a big angular rock, from the sharp comb of which a fifteen-foot flag-pole has stood for many years—bringing its top to an even 4000 feet above the Pacific. The erecting of this flag-pole was a "labor of love." Rev. William P. Merrill, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Santa Barbara for many years, was the "laborer." He devoted his Mondays to the task, going and returning afoot, and devoting a few hours on each visit to the arduous work of drilling the hole wherein later the pole was set. The pole, in two sections, he transported on the detached front fork and wheel of a bicycle taking one section at a time, and lashing it near its center to the top of the bicycle fork. This arrangement permitted the turning of the sharp angles on the trail. After setting the pole in the hole at the top of the rock, Mr. Merril further secured it by guying it in several directions with wire. The pole was still standing a couple of years ago, but some of the wire guys were broken, and the pole itself, racked by the storms of nearly twenty years, and abused by thoughtless visitors, was getting wobbly and shaky.

CARE OF THE BODY

treat all children's diseases as they happen to come along. Health does not depend upon weight, and health cannot be produced by stuffing children as one would stuff a goose or a pig.

"Malnutrition and the host of diseases that follow in its train are generally due to a wrong understanding of what kind of food is essential for children and not knowing what might be harmful, due to a lack of knowledge of how much to feed and not to overfeed, how to combine foods and not produce complications in the chemical processes of the body.

"Parents, if they value the health of their children, should know the difference between natural, (unadulterated) foods and unnatural ones, the foods that are unfit for human consumption. These are the lessons that should be taught at school inspections and children clinics, and anywhere where the attention of the parents can be had.

"It is one thing to tell the mother that the child's teeth are bad and need dental attention, but who is there to tell her that teeth deteriorate on account of the lack of organic mineral elements in the food of the child—not only that but that the beginning of the child's deficiencies may date from a generation past and should have been corrected in the mother herself.

"How about tonsils? The only advice you are apt to get is to have them removed and no one takes the trouble to explain that tonsils were put there by a kindly Providence, for a purpose.

"Can enlarged tonsils be cured without an operation? Most assuredly! If you will change the bad habits of living that were the cause of such a condition you will find the enlarged tonsils disappear automatically and speedily, together with all the other distressing symptoms.

"The method of curing enlarged tonsils is simple. You don't do anything to the tonsils, but get the rest of the anatomy in good working order and all abnormal conditions will adjust themselves."

Saved by a Horse

NOT only dogs, but also horses, are faithful friends of man, much abused as they often are. Here is a press dispatch from Galena, Ill.:

"James Funston, a farmer near Galena, had contemplated the purchase of a tractor for farm use, but because one of his faithful plow horses saved his life, he will continue to use horses to till his land. Funston was driving a corn plow on a hillside when the plow tipped over, pinning him underneath. The horses became tangled in the harness, but did not run away. After being under the plow for an hour, Funston saw one of the horses look back. Then this same horse walked to the side of the plow, gave it several pushes, rolling the implement off its master, who was suffering from a broken leg and other injuries."

Care of the Teeth

IT LOOKS as if "civilized" men would soon be toothless. Compare the teeth of the average cultivated modern with those of native tribes, who yet live rationally. This decadence of the teeth is due to gross dietetic errors. First, the ordinary diet starves the nerves, and then again it produces fermentation, which again creates acids, that eat away the enamel.

The diet starves the nerves because it is lacking in the important organic salts. Those found in the teeth are calcium, silicon and fluorin. The salts are largely removed in bolting flour and [illegible] tables. They are specially abundant in green leaves, which should be e[illegible].

Cane sugar is specially bad for the teeth, because it readily leads to fermentation. Writers on this subject point to the fine teeth of the West Indian negroes. Yes, but chewing sugar cane is quite a different thing from eating refined condensed cane sugar.

Another cause of poor tee[illegible] foods—mushes and soups, and boiled messes of all kinds, which n[illegible] a the teeth, but the stomach also. Let a child have hard crackers to chew, as soon as it is able to bite.

When the teeth are damaged, something must be done besides diet, to stop further decay. Here the dentist comes in. When you select a tooth doctor, see that you get a good one. It is poor economy to save a few dollars on such an important thing as this.

Following is from an English paper:

"Complaint that sufficient instruction was [illegible] the Congress of the Royal [illegible] of Public Health at Plymouth.

"He had found children with good teeth in homes where the tooth brush was never seen, and if he had any choice, as to whether a child should be fed on hard foods and drinks after meals, and never use a tooth brush, or be brought up like the majority of middle-class children, and always use a tooth brush, he would prefer the former."

Kidney Ailments

NEXT to the sexual organs, the kidneys are most popular with quacks, as a means of scaring people who are ignorant of the laws of health. Examinations of urine are a favortie bogie. Most often no real examination is made. In any case, something dangerous is always found. Did you ever know of a quack doctor who would tell a prospective patient that he had nothing the matter with him—unless he was assured thatthe patient was broke, and unable to borrow money?

Patients are sometimes told to place their urine in a bottle and let it stand over night. Then if there is any sediment it is described as a danger signal. The fact is that any urine will deposit a sediment, if allowed to stand over night.

Then there is pain in the back, a favorite slogan for the "specialists." The kidneys are patient, dumb, long-suffering organs. They seldom are affected by pain, except in the most advanced stages of disease. The pain you feel there is probably due to the presence of gas in the bowel, and that again is caused by wrong eating.

Even honest physicians are usually inclined to attach too much importance to examinations of urine, as to other bodily symptoms, while neglecting the cause. All deposits in the urine are really efforts of nature to discharge morbid matter from the body, just as diarrhoea is an effort to discharge foul matter from the colon.

The disease diagnosed as diabetes is often merely "polyuria," an excessive flow of pale urine.

In Bright's disease too much stress is placed upon the effects of alcoholic beverages. True, in excess they do much harm, yet for every one whose health is injured by the abuse of alcohol, a hundred suffer from the effects of over-eating, or the eating of wrong foods, or eating improperly of rig[illegible] foods. Those who use neither alcohol nor tobacco are specially prone to overeat, also to overdrink of coffee. Many ardent prohibitionists, who think it a sin to drink a glass of light wine or beer, are chronic drunkards—food drunkards. They are perambulating alcohol stills. Dr. Leonard Harshberg of Johns Hopkins, in an article on Bright's disease in Leslie's Weekly, recently said: "It is not impossible to become mildly intoxicated upon a piece of apple pie."

Above all things, be sure you avoid the so-called "kidney remedies." When they are not injurious they are worthless. One of the most widely advertised of these remedies was found, on analysis, to consist of 99 per cent water—not even filtered water—and one per cent sugar, cane sugar being one of the very worst things you can put into your stomach, when your kidneys are out of order.

As to diet, the three chief things for you to avoid are meat, cane sugar and much starch. Eat freely of fruits and raw green stuff.

Little Marjorie

AS I WROTE recently, there are a few children who need occasional physical chastisement, while others are ruined by it. Even verbal castigation works permanent injury on the sensitive natures of some children.

On the other hand, too many American parents exercise no control whatever over their children. You should be firm, but kind.

Following pathetic story is contributed by Emil E. Kusel:

"Christmas Eve was one of the saddest evenings I ever experienced. I had spoken harshly to my little daughter, our only child, 12 years of age, and it had changed her entire feeling toward me. I do not know what to da. When I scolded little Marjorie, for a trivial offense, they were the first rough words ever said to her. She was always a dutiful, loving child; and such a dear, sweet amiable girl, loved by everybody. She had accidentally overthrown a vase of flowers, while romping through the sititng-room, and the water fell upon my new Sunday hat. It made me angry, and I scolded her in the presence of her little

Miss Mary Smith

By Elizabeth Jordon

JOHN SMITH laid down his sister's letter and uttered a rude word. He was devoted to Kittie, but in that moment he would have enjoyed taking her by her pretty shoulders and giving her a good shaking. Why was it that girls of Kittie's sort never realized the value of a fellow's time?

Kittie appeared to think that he, John, was in New York for the sole purpose of entertaining any friend of hers who suddenly decided to spend a few days in the Metropolis. Whereas, what he was really here for was to wrest from the reluctant city an annual income which would send his sister comfortably through college, provide her with pretty gowns and silk stockings and matinee tickets, and leave enough to support his brave front as a young and successful captain of industry.

To meet their combined expenses and to be a little ahead of the game kept John hustling. Both he and Kittie were natural spenders, and their easeful life before their father died a bankrupt had not given them a training which helped them now. Their strongest emotion next to their grief over his death was an immense and horrified surprise at the situation of penury in which they found themselves—a surprise their mother shared to such an extent that the shock of it killed her. She died, indeed, with something of the effect of hastening into the next world to ask her husband how it had happened.

The five years following these calamities had been hard years for John, but he had made them as easy as he could for Kittie. Then he had got his real start and had dug into his work and had begun to make money, which Kittie spent as joyously and as irresponsibly as she had spent her father's money. John didn't mind that. Kittie was all he had, and she was having a wonderful time. Even now, recalling this, his brow cleared and he picked up Kittie's letter and reread its last paragraph with a forgiving grin. Kittie could not realize how busy he was. That was Kittie's only fault.

"You will like Mary immensely," Kittie had written. "She's the dearest thing in the world and so pretty, and her name is Smith, you know, so perhaps she's our cousin or something. I won't ask you to meet her at the train, for that might not be convenient." (Oh, thoughtful little Kittie!) "But she'll go right to the Beresford when she arrives at 4 Thursday, and I want you to be at the hotel at 5 and take her somewhere for tea. Then you can make some more plans, for she'll be in town three days. She's going to be bridesmaid next month at the Knapp-Darroy wedding. Do be good to her, Jackie, darling. She's one of my dearest friends, and I want you to live up to all I've told her about you."

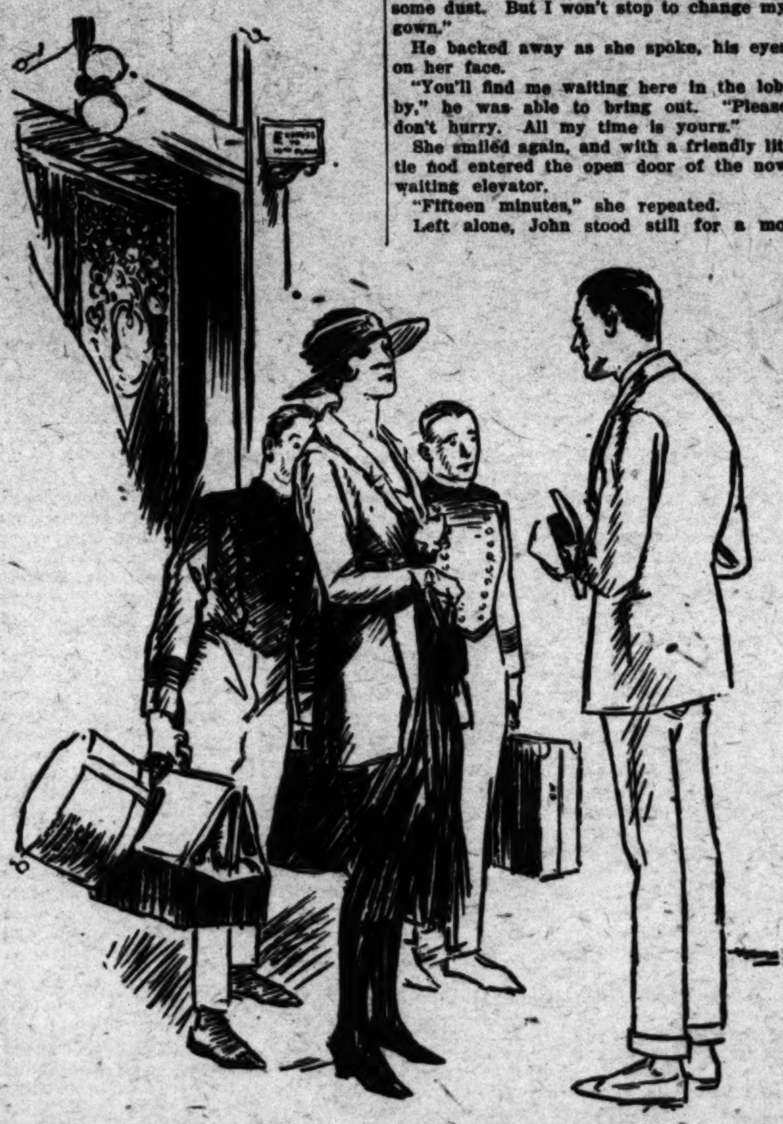
John's handsome young face wore a reconciled but thoughtful expression as he folded the letter and put it in his pocket. His mind worked briskly on its little problem. Thursday? That was today. At five! It was now half past 4, and he was in his down-town office, at least a good half hour from the Beresford. Kittie's letter had just come to him in the last afternoon mail. She hadn't allowed him much time to turn around; but that was Kittie's way. She was like a happy child in her gay assumption that everything and everybody could be shaped to her wishes. John grinned again. He had a business appointment at a quarter to five, and it was too late to warn the party of the second part, who was doubtless at that moment in the subway on his way to John's office.

John closed the drawer of his desk with an emphasis that worked off the last trace of his irritation, left with his stenographer a message intended to calm the irate caller, and hurried to the nearest subway station. He would take the girl at the Beresford to tea at some place where good food and good music were provided, he resolved, and before she left town he would take her to dinner and the theater. That would represent all the time and money he could spend on her, and he would have to give Kittie a gentle hint about sending him any one else for a while.

He entered the lobby of the Beresford at exactly 5 o'clock, and approaching an aloof youth at the hotel desk, asked that his name be telephoned up to Miss Mary Smith. The rather wooden countenance of the youth suddenly took on an expression that made it almost human. He turned upon young Smith a quick glanco that held interest, appraisal, and envy. Then, as a light in a window vanishes when the shade is drawn, his countenance resumed its professional mask. But he answered Smith more fully than he had answered any one else that day.

"Miss Smith was just here at the desk," he said. "Her train got in an hour late. She can't have gone up in the elevator yet. No—there she is near the second car, with two pages carrying her bags."

John Smith did not catch the last words. He was on his way to the elevator, and as he flew he understood the clerk's expression and the presence of the two pages.



Hat in hand and still a little breathless, John faced her. "Miss Smith," he asked.

He had pictured Mary Smith as a pretty college girl, young, slender, fluffy, rather giggly—the type, in short, of Kittie and most of Kittie's friends. What he saw was a girl so arrestingly lovely that he actually caught his breath at the first glimpse of her.

She turned, looked at him gravely, and expected, but here all resemblance to his mental vision ended. Her youth and slenderness were the youth and slenderness of a Diana. Her hair and wonderful eyes were so dark as to be almost black. She carried herself with a proud sweet dignity, and with the poise of a woman of the world. She was quietly but exquisitely dressed, every article she wore being designed to set off her amazing beauty and succeeding admirably in its mission. Hat in hand and still a little breathless, John faced her.

"Miss Smith?" he asked.

She turned, looked at him gravely, and then quite suddenly smiled. The smile made John a trifle dizzy. And this was the girl Kittie had called "so pretty!" Women were like that. They simply could not appreciate one another's beauty, but they would rave over some barbered Adonis. His reflection was checked by the discovery that Miss Mary Smith was holding out her hand. He took it in a daze with a tremor running through it. Talk of Helen of Troy! And now she was speaking, in a voice that perfectly expressed her personality—a voice softly contralto and musical.

"My train was late. I hope I haven't kept you waiting."

"No—I just got here."

He was still holding her hand. She withdrew it gently. It was clear that she was accustomed to putting dazed young men at their ease. She went on with the graciousness so much older than her years:

"I wonder if you would mind waiting for me a few moments—not more than fifteen. I'd like to look at my rooms and brush off some dust. But I won't stop to change my gown."

He backed away as she spoke, his eyes on her face.

"You'll find me waiting here in the lobby," he was able to bring out. "Please don't hurry. All my time is yours."

She smiled again, and with a friendly little nod entered the open door of the now waiting elevator.

"Fifteen minutes," she repeated.

Left alone, John stood still for a moment, staring at the ascending car that bore her out of his sight. Then, still with that odd, new sense of being temporarily dazed, he went back to the hotel lounge, chose a seat in a remote corner, where he could watch the elevator doors, and let himself simmer, as it were, in a sense of incredible well being.

Perfect though this was, at first it was also vague. The only fact in it was the wonderful and satisfying fact that he was waiting for her! The knowledge was enough. He did not try to analyze it. He merely sat still, smiling rather fatuously. Then, as the moments passed, he realized that his stunned brain had resumed its functions. It was planning, planning feverishly, making a schedule of engagements that, if possible, would cover every waking hour of Miss Mary Smith's visit to New York. She was to be here three days—three entire, glorious days.

Of course, he would take her to dinner and the play tonight. Could he call in the morning and take her out to breakfast on the pretext of showing her the flower market and some unusually interesting restaurant? Probably not, but he'd try it. They would have luncheon together, of course, and in the afternoon he would hire an automobile and take her for a long drive. They would dine together somewhere up the river and get back late—very late. The following day— Hm-m-m, for the following day he had half a dozen important business conferences, which arranged themselves in an impressive row before him; but he would get out of them all, of course. Time enough for that sort of thing when she had left town.

Fully ten minutes passed before he took in what really had happened to him, and he discovered it now because he suddenly realized that he could not take his eyes off that elevator door. She might be back at any minute, but the minutes were dragging intolerably. He had never felt that way about a girl before. He had heard of fellows being bowled over after one glance. He had read about it, too. He had fallen in love at last and he had done it witha suddenness and thoroughness which he would not have believed possible.

He had never believed in love at first sight. He had thought that love, if it ever came to him at all, would be a thing of slow growth, based on knowledge and mental kinship and understanding. Yet, here he was, ship and understanding. Yet, here he was. At 5 o'clock a tired young business man, slightly irritable because somewhat bored, and only half alive. Now, at ten minutes past 5, a lover, shaken by his first passion, dazed yet thrilled, humble yet triumphant, wretched because she was not here, ecstatic because she was coming, and more intensely alive than he had ever been or dreamed of being.

The wonder and splendor of the experience overwhelmed him. He was almost 30, and he had never been in love before. He had about given up hope of ever loving or of being loved. He had even begun to cherish a wish that Kittie might not marry either, and that they two might make a home for each other. That aspiration now seemed a thousand years behind him. The life he had lived seemed to have been passed on another planet. He had come into his heritage as a man.

The elevator door on which his straining eyes were fastened swung back and the girl came forth. There seemed to be others in the car—at least there were vague shadows that probably fancied themselves men and women. As he rose and went to meet her John set his young jaws and resolutely steadied his nerves. What had happened to him was a miracle, but the girl knew nothing about it. To her he was a stranger whose sole claim to consideration was that he was the brother of her friend. He was her host in a strange city and she was for the time dependent upon his courtesy and common sense.

No suspicion of what he felt must reach her. His role was that of Kittie's brother, an agreeable young man plasantly interested in his sister's friend and normally anxious that role would be difficult, but—he knew—to carry it out was his only chance of winning the girl. One false move or act, a too-impulsive word, and he would lose her forever. The knowledge restored his poise.

"This is wonderful," he jested as they met. "It's exactly fifteen minutes."

"And you expected to wait at least half an hour?"

"I have a sister, you know. At a guess, I should say that I've spent about eight years of my life waiting around for Kittie. Where shall we go?" he asked, as he helped her into a taxicab. "Have you any choice?"

She shook her head.

"No. I didn't even know we were going out. But it's very nice," she added, with her young graciousness.

"The Plaza," he told the driver, and then, as he sat down, turned to stare at her.

"You didn't know?"

"No, I thought you were merely to call. It's very nice of you to take me out, after that dusty journey."

The taxicab had turned into the park, the driver evidently preferring its quiet roads to the traffic congestion of upper Fifth avenue. Mary Smith looked out of the window and drew a deep breath.

"How heavenly the park is," she sighed. "And how I love New York in the spring!"

"I love it all the year 'round."

John gazed out at the park with a proudly proprietary air. He felt as if New York were his and if he were giving it to her. Certainly he would give her as much prostate, especially if the bottom of the chair be made in the abominable fashion of being elevated in the center, toward the front.

"If a person is much on his feet, gravitation is also pulling liquids down into the prostate.

"If a man has been addicted to alcohol or tobacco, his blood vessels have become relaxed, and he is more susceptible to the force of gravitation in the pelvis.

"If a person has been addicted to sexual excess, his prostate is especially weakened and he is far more liable to congestion from gravitation than one who has been temperate.

"If a person has been intemperate in his eating or drinking, he has also weakened the resisting powers against gravitation in his prostate as well as other parts of the body.

"From this general discussion it can be at once seen why at least 90 per cent of men past 40 years of age have a pathological prostate.

"Eye strain that so often shows itself in middle age, weakens the whole body and enhances prostate disease. In fact, a weak organ feels the strain from any part of the body."

To this I add:

Fermentation of food produces alcohol in the stomach. Gas is also formed, that presses in all directions, causing high blood pressure, and pains in various parts of the body that are diagnosed in different ways by physicians who ignore the cause. This gas often causes palpitation of the heart, that is falsely said to be heart disease. No case of constipation, or piles, or rupture, or prolapsed womb, or prostatitis, or bladder trouble, or varicose veins can be permanently cured so long as this gas pressure from fermenting food exists. High blood pressure is largely high gas pressure.

The Boss of the House

FOLLOWING is from "Meatless Menus," by Eugene Christian and Mollie Griswold Christian:

"The head of the family, the boss, very often means the bear.

"Men inherit the heliocentric idea. It is as easy for them to believe that everything about the home should be made to conform to their requirements, as it was for the ancients to believe that the sun, moon and stars were made for their special accommodation."

Fasting

AT THE recent osteopathic convention in Los Angeles, Dr. Hugh Conklin spoke of the treatment of epilepsy by fasting, for three weeks, or longer. He said that of thirty-seven cases thirty-five were cured, in this simple manner. Epilepsy, he declared, is caused by autointoxication, or absorption of foulness from the bowels.

That is the universal cause of all disease. There is nothing new about this. For many years drugless healers have advocated and made use of fasting, for the cure of chronic disease. Sometimes it is the only way.

Two things should be borne in mind, by those who undertake a fast. First; great care should be exercised in breaking the fast. Second; it is of little use to fast, if, after the fast, you resume eating in a way that has made you sick.

A fast gives you a good chance to adopt a natural method of eating. At the conclusion of a fast, simple, natural food tastes good to you.

Airplanes

I WENT over to Catalina Island for a week's rest and quiet. I had been in the habit of doing so for many years, but hadn't been there since 1920. Avalon was as charming as ever, but auto trucks and hydroplanes made an awful noise.

One may get away from the auto trucks, but not from the hydroplanes, which swoop over Avalon, making a noise like billions of giant mosquitoes. Too bad.

A friend who likes to get back to nature writes:

"I think I wrote you that I was in the Sierras for the whole month of June. The first real vacation in forty years of hard work. My wife and baby are with me. We are all getting as brown as acorns.

"We hunted in the desert to find a 'safe' place to strip and get sun baths. We finally found a place in the sage brush, so far away from the road, and so hidden, that the mountains could hardly see us. There we cleared away the under brush accumulation of years, and by laying down a canvas we had a place safe from all eyes (?) to take sun baths. The second day out there in the sage brush, among millions of bees and flies, stript as naked as at birth, an airplane swooped down over us, just to see and give us a scare.

"Where can we go to get God's sunlight any more? We stayed there just the same, and go there daily, though the plane has been over again. They think it smart, I suppose.

"When I realize that man's laws compel us to wear clothes, and shut out God's sunlight from the body that needs it so much, it makes me boil—especially when the mercury is 140 odd in the sun and 110 in the shade."

We shall soon have to take to caves in the mountains.

Underweight and Malnutrition

TWO of the leading fads of "regular" physicians now are taking Wassermann blood tests, to detect syphilis, and weighing babies, to see if they are healthy.

Both tests are misleading. The Wassermann test is absolutely unreliable, and fat babies are often sick babies.

Following is from a lecture delivered by a rational physician before the Good Health Club of Miami, Fla.:

"Hundreds of children have been examined and weighed and a great deal has been said about children that are underweight. It may be some relief for anxious parents to know that a case of underweight has no meaning whatsoever, unless accompanied by other symptoms of distress.

"To be underweight would be perfectly normal and correct with some children, who are descendants of small-built, light weight but normal and healthy parents, so that an arbitrary standard of weight does not apply in their case at all.

"On the other hand, we find a great many children of normal weight and even exceeding the weight limit, who are not enjoying a proportionate state of health, but rather suffer a decided deficiency of health.

"To diagnose a case of anemia malnutrition does not require a scale, for there are so many symptoms that declare a child sick without going by weights and standards that were made to fit an ideal but not the individual child.

"What is the remedy suggested at the children clinics for children found to be underweight?

"Generally, food, rich and nourishing food, concentrated food—no matter whether or not the organism of the child can digest and assimilate the food.

"Most cases of underweight are due to malnutrition, not necessarily to a lack of food, but rather to unnatural, wrong food and to an excess of food, far beyond the capacity of the child's digestive and assimilative organs.

"Malnutrition means enervation, a lack of nerve power, of vitality, of power to function, resulting in imperfect digestion of the food eaten by the child and, of course, the body cannot derive nourishment under such conditions, and additional food will only make matters worse.

"We further find enervation and lack of function to affect the eliminating organs—the bowels, kidneys, skin and lungs—and if these organs do not perform their duties properly and expel all the waste material accruing during the regular course of digestion and assimilation, then there is apt to be retention of waste material.

"There may be retention of waste in the bowels in the form of constipation, or it may be that the food, instead of being used in the proper way, is turned into fat and stored away into convenient places. Or waste material in the form of mucus is being formed in the system and expelled through the mucus membrane of the throat or bowels in the form of catarrh. In other cases we may find deposits of waste matter in the tissues, muscles or joints, developing rheumatism in its various forms.

"Children who are of good weight with soft flesh, full cheeks, often rosy and plump, are not always the healthy children they seem to be, but often of a scrofulous predisposition. They are subject to catarrh, colds, fevers, headaches and will con-[illegible] the journey was bad," he [illegible] sympathetically.

He longed to be saying all sorts of things—brilliant things, personal things. But the safe course was to be strictly bromidic until she knew him better. They talked of trains, then of travel. Insensibly the talk became more personal. When the taxicab stopped at the entrance of the Plaza he had learned that she had been in Paris throughout the previous summer and she knew that he had served his country in the Aviation Corps.

These experiences engrossed them throughout the tea hour. To an accompaniment of soft music, cheerful voices, toasted muffins and jam they exchanged experiences and sage viewpoints. For this hour they were citizens of the allied lands rather than of one. He took her with him into the blue of French and German skies; and it was while he felt higher among the clouds than he had ever been in reality that John Smith received the shot which brought him down to earth.

"I wish I could stay in New York longer," the girl said, wistfully. "There's so much to talk about—and to see," she ended.

The words went to her companion's head, but he held himself steady.

"I wish you could, too," he said with an emphasis that made her glance at him in surprise. "But we'll make the most of your three days."

"Three days?" It was her turn to look at him in amazement. "Why, I'm sailing for Cuba tomorrow afternoon. Didn't Uncle James tell you that when he wrote?"

John shook his head. The jolt was so staggering that he could not utter a word, but it left his mental processes unimpaired. Even before she had ceased speaking the whole situation was clear in his mind—clear with an abhorrent clearness. This Mary Smith was not Kittie's Mary Smith—therefore, oh, black reflection, she was not his Mary Smith! In a big hotel like the Beresford there might well be half a dozen Mary Smiths and he had drawn the wrong one, though to him she was absolutely the right one.

A "flash in" of Kittie's little college chum sitting in her lonely hotel room waiting for him to appear was regarded with callous indifference and immediately dismissed. A companion flash of some unknown young man, waiting in the lobby for the Mary Smith whose dark eyes were this instant regarding him over her tea cup, was surveyed with more leisure and pleasure. But all the time John Smith was thinking faster than he had ever thought before.

His proper course was clear and he knew it. He should explain the situation to his companion at once, apologize for his unconscious part in the mixup, and, now that the tea hour was over, escort her back to her hotel and, if he so elected, bow himself out of her life. It would be for her to decide whether she would or would not continue their acquaintance. He was not sure what that decision would be,. but he feared it.

This Miss Mary Smith was not an unconventional person. On the contrary, she was a thoroughly sophisticated and well bred one with an obvious social background and traditions. Whatever she might decide as to the future, one thing at least was clear. She would not dine with him tonight and go to the theater if she discovered that he was a stranger. Yet it was absolutely necessary to his life's happiness that she should do both—that, since she was to leave New York so soon, he must make use of every moment she was here to impress himself upon her.

All's fair in love and war! The old motto swept comfortably into the foreground of his mind. She should not be allowed to discover the mistake that had been made. He made this decision suddenly and irrevocably. Therefore, she must not even be allowed to return to the Beresford, the chump who was to have met her might be waiting in the lobby. Also, he, John, might run across his own little Mary Smith. He must not risk any such contretemps. He leaned toward his companion and addressed her with entire assurance.

"I hope you will like the program I have arranged for this evening," he said, casually. "We're going to have a spin out into the country for an hour or two. The apple blossoms in Worchester are gorgeous and I want you to see them before it gets dark. Then we'll dine on the terrace of Briarcliff Inn, to show you the wonderful view, and we'll get back in time to see Ethel Barrymore in her new play."

The beautiful Miss Smith looked slightly overwhelmed but, also, he exultantly realized, greatly tempted.

"It's a wonderful program," she said, [illegible] "and of course I should love it, too."

"If you were to stay longer," he explained, "we wouldn't need to rush matters. But you're leaving tomorrow, don't you see? I want you to have all the pleasant experiences we can crowd into these few hours. You can rest on the ship, you know."

"Y-es." She was plainly wavering.

"It's extremely kind of you. But surely I ought to go back to the hotel and dress."

"Not for automobiling and a dinner at a country inn," he pointed out. "And as to the theater, half the audience won't be in evening dress at this season."

She met his eager eyes with the beautiful smile that made his heart beats quicken. Then, as if irrepressibly, she laughed out in sudden surrender and to John the soft laughter was the most beautiful music he had ever heard.

"It will be glorious," she said.

From this moment John realized that his position was that of a skater on exceedingly thin ice. At any instant he might break through, or skate into one of the numerous airholes in this little social pond. The most serious of his dangers was the mysterious "Uncle James," a gentleman on whom his companion showed a recurrent desire to converse. It became clear that she was an orphan, and that "Uncle James" was not only her uncle but her guardian.

Swimming along the bank of the Hudson in the soft spring twilight and in the afterglow of a perfect sunset, Mary Smith talked in her cool, calm way—and John listened with rapture, content with anything she said but wisely confining his responses almost to monosyllables. Detached as her manner was, the girl yet conveyed the impression that she was talking with unusual intimacy—that, indeed, she was talking to an old friend. The subtlety of the compliment, the vital importance of what it conveyed, would have mounted to her companion's brain if he had not been so increasingly conscious of a need of caution.

He tried to keep the conversation general. At the little table on the hotel veranda with the shadowy, undulating landscape of Westchester stretching below them and with lanterns shining like glowworms in the distant shrubbery, he succeeded in doing this, but with increasing difficulty. There were so many things he wanted to know about her! Also, there were so many things he wanted to tell her about himself.

In this respect he let himself go a little. He dared not again mention Kittie, of course, nor his past, which might conflict with what she had been told of him by "Uncle James." He realized that she did not even know his name. He had hurried to her side straight from the hotel desk, and she had accepted him without question as the man she had expected to meet her. The reflection reminded him of a new danger. He often dined at the Briarcliff Inn. It was a favorite resort of his, and the waiters knew him. If one of them addressed him by name—

It was at this precise moment in his meditations and as if evoked by them that the head waiter approached the table, bearing down upon the couple with the affability of his type. He had been out of the room when they arrived, but he made up for this flaw in the service by putting into his greeting something more than mere cordiality. There was a hint of the hospitality of "old home week" in his welcome to the reluctant diner he now addressed.

"Oh, good evening, Mr. Smith. We haven't had you with us for several weeks," he added, expansively. "Is everything all right?"

John looked up at him and allowed a rapid succession of changes to sweep across his expressive face. It was an artistic performance, for the changes took in first surprise, then an instant of puzzlement, and finally courteous comprehension.

"Oh, yes, quite all right, thank you," he said, and nodded kindly at the man. As the latter retreated John made a casual but sufficient comment on the incident.

"Some head waiters," he announced, "appear to call all diners 'Smith,' just as some men call all waiters 'George.'"

He was quite satisfied with this effort, but the lady's comment wiped the smile from his face.

"But they ought to do much better than Smith," she suggested. "Don't most men resent being called Smith?"

John was under the ice now, cold and gasping, but he rallied feebly.

"Oh, I don't think so. You see, there are so many—er—distinguished Smiths, and it's a name of such fine traditions—"

He was glad to be interrupted by a waiter, who served another course. Also the interruption gave him time for a saving remembrance.

"Your own name is Smith, you know," he could not help reminding her. "That should [illegible] better to it."

"I know it is Smith"—she spoke sadly, ignoring the compliment and with an effect of dwelling on what now appeared to be the flaw in a happy life. "I've always hated it." She smiled the smile that so enchanted him. "I hope to change it some day."

Under the shock of these simple words John Smith went under the ice again and for a perceptible interval remained there. When he emerged and spoke his voice was unnatural.

"You haven't yet made any—any arrangemen to change it—have you?"

She suspended the action of her fork and looked at him with raised eyebrows. Her expression showed surprise and a suggestion of disapproval, but he met her eyes with something in his that touched her.

"Please tell me," he begged. "Are you engaged to be married?" In a desperate attempt to seem normal he caught at the name he had so carefully avoided. "Uncle James didn't tell me you were," he added, with unconscious pathos.

Miss Mary Smith drank half a glass of water. She drank it very slowly, and when she set down the glass there was an odd light in her eyes which had not been there before. But she spoke indifferently.

"There's no reason why I should not answer your question," she said as she resumed her dinner. "I am not engaged to be married."

Her host drew a deep breath and leaning back in his chair, beamed at her ecstatically. His relief was obvious and almost pathetic, but an unsympathetic nature seemed to lie under Miss Smith's beautiful exterior. She ate her dinner with an expression of detachment, as if her thoughts were elsewhere. John pulled himself together and gallantly went into action again.

"These little personal prejudices are very interesting things," he said. "I've got a few myself, but I make a special point of not indulging them. To yield to them is too narrowing. I'm sure you feel the same way. For example, just suppose you learned to love a man named Smith. Surely you wouldn't refuse to marry him merely because his name was Smith, would you?"

He asked the question in what he fondly hoped was a careless manner, but his heart dropped a beat as he waited for her reply. For a moment it did not come. Miss Smith was absorbed in a head dress worn by a woman guest who had just taken a seat at a table near her. She seemed hardly to have heard his question and almost started when he urgently repeated: "Would you?" He could see her mind return to him as if from a little journey.

"Would I refuse anyone named Smith?" she asked, rather vaguely. "Why, I have never thought about it." She smiled again. "Fate isn't as relentless as we think," she said. "I don't believe she would play such a shabby trick on me as to let me fall in love with a man named Smith. You see, I have had the name for twenty-one years, as it is. I think I have had my share of it."

Her companion again submerged like a submarine. The attention of Miss Smith returned to the elaborate coiffure of her neighbor. Then John came up for air. Another saving reflection occurred to him.

"Oh, well, if it came to that," he said, comfortably, "a man could have his name changed by law to something fancy, like Algernon Grevernor Montmorency. Lots of men do. Would you like that name?"

"No."

"What would you like? What's your favorite name?"

"David."

"That's a fine name." John promptly decided that his new name should be David. "what else?"

"Well, if I were choosing a name from all the world"—Miss Smith spoke now with the thoughtfulness due to the importance of the topic—"I think I should choose 'David King.' I don't like middle names," she added, "and I don't like last names of more than one syllable. I think David King is a dignified, manly name."

John nodded.

"And Mrs. David King will look great on visiting cards," he contributed. "So order yours as soon as you like. That's going to be your future name."

"Is this a prophecy?" Miss Smith seemed really interested. Smith shook his head.

"No; it's a mere statement of fact." His guest slowly drew on her gloves.

"It's a quarter past 7. We must start back to town," she decided.

"All right. But we've got to settle a lot of things we can't discuss at the play. For example, what time shall I call to take you out to breakfast? [illegible]"

"Oh, thank you very much, but I can't breakfast with you. I'm going to breakfast in my room and shop all morning!"

"Great Scott!" The world grew dark before the eyes of young Mr. Smith. "And sail at 4! Why, that doesn't leave us any time at all!"

"You might come to lunch with me at the hotel." The lady was plainly relenting. "That is, if you don't mind lunching late—about half after one."

"And you sail at 4," Smith dully repeated. "Well, if that's the best you can do for me—But don't let's lunch at the hotel," he added hurriedly, a sudden vision of Kittie's friend and Miss Smith's unknown escort returning to him. "Meet me at Delmonico's, and we'll stop at the hotel for your baggage on the way to the boat."

"Perhaps that will be better," she conceded. "It's nearer the shops."

Mr. John Smith put in the golden hours of the following morning strenuously waiting for half past one. More than thirty minutes before that time he reached Delmonico's, and having ordered a perfect luncheon, established himself in the lobby to wait for his guest. In the emotional strain of their parting he had forgotten to tell Miss Smith in what room they would meet. Early that morning, however, desiring to hear her voice, he called her up on the pretext of such understanding. He was forced to leave his message with an indifferent clerk. Miss Smith had already gone out, but might be back soon. Sunk in a big chair and reflecting gloomily upon his disappointment, Mr. Smith was startled by a fresh young voice.

"How do you do, Mr. Smith? This is Kittie's brother, isn't it. I didn't get your telephone message from the clerk till half an hour ago. Then I hurried right up here. It's so kind of you to take so much trouble."

Motionless and with dropped jaw John stood and stared at the figure before him, whose voice had brought him mechanically to his feet. It was a pretty girlish figure and the girl was the fluffy, flapper type he had originally expected Mary Smith to be. The ass of a clerk had given her his message. And here she was expecting to be entertained and fed and to use up the last hours in which the only Mary Smith on earth could be with him. Words failed John. He stared, speechless, while the round, pretty face of the girl regarding him slowly took on an expression of puzzled confusion.

"Mr. Smith! Mr. John Smith! Mr. John Smith!"

A page was passing, calling his name. Mechanically, John responded, mechanically he accepted the note the boy gave him, apologized to little Miss Smith, and opened and read the note.

"Dear Mr. Smith: I can't go on with it! It's too horrid of me! You see, I'm not Kittie's chum at all, though I know her and I am in her class. I had to come down unexpectedly yesterday. The other Mary Smith decided to wait till morning and I was so lonesome—and I knew the whole plan and I was sure Kittie wouldn't mind—and so when you came up and spoke to me in the hotel I took the other Mary's place just for a lark and to see if I could carry it off. I'm so ashamed of myself! I know the real Mary came this morning and I hope you will get in touch with her. Goodby. I won't apologize. But please forgive me for everything—and especially for teasing you about your name and letting you realize that I wasn't the real Mary. I did that to see what you would do.

"MARY SMITH."

"P. S.—You were wonderful!"

As they took in this remarkable document the eyes of John Smith shone like incandescent lights. The next instant he was addressing the second Mary Smith.

"Miss Smith, are you a good sort?"

She looked at him uncertainly.

"Why, I—I hope so," she faltered.

"Well, I'm going to throw myself on your understanding. Something very vital to me has just come up. Will you eat your luncheon here alone—it's all ordered—and then will you let me call at your hotel and take you to dinner and the theater this evening? Then I'll explain everything in detail. Will you do that?"

The second Mary Smith was a good sort. She showed it by her surprised but prompt reply.

"Why, of course I will."

"Three rousing cheers for you!" John fervently exclaimed. He took her into the dining-room, seated her at the table he had secured, paid for the luncheon, and generously tipped the waiter, and then hurried himself into a taxicab.

CARE OF THE BODY

CONDUCTED BY
HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N. D.

Giving up Tobacco

THE least harmful form of smoking is the Turkish water pipe, but it is bulky and inconvenient, although there are small ones on the market, but they have never become popular. Next, a mild domestic cigar or stogie, smoked not more than two-thirds of its length, for the nicotine accumulates near the point. Dr. Thomas W. Jenkins writes:

"Just back of the burning zone of tobacco is a zone of moisture, which causes the nicotine to be dissipated. The longer the distance the smoke has to travel, the greater the dissipation of nicotine. The larger the zone of moisture, the greater the dissipation of nicotine. Hence, the evil of the cigarette, which is small and short."

When a man smokes strong, black cigars, down to within an inch of the tip, you may "see his finish." In an ordinary pipe, the nicotine accumulates in the stem, no matter how often you clean it.

You should never, under any circumstances, smoke—any more than you should drink alcohol—on an empty stomach. Nor should you smoke within half an hour after a meal. An hour is better. This, of course, is the time when you crave a smoke the most, because it is called upon by your system to deaden the inflammation in your stomach, produced through injudicious eating. However, force yourself to wait at least half an hour. If you cannot do that, you have become an abject slave to the habit, and are in a bad way.

It is well to make a practice of not smoking before noon. I know that the after-breakfast smoke is the most enjoyable, but then, it is better not to take breakfast. Cut down the smoking to a reasonable amount, and stick to it, or the first thing you know, you will become a "chain smoker"—lighting one cigar after another—and then you are surely on the highway to becoming a nervous wreck, unless you have the constitution of an ox, and work at wood chopping, or something of that kind.

Excessive smokers should drink water freely and take frequent sweat baths.

When he was 59, Clemenceau resolved to give up smoking. To test his will power, he kept an open box of cigars on his desk.

I would not advise you to do that. It is hard enough to break away from seductive Lady Nicotine, without keeping her portrait before you.

Many will say with a superior smile when they read the title of this article, "Why, that is easy. Just quit." Evidently, gentle reader, you are not a confirmed smoker, or you would not say that. It is not by any means easy. In fact, it is not much more easy than to pull up a delicate plant, rooted in hard soil. It is remarkable what a grip the smoking habit gets on its victims, after it is firmly established. It is harder to give up tobacco than alcohol, or coffee.

To begin with, discard all thought of "tobacco cures," that merely remove the symptoms, without affecting the cause. "Regulars" almost always content themselves with suppressing symptoms, whereas, those who heal according to natural methods seek to remove the primary cause.

A man is foolish to begin smoking, if he has not acquired the habit. Also, it is foolish for an old man, who smokes in moderation, to deny himself the solace of moderate indulgence in a cigar or pipe, if he finds it is not doing him any particular harm. When you discover that you are becoming an absolute slave to tobacco, then is the time for you to quit. And then it is hard to quit. Also, sometimes there may be danger in suddenly giving up a bad habit, when it has been carried to excess. A news dispatch from an Indiana town, told how a young man of 20, who had been addicted to the excessive use of cigarettes, suddenly stopped using them. He suffered several fits of nervousness and died a week later. A medical missionary, who recently returned from China, states that the stamping out of the opium curse in that country has caused many of the habitual users of the drug to succumb, when it has been taken from them, and that many others have been driven to insanity.

In many cases a person may safely stop short without harm, but when the habit has been long continued, and has secured a mortgage—literally a "death grip"—it may be better gradually to break away, using the alcohol, or nicotine, or drug, or whatever it may be, less and less frequently, and in less amounts. In the case of smoking you may resolve never to touch a pipe, cigar or cigarette until after the midday meal. Then, after a time, you may satisfy yourself with a cigar, or pipe, or two, after the evening meal. This, however, is much like cutting off a dog's tail by inches.

The only satisfactory way to break off a drug habit, is to remove the craving for it. To what is this craving due? Like so many other ills that afflict poor humanity, it is due to dietetic errors. It is due to two causes, either the loading up of the blood with waste matter, from excess food, or mal-assimilation of food, or deficiency of the mineral elements or organic salts in the diet. In the first class are the heavy, fleshy smokers. In the other class, the thin, nervous, dyspeptic devotees of the weed, to whom it is especially harmful. In other words, inflammation of the lining of the stomach, and starvation of the nerves are the two leading causes of the craving for drugs, including tobacco. The starved nerves cry out for nourishment, and in place of bread they are given a stone. Smoking, although it relieves for a moment, only makes matters worse.

The right way to quit smoking is, therefore, to cease abusing the stomach. Every confirmed smoker knows that the craving for a smoke is much greater after a heavy meal of stimulating foods, than it is after a bowl of milk, without sugar, or a handful of fruit. Begin by an absolute fast of a few days, drinking freely of cool, not iced, water. Then, for a month, adopt an absolutely bland diet, consisting of milk and bread, or buttermilk, or baked potatoes, or boiled rice, or something of that kind, eaten in great moderation, strictly avoiding coffee, cane sugar, pastry, fried foods, condiments, including salt, and anything that irritates the stomach. Eat freely of raw green stuff, especially lettuce and celery. Ripe fruit is excellent by itself, not with other foods. If your stomach is not inflamed a "fruit fast" is a good thing.

Take, every other day, for the first week, a sweat bath, then twice a week, and after that, once a week. Cleanse the bowels thoroughly by enemas. Also, take as much exercise as you can, in the open air, and learn to breathe deeply. After you have overcome your craving for tobacco, see that you do not invite it again, by habitual dietetic excesses.

Even if you do all this, you will have to exercise considerable will power, and to show that your mind holds, the whip hand over your body. However, there is no other way, and it is worth while.

The President Saves a Dog

PRESIDENT HARDING is a humane man. A foreign-born resident of Pennsylvania has a dog of which he is very fond. It seems that in Pennsylvania they have an absurd law, that an alien may not own a dog. So the dog was condemned to die. Mrs. Harding read about it in a newspaper and called her husband's attention to it. Whereupon the President of the United States took time to write the following letter to the Governor of Pennsylvania:

"If it came within my executive authority I would gladly grant a pardon to the convicted animal. I suppose there is good and ample reason for a statute which makes this dog an unlawful possession, but I have an abiding faith that the man who loves his dog to the extent that he will grieve for him has in him the qualities which will make him a loyal citizen.

"Mrs. Harding and I are both pleased to appeal for some form of clemency in this case and hope this note is not too late to enable us to add our appeal in behalf of both Silverman and his dog."

The life of the dog will be spared.

Prostatitis

ENLARGEMENT of the prostate gland is common among men who have passed middle age, and have paid no attention to the care of the body.

When the sexual powers begin to wane, the average man begins to devote more though to the "pleasures of the table." Results; accumulation of fat, especially in the abdominal region, with engorgement of the blood vessels, organs and glands, including the prostate.

In such cases nine physicians out of ten advise a surgical operation. Removal of the prostate, after a year or so of relief, results in physical and mental degeneracy, and premature death.

George Starr White, M.D., has just issued the second, revised, edition of "Prostatic Disease" (published by the author, 327 South Alvarado street, Los Angeles.) In his introduction, Dr. White writes:....

"Country folk and Indians have long made use of gravitation for relieving pelvic distress. I remember once seeing an Indian lying on the side of a hill with his head down. As far as I could make out from his symptoms, and from his broken English, he took that prostrate position to relieve a congested prostate. He said it gave him great relief.

"We know that water will not run up hill, and if we want to empty a basin we have to tilt it. Gravitation pulls liquids downward. Therefore there is more liability of congestion in the basin (pelvis) of an animal standing on its hind legs than there would be if it stood on all fours.

"Even when a person is sitting, gravitation is pulling the liquids down into the pelvis.

"In man the prostate being at the lowest part of the pelvis, gravitation tends to hold liquids in the prostate, unless there be a good amount of elasticity to the vessels or musculature surrounding it.

"We can at once see that if, for any reason, the prostate became weakened, liquids would gravitate to it and congest it.

"In the female this is illustrated in the bearing-down sensation in the perineum that many women complain of.

"It is claimed by some that every man after he is 40 years of age has more or less congestion in the prostate. It is also claimed by many observers that 90 per cent of all men past 40 years of age have a pathological condition in the prostate.

"A man of sedentary habits sits a great deal, and that gives pressure against the QUESTION: I am greatly worried about by wife and hope you can give me some suggestions. She is very nervous—won't see people, hides herself when they come to the house; refuses to go out and spends all her time brooding. The only thing in which she has any interest is her flower garden.

I take her out whenever I can manage it and try to make her meet people but this always ends in a scene between us and she threatens to kill herself. I am losing patience with her. Can you help me?—[T. P.

Answer: Such a condition is serious, and it is quite natural that you should have tried to end it by using what seems to you a common-sense method. But common sense does not help in such cases. When nervous people are told, "It's all imagination," they usually get worse instead of better. They simply feel that they are not understood. And it is true; they are not.

We do not laugh at "imagination" when it produces the invention of the electric light or of radio or gives birth to some great work of art. Neither should we laugh at imagination when it produces a sickness. It is really only the exceptional persons who get such sicknesses. If you have an exceptional child, you know how hard it is for him to get along. He doesn't fit in. He isn't like the others. His ways are different. This means that he is going to have a hard fight with the world, because everything is against him. His conflict will be deep: his nature will demand one thing, and the world will demand another. If the conflict is too great, he will develop a nervous sickness. So you see that it is just because he is exceptional that he becomes sick.

The World's Great Geniuses Have All Been High Strung

YOU can imagine that if Columbus had found it too difficult to get help, if there had been no friendly queen, he would have gone insane. He was exceptional and had to carry out his own nature in the face of a world that scorned and ridiculed him. Such a person is high-strung, because he is lonely and the odds against him are so great. But without such people the world would stagnate and then decay.

If such a person develops a neurosis, a nervous sickness, such, T. P., as your wife has, it means that the energy, the power which is directed toward carrying out the person's nature has been balked and obstructed. It is as if the power in an engine instead of getting through to the wheels, went wild into the works and began to destroy them. Columbus's dream was his driving power. If it had been cut off, all the energy in it would have been turned into himself, into his body, and begun to blast both mind and flesh. This is what a nervous disorder is.

The cure is understanding. If your wife could come to know what her nature is, what it needs, what exceptional wish is consuming her—for most people do not know these things about themselves—then she could find an outlet for the energy which is now destroying her. Naturally, if she has failed to succeed in the world, she feels that the world is her enemy, and turns away from it. She cuts herself off from others. She broods. What good is there in forcing her into the world, unless you also can make her understand her task in the world and what her life must mean to herself and others?

Understanding and Sympathy Necessary for Cure

EVIDENTLY you cannot help her, since you cannot understand her. Neither forcing her nor losing patience with her will help. You will simply become one of her enemies. In such a case you can only call in the help of another who has the means of understanding. Her case is exactly the sort which should come under psycho-analysis; for psycho-analysis is the method by which her nature would be probed, her secret wishes laid bare, and an understanding given her of her task in life and the way in which she must fullfil herself.

A young woman who came for analysis in New York had a similar, though milder, nervous trouble. After a few weeks it was discovered that she had a gift for drawing. She had not known this. She had gone to an art school and done so poorly that the teacher sent her home and told her to give up trying in that direction. But in the analysis the gift was clearly seen, and she set to work. She had become an unusual artist, and this has cured her. She has come true to herself.

The Shadow is Often Mistaken for the Substance

QUESTION: I am a man of 50, an idealist, and have had many love affairs. But in the end it's always the same. As soon as I have won the love of a woman I lose all interest in her. I would like to overcome this. Do you think there's any chance? And have you known many people like this?—[A.

Answer: Yes, many, A. If you know about Dante and his Divine Comedy, you will remember that when Dante was a boy he saw Beatrice, who was then 11. He fell violently in love with her, and though he saw her only once or twice again and she died very young, he went on loving her till his death. But Dante was a wise man. He knew that he had never loved the flesh-and-blood Beatrice. He was in love with an ideal, an image, and he came to understand this as the ideal of Holiness, of Divine Philosophy. This is what Goethe meant when he wrote in Faust: "The woman-soul leadeth us upward and on." The woman-soul was the great ideal of perfection, of wisdom and peace which he sought and followed all his life, and through which he strove ever to develop himself. The wisdom of Dante lay in the fact that on the one side he loved Beatrice, an image, but on the other side, he actually married a woman and had children. So he satisfied his nature, both the side that demands the ideal, and that which demands the real. But you, like many others, have your wires crossed. Just as an image in the theater is projected on the screen, so you project the image of the Ideal One on living women. Doubtless whenever you do this, you think that woman a sort of goddess and bow down and adore her. You expect that greatness and beauty which belong to the world of art and religion and philosophy. But after a little you see that your goddess is, as Nietzsche put it, "human, all-too-human," the image fades from her, and you must then put it on another. If you are 50, this is a hard problem. The habit is there. You see, what you need to do is learn to love reality. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and render unto God the things that are God's." That is, put your idealism into ideal things; into art or religion or some cause or undertaking which you consider the highest in the world; and then turn about and learn that the real, the everyday, the facts of life are as beautiful, as great, as necessary to our lives as the ideal things. It is hard for an overidealistic person to do this. He scorns the dust. He is shut away in his dreams. He must come out, and, as an unusual person once said to me, "taste the earth."

To Learn From Others is Secret of True Wisdom

QUESTION: You have heard of people being put on the shelf. Well, I am a mother who has been put on the shelf. I am always giving my children good advice but they never take it. They only laugh at me and go their own way. I am a Christian woman and go to church every Sunday but now since they are grown I can't get my children to go with me. They like all such sinful things as dancing and cards and automobile races and theaters and I don't know what will become of them if they keep on at this rate. They tell me that I don't know how to do anything but lecture and then they go off and leave me by myself. What can I do?—[S. M.

Answer: Are you sure that it is your children who have put you on the shelf, and not you yourself who have done so? I knew a very wise mother. She was a minister's daughter, and then a minister's wife. Her upbringing was of the old New England variety, rather Puritanic and conservative along certain lines, and highly cultivated along others. But one of the things she decided upon was that she would never grow old, and she decided to keep young by being a pupil. A pupil of whom? Why, the young, of course. She had an only son, and she learned from him. As soon as he grew old enough to think, he became quite a radical. He took up ideas, books, movements which were to her quite shocking. Nevertheless, she always had him tell her everything and she read all the books. The result was that she agreed with him about some things and disagreed about others. She said to him: "I understand Herbert, why you think that way. I think this way." They discussed everything together. Naturally he also gave in at certain points. So that by being a pupil of her son, she also became his teacher. Today she is over 70, and girls and boys of 18 and 19 come in and tell her their most secret thoughts. She sparkles with youth. There is no shelf for her, but a deep chair in the center of the circle.

Mental and Spiritual Qualities Not Governed by Sex

QUESTION: I read the other day about science having discovered "a third sex." The article said that Joan of Arc belonged to this sex, being at the same time a gentle maid and a commander of armies like a real fellow. Do you think there's anything in this "third sex" business?—[X. Y. Z.

Answer: I do not. It is true, that every so often a child is born whose body combines certain features of both the male and female body. But when it comes to the character of a human being, what do we mean by sex?

Certainly since the body of a man differs in some ways from the body of a woman, the nature of a man must also differ in some ways from the nature of a woman. But these psychic or mental differences are rather hard to be sure about. We say, for instance, that women are more patient than men, that they endure pain better, and that they are less selfish and more loving, especially toward children. But how much of this is due to the fact that they have had to be that way through stern necessity, and how much due to nature? We know women who are impatient, can't stand pain at all, and hate children. We see men who are models of endurance, self-sacrifice and love. There is a difference, but it eludes one. It is hard to grasp.

On the other hand, we know clearly what we mean when we speak of the feminine and the masculine. These are labels that have been used for many ages. By feminine we mean beauty, idealism, softness, devotion, sacrifice, all the things that are meant by love. By masculine we mean strength, hardness, fighting, egotism, conquest, all the things that are meant by power.

But when we come to study actual human beings we see that these things are more matters of type, than of sex. The two practical types, the thinking and feeling, are the "masculine" types. They are hard, direct. They fight and conquer. The two irrational types, the sensational and intuitive, are the "feminine" types. The sensational lives by whim, passion, and has that flightiness which we also call feminine. For instance, we say it is a woman's right to change her mind; and Shakespeare has a woman say: "My only reason is a woman's reason: I think it so because I think it so." As for the intuitive, here we have the love, devotion, sacrifice supposed to be solely woman's.

Queen Elizabeth Had Many Masculine Characteristics

YOU see the point. A feeling type woman may be a Queen Elizabeth, a very man for action and hardness. A thinking type woman may be a George Eliot, very intellectual and powerful. A sensational type man may change his mind every hour; and an intuitive man may be as girlish and sweet as Shelley.

Then we see people who seem to combine the two sides. Among the great they are often found. It was said of Lincoln that he was not only a man, powerful, direct, a fighter and thinker, but that he had much of the mother in him, the tender brooding over others, the deep love of his kind. Joan of Arc was such a combination. It has nothing to do with sex. For every one of us has in him the whole of human nature, all those things which come under the head of love, and all those which come under the head of power. We have each of us the feminine and the masculine. But such is our training that we expect one set of things from a boy, and another from a girl, and so our children grow up one-sided. The great are often those who break the rules, and so allow both sides of their natures to develop. They have everything in them. They are the complete human beings.

"Just a Little Longer"

Every night when supper's done,
  And the dishes cleared away,
All the family one by one,
  Gather on the porch so gay.
Then we start in telling tales,
  That each one just loves to hear,
Until even mother fails
  To remember—bedtime's near.

Softly Tommy's sitting there,
  (Well he knows it's after eight)
Never with a thought or care,
  Though the hour is growing late.
But then mother chances to Look up and she shakes her head,
Saying: "this will never do,
  Little boys should be in bed."

Oh! how Tommy hates to go,
  When his bedtime comes at last,
Oft' he says he'd like to know,
  How those moments fly so fast.
And with many a sad: "Gee whiz,"
  To stay up he'll always tease,
Till poor mother yields to his;
  "Just a little longer please."

There are many pleasures found,
  In the sports of youth that please,
And oft, Tommy races 'round,
  Bruising hands and skinning knees.
But those moments "after eight"
  On the porch, bring gladness rare,
When he's told that he may wait,
  "Just a litle longer" there.

CORTLANDT BLEECKER, walking in Fifth avenue, waved his stick toward a line of millionaire's palaces, all of which were closed.

"It reminds me of a story," he said. "A millionaire built a white chateau here facing Central Park, and when the chateau was done he said to his wife:

"'At last I've given you the fine big house of your dreams. What are your plans for the family now?'

"'Now,' his wife answered, 'we'll spend our winters in California, our summers at Deauville, our springs on the Riviera and our autumns in Venice. That's what everybody does as soon as they can afford a fine big house like this.'"

Looked Tight

GEN. CHARLES C. DAWES was talking at a dinner in Washington about the inefficiency in certain government services.

"Some of it," he said, "is calculated inefficiency—bell boy inefficiency."

"Bell boy inefficiency?" repeated a puzzled Senator.

"An elderly lady," said Gen. Dawes, "from New England took one of the most expensive rooms in an expensive Florida hotel and proceeded to act rather strangely. For instance, she'd go downstairs if she wanted a pitcher of water and carry it up herself. She'd do the same if she wanted pens, a cup of tea, or writing paper.

"Finally the manager spoke to her about the matter.

"'If you'd ring the bell, ma'am,' he said, 'a bell boy would perform these small services for you.'

"'Yes,' said the elderly lady with a smile, 'but there isn't any bell in my room, you know.'

"'Oh, yes there is,' said the manager. 'I'll show it to you.'

"And he went up with her to her room and showed her the electric bell beside her bed.

"'My goodness, how strange!' said the elderly maiden lady. 'Is that a bell? Well, the bell boy, told me it was a fire alarm signal and I must be careful never to touch it except in case of fire.'"

Flapper Talk

SENATOR WATSON said of the immigration question at a dinner in Atlanta:

"Immigrants must be educated. They must above all be educated in our language.

"Very few of these people understand our language thoroughly. You have heard, of course, of the immigrant policeman who went into a shop and asked for a cake of soap.

"'Scented or unscented?' said the attendant.

"'Thank you; I'll take it with me,' said the policeman.

"Another time he arrested a drunken man, butthe police surgeon after examining his captive, said in a stern voice:

"'This poor fellow is not drunk. He has been drugged.'

"The policeman turned pale.

"'I'm afraid you are right there, doctor,' he said, 'I drugged him all the way from Brown street to the patrol box—he was that limp, you know.'"

• • •

Push 'em Along

SENATOR HIRAM JOHNSON said in an address in Washington:

"State papers of international import should be very delicately worded. Every effort should be made not to give offense. Yet some of our diplomats seem to me to be as gauche in these matters as the little girl who said to the doctor:

"'Here's the remains of the medicine you gave grandpop, doctor. He's dead and mamma thought you might want to use it on somebody else.'"

Conscientious Guides

A VISITOR to the lakes of Killarney while talking with his guide, learned that at the season of the year when tourists weren't coming the guides spent their time in complete idleness.

"How on earth do you manage to pass the time if you have no occupation?" the stranger inquired.

"Faith and that's aisy," laughed the old fellow. "We are kept busy thinkin' up new lies to tell the visitors when the season opens again."

Eternal Watch-Dog

DR. ADOLF LORENZ, the Viennese surgeon, said at a dinner in New York:

"Worse than surgical cases are neurotic ones—people with disordered nerves whose ailments are imaginary—people with neurasthenia, melancholia and so on.

"A man with a neurotic wife said to me one day:

"'Recently my wife took to imagining that every noise meant a burglar. She kept me awake half the night.'

"'You should have told her,' said I, 'that burglars work in silence.'

"'I did,' said the man, 'with the result that silence frightens her now worse than noises did. She's kept me awake all night ever since.'"

Cast Your Vote

EXPLORER SHACKLETON and his polar quest were under discussion in a club.

"I met Shackleton at a London dinner party," said an editor. "The lady on his left bothered him with all sorts of ridiculous questions.

"'But how will you know,' she said, 'when you have reached the pole?'

"'Oh,' said Shackleton, 'nothing easier. One step beyond the pole, you see, and a south wind becomes a north one.'"

Up-to-Date Miracle

REPRESENTATIVE MERRICK was talking in Oklahoma City about a fish speculator who had made millions during the war.

"It's a good fish story," he said, "and fish stories are popular. In fact, they've been popular ever since the days of Jonah.

"In the days of Jonah the fish swallowed the prophet and the people swallowed the story, but nowadays the people swallow the fish and somebody also swallows the profit."

"OUR Cummunist friends," saidSa muel Gompers at a labor banquet, "often reminds me of Joe Gillinganovitch.

"As Joe Gillinganovitch, smoking thoughtfully, watched a large building operation, a boss came up to him and said:

"'Hey, you, want a job?'

"Joe took his pipe out of his mouth.

"'I can only work in the mornings,' he said slowly.

"'Rats! Why can't you work in the afternoons?' said the boss.

"'Well, you see,' Jos explained, 'in the afternoon I always carry a banner in the unemployed parade.'"

Read the Signs

GEORGE BIRMINGHAM, the Ulster humorist, said on one of his lecture tours:

"The Irish make the best soldiers in the world, but it isn't true that all that Ireland asks of England is to be left to fight in peace.

"No, that isn't true and yet there's a war story which seems to bear it out.

"A magnificent young Irish soldier was wounded by a shell in Flanders, and they carried him unconscious to a wrecked village.

"When he came to he lay in a ruined house. The walls of the house were partly gone, the roof had fallen in and debris from bursting bombs was falling everywhere.

"'Where am I?' said the wounded Irish soldier.

"An orderly, to cheer him up, answered:

"'You're back in Ireland, mate.'

"The soldier looked around at the ruin and desolation encompassing him.

"'Faith, thin,' he said, 'I've missed it all. Tell me, boy, how long have they had home rule?'"

Without a Struggle

A MINISTER approached a group of quarreling boys and inquired the cause of their trouble. They showed him a forlorn-looking stray dog and explained that the boy telling the biggest lie should be its owner.

The conscientious clergyman remonstrated: "When I was a little boy I never told lies."

This assertion was considered for a few seconds; then one of the urchins ordered, "Give him the dog."

Orphaned by a Pen

MARGARET E. SANGER, the birth control leader, said at a luncheon in Boston:

"These people who try to give us trouble give trouble to themselves. It's like the tale of the officious proofreader.

"A proof-reader muttered impatiently over his work:

"'Some people make me tired. Here's a reading notice that begins in the third person and ends in the first. "Express their gratitude—our little son." A thing that begins the third person must stick to the third person right up to the end.'

"The proof-reader accordingly corrected the reading notice, and it appeared in a prominent place in the next day's paper as follows:

"'Mr. and Mrs. William Osborn Logan desire to thank publicly, Dr. Cutler and Miss Mae Winter, the talented young nurse, for the devoted kindness they showed to their little son during his recent illness.'"

Not in America

SENATOR LODGE, whose literary acumen is well known, said at a literary dinner in Boston:

"The true test of a novelist is that he hold the reader absolutely by his magic, making the reader his absolute slave.

"Like the story of the Grimm brothers, you know, the famous writers of fairy tales. One day a little girl rang the bell of their house, and William Grimm opened the door.

"'Are you the Mr. Grimm who writes the pretty tales?' she said.

"'Yes—my brother and I.'

"'Did you write the one about the clever little tailor who married the princess?'

"'Yes.'

"'Well,' said the little girl, 'the tale says that every one who does not believe it must pay you a thaler. Now I don't believe that a princess ever married a tailor. So here is a groschen; I haven't as much as a thaler; but I hope to pay you the rest little by little.'

"At this point Jacob Grimm came in, and the two brothers had an interesting talk with their little reader, but they couldn't persuade her to take back her groschen. She left it on the hall table and took leave soberly, insisting that she would bring the rest another time."

Too Intelligent

WILLIE was out riding in his father's lately acquired car. The car didn't work just right, and each time it came to a standstill it happened to be in front of some house. Evidently Willie was thinking of the horse the peddler owned that had become accustomed to stopping of its own accord in front of every house.

"Gee," exclaimed Willie, "this car must think it belongs to a peddler."

Not Since Prohibition

THE officer of the day was striding down the lines, trying to avoid tripping over his sword, and to look as if the welfare of the camp rested on his shoulders.

He came across a private shaving outside his tent.

"Do you always shave outside, my man?" he asked.

"Of course!" was the reply. "Did you think I was fur-lined?"

No More Bull

ALONG the country road walked a man and a woman. The gaunt, stern-faced female was bullying the meek little fellow who trudged just in front of her with downcast head.

Suddenly the woman saw a bull racing down the road behind them. She quickly took refuge in the hedge, but her companion kept on, unconscious of aught but his woes.

The bull caught up to him and sent him spinning into a muddy ditch, then continued on its wild career.

As the woebegone figure crawled out of the mire he saw his better half coming toward him. Picking up a little spirit he whimpered:

"M-M-Marie, if you hit me like that a-a-again, you'll really get my temper up, so I warn you."

COMMISSIONER HAYNES was heckled in a recent prohibition speech in Chicago.

"Suppose, friends," he said, "that I had here a bucket of water and a bucket of beer, and suppose I brought a donkey on, which bucket do you think he would drink?"

"He'd drink the water," said a voice from the gallery.

"Precisely," said Commissioner Haynes. "He'd drink the water. And why would he drink the water, friends?"

"Because," said the voice, "he's an ass."

Then the Fight Started

"THE Allies must pull together better, do better team work. Just now they remind one of the Flying Bullet Express."

Judge Kenesaw M. Landis was addressing a lawyers' banquet in Chicago.

"The Flying Bullet," he went on, "arrived at her destination some six hours late, and the engineer said complacently to the new brakeman:

"'Well, son, how's that for railroadin'?'

"'Fine,' said the new brakeman. 'We're a little late, though, ain't we?'

"'Yes,' the engineer agreed, 'we are a little late—six hours or so, not more. It's that blamed Hospital Hill,' he continued excitedly. 'Never in all my life did I have such trouble to get the old Flyin' Bullet up that hill as I had today.'

"'Yes,' said the new brakeman, 'and she'd have slipped back, too, if I hadn't had the brakes on as tight as I could get them.'"

THE POTTERS

By J. P. McEVOY

PROLOGUE

The company for which Pa works has declared a holiday and an industrial picnic for the employees . . . the employees with characteristic generosity are willing to go fifty-fifty with the company, taking the holiday for themselves and giving the company the picnic; but the company is obdurate . . . it is going to make its employees enjoy themselves in spite of themselves . . . the officials realize what everybody knows these days—that employees, if left to their own devices, will not enjoy themselves with scientific efficiency . . . they may enjoy themselves, to be sure, but with so many wasted motions.

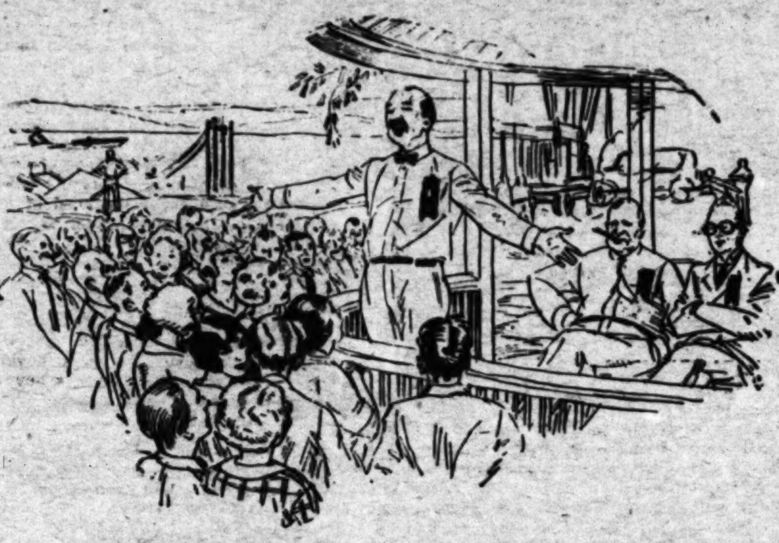
Scene I. Off to the Picnic Grove

Pa Potter is a minor executive with the company . . . that means there are more people in the firm who can holler at him than he can holler at . . . Pa believes firmly in efficiency, and he works so efficiently making money for the boss he has no time to do anything for himself . . . he was never busier than today, for he must keep track of the employees telling them what the president and the board of directors are going to do for them some day when they get around to it.

PA (who is taking a tonneauful of pretty stenographers out to the picnic grove . . . Ma, in the front seat, can't understand why Pa couldn't have taken men instead . . . women, wives especially, are so incompetent in business matters:) There's the gang . . . suppose we pass . . . hold your hats . . . I'll give 'er gas . . .

(Pa steps on 'er and sails by a truckload of employees on way to grounds . . . everybody, everybody except Ma, who gives Pa a look that says, "Aren't you ashamed of yourself, making a fool of yourself at your age?" . . . Pa flushes and looks straight ahead for the rest of the trip.)

GIRLISH VOICES (chattering gayly in the back seat:) Was Frank in that truck back there? . . . I hope so . . . he's a peachy hoofer, isn't he? . . . did you see Alice's new ratine . . . made it herself, and all the embroidery, too . . . she's a lovely girl, isn't she? . . . such big blue eyes . . . Jack is mad about her . . . do you think so? Why, I heard there's somep'n

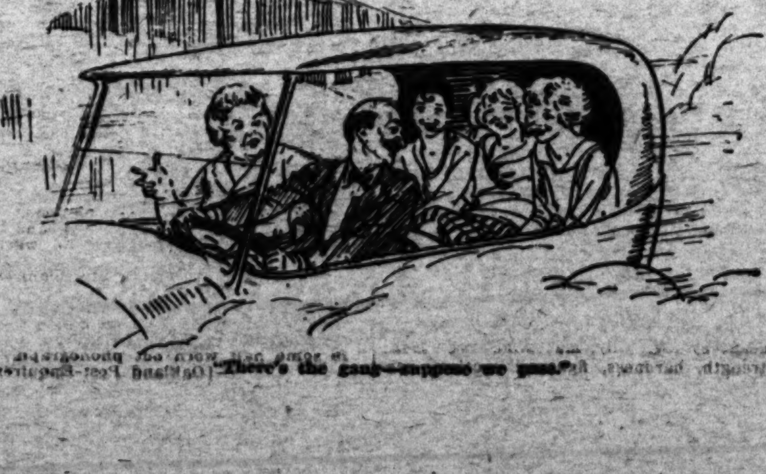


"Fellow employ-ees and friends, for you are, indeed, friends on this occasion—"

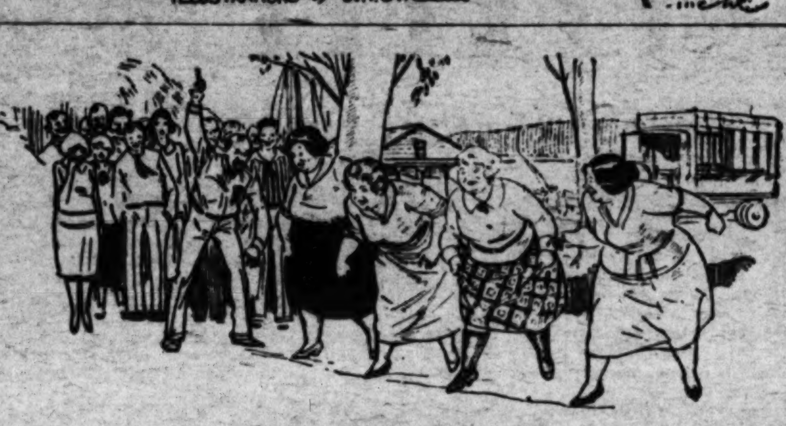
come between 'em . . . I heard that, too. They say that . . . Oh, Mr. Potter, are we going to have dancing? I'm going to have the first dance with you . . . no, I'm going to have the first one! Can't I, Mr. Potter? . . . ah, let me have the first one . . .

(Ma tries to look cordial and gay . . . smiles with her face, but you can see her heart is not in it . . . trust them.)

PA (who has faith that he may enjoy himself a little bit in spite of his heavy duties and the sudden dislike Ma has taken to all the young things under 25:) Don't fight, girls . . . you'll all get a chance, just stand in line and take your chance . . . here's the grove . . . we're early . . . whoa! I'll open the doors . . . c'mon, let's go . . .



"There's the gang—suppose we pass."



"On your marks! Get set! Go!"

(Pa gayly and gallantly helps the girls out, and then, by force of habit, helps Ma out last . . . he knows subconsciously, through years of association, she doesn't really need any help to get out of an automobile, but that doesn't assuage the dull wrath in her ample bosom . . . Poor Pa! crushed again, and he is trying so hard to be happy . . . how like the cigale are the Pa Potters of our species, the cigale of whom Fabre says so eloquently: "Four years of hard labor underground, and a month of feasting in the sun: such is the life of the cigale. Do not let us reproach the adult insect with his triumphant delirium. For four years, in the darkness, he has worn a dirty parchment overall; for four years he has mined the soil with his talons, and now the mud-stained sapper is suddenly clad in the finest raiment, and provided with wings that rival the bird's; moreover, he is drunken with heat and flooded with light, the supreme terrestrial joy. His cymbals will never suffice to celebrate such felicity, so well earned, although so ephemeral.")

(Curtain.)

Scene II. The Plump Ladies' Race

And now the picnic is in full swing . . . over there a baseball game is going on between two of the departments . . . Pa Potter pitched the first ball . . . over here the elderly women of the party are arranging the lunches generously provided by the employees, who had the foresight to remember them . . . the girls have other things to think about, such as the fauna and flora of the grove . . . the young men, who were merely clerks and salesmen yesterday, have suddenly developed a keen taste for botanical exploration . . . Pa is now starting the Plump Ladies' Race . . . after much protesting and giggling, a few of them are lined up . . . all the little birds have gathered for miles to see it.

PA (sternly:) On your marks . . . get set . . . HERE, wait a minute . . . not so fast . . . wait until I say GO.

(Immediately three of them, including Ma, start. Pa calls them back.)

I didn't say go, did I? . . .

MA (panting:) Of course you did! Didn't he?

SECOND P. L.: Of course you did. You said "GO," and we went.

PA (confused:) I didn't mean "Go" then. I was merely instructing.

MA (with proprietary candor:) Well, say what you mean. I don't think you know anything about starting races, anyway . . . you never started any before.

PA (struggling to preserve his official prestige before the other women—a shade louder and crisper than necessary:) On your marks . . . get set . . . GO!

(They go . . . some of them fifty feet . . . some of them half way . . . one finishes the distance . . . it is Ma, of course . . . she wouldn't have Pa crowing over her and saying she was a quitter, if it killed her . . . which it pretty near did, at that.)

(Curtain.)

Scene III. Speechmaking

The employees gather with mixed feelings to hear Pa extoll the virtues of the company officials . . . not that they dislike the officials, they merely view them with the same tolerant indifference with which they look upon their work . . . modern efficiency and specialization have . . . pride of accomplishment in many big industrial hives . . . if your job is boring three identical bolt holes exactly the same size with the same number of monkey motions so many miles a minute all day long, your lack of pride in the finished automobile is understandable if not pardonable . . . or if for eighty-nine times a day you have to look interested while you take down such winged words as "Yours of the 14th inst at hand. Will say in reply that—" especially if you are young and light-hearted and your job is only a sort of a stop for refreshments, between the diploma and the marriage license, would you be delirious with pride in the firm and its officials? . . . you would not, unless, perhaps, the one furnished music in the lunchroom during the noon hour and the others looked like Rodolf Valentino . . . how all of us men hate that fellow:

PA (who is a bit nervous in delivering his laudation for the Old Man and the General Manager, since both the O. M. and the G. M. are right there, taking it in . . . and gosh, how they dread it:!) Fellow employees and friends, for you are indeed friends on this occasion . . . (halts a bit confusedly; realizes this doesn't sound quite right, but it's too late now to remedy it, anyway . . . plunges ahead) . . . we are gathered here today on this joyful occasion to enjoy ourselves as joyfully as we can. (From the crowd: "Louder!") The president and the general manager have consented to be with us today to join in our festivities, and we extend them a cordial welcome. (Cheers, a bit feeble, but unmistakably cheers.) Business is getting better, and we can look forward with confidence to a prosperous and happy future. (Cries of "Louder and funnier!") That last remark reminds me of the story of "Deacon" Jones, who was working on a building. A fellow who used to go by there every day noticed this colored man, Jones, whom everybody called "Deacon," was the loudest and toughest and meanest talking man on the job. One day this fellow stopped and said, "I hear these men always calling you 'Deacon,'" and he says, "Yas, sah, thass right. I'se a deacon?" and the fellow says, "How come you a deacon?" and he says, "Well, down in Carolinah, where I comes frum, th' rough element got in control o' th' church there one time an' they needed some one to rep'sent 'em, 'an' so they picked me, an' I was made a deacon to rep'sent th' rough element." (Laughter.) Evidently the fellow who just interrupted me also represents the rough element of this gathering. (Cheers and laughter and cries of "Thattaboy, Potter, give it to em!") . . . And now we've all come here to have a good time and forget business, and I am sure we will all enjoy ourselves; but first we will have a few remarks from the president, who wishes to speak to you . . .

(After which rather dubious introduction the Old Man delivers a forty-five minute talk on "How to Succeed Through Industry, Perseverance, Thrift and Efficiency" . . . copies of which have already been sent to the advertising department with the suggestion that "a certain amount of publicity would be desirable, and, if necessary, benevolent pressure might be brought to bear on the papers, if it was deemed feasible" . . . and now, after a brief talk by the G. M., the employees are free to follow their own devices . . . there is a scramble and a rush to the dancing pavilion, where a sinful saxophone is already beginning to gurgle in passionate syncopation . . . and there, in a rhythmic welter of red corpuscles, blue notes and white arms—the new American color scheme—we will leave the merry-maker and the Potters—Pa and Ma—to enjoy themselves undisturbed and unperplexed by such trivialities as industrial cohesion and the successful working out of an order of living where more may work because of pride than toil because of privation.)

(And that's that—until next Sunday.)

"Wait a Minute"

First thing in the morning bright,
Last thing that we hear at night,
Every time ma says: "Come here,"
Or: "Go mind the baby dear,"
Tommy's sure to make reply,
As he lightly hurries by;
"Wait a minute."

Matters not what he is told,
Seems those words will ne'er grow old,
If on errands he must go,
Soon as mother's called we know,
Just the very words we'll hear,
E'er those boyish steps draw near;
"Wait a minute."

Ne'er an hour passes by,
That he makes not that reply;
School time finds him always there,
With those same words free from care,
And at bedtime, always we Know just what his words will be;
"Wait a minute."

Yet each afternoon at three,
When from lessons Tommy's free,
There's a gay light-hearted lad,
Who is happy then and glad,
And when school mates call to play,
Then we never hear him say;
"Wait a minute."

THE HOW IN HOUSES

HOW TO PLAN HOW TO BUY HOW TO SAVE

AWNINGS AND SHADES AND CURTAINS AS DECORATIVE FEATURES

FROM the decorative standpoint, awnings have become a necessary part of many of our new houses, especially those of Spanish type. California's roofs are gradually turning into canvas. From the artistic point of view the consideration of color is most important. The most successful awnings blend with the color of the house rather than form too great a contrast with it. In those in which there are stripes of two colors, one of the colors should blend with the general color scheme of the house.

Awnings should appear to be a part of the house, architecturally and not be the only part of it that is noticed. They are used as protections over windows and doors, as roller shades around porches and as roofs.

Many porches are so shallow that the roof gives very little protection against sun or rain. From the edge of the roof a piece of awning canvas may be extended several feet, on a sufficient slant to give protection. This increases the size of the porch because so much more of it can be used. Awning canvas comes in stripes or in plain colors with a border painted on or woven into it.

Complete canvas roofs may be put over porches otherwise of very little use; or if there is no porch at all, an awning may be fastened to the side of the house and extend over a portion of the lawn. In this way an awning porch may be built on for the summer only and be folded up and put away in the winter.

Most awnings are finished on the edge with a hem or are bound with some suitable material but a very good way to finish those on small porches, is to sew to the lower edge a two-inch string fringe. The width of the colored stripe must be determined by the general plan of the house and the form of the decorations. If the general style and trimming of the house are delicate, a plain awning with a narrow border or one with narrow stripes should be used. Large formal houses are the only ones that can stand wide and exceedingly bright stripes.

Porch shades are made of a variety of materials, split bamboo, split reed and narrow wooden slats. These are finished in green, brown and mahogany. They come in any length and in widths up to twenty feet, so it is well when building a house, to have the pillars close enough together so that a screen may be placed between them. Awning material on a roller can be used in the same way.

Window Shades Are Made of a Variety of Materials

FOR sun rooms especially but for almost any room in fact, window shades made of colored chintz are colorful and decorative. The chintz is fastened to a roller, as is any shade material and to the cord may be attached a curtain pull of painted wood to match or blend with the colors of the curtain. Another style of decorated shade may be made by painting designs on regular window shades. Of course the shade is one of the lighter toned ones. Oil paint is used and the design is usually conventional. The colors should match those of the side drapes or if used in a breakfast-room, they may match the colors of the china or of the painted furniture. A design of one unit in the center of the shade, an inch or two above the hem is the most successful one used. A border may also be used across the lower part of the shade.

Austrian cloth and a number of other shade materials, including tinted linen should be investigated before the new shades are bought for the house. Especially should the colors be compared with the wall color both in the daytime and at night, for often the artificial light spoils an otherwise good match. When the color changes so considerably at night it often makes a very discordant note, out of harmony with all the surroundings. Windows are of very great importance in the decorative scheme. Since they are so important the various kinds of semitransparent draperies must be very carefully chosen in order to have them in harmony with the rest of the furnishings.

Greatly Improved Lace Curtain Design Has Been

THE lace curtain belongs in the class of drapes which allow light to enter the room but is not easily seen through from without. It is fortunate that present day lace curtain patterns are a wonderful improvement over those of twenty years ago; especially those designed in America. This change is due to the demand on the part of the buyer for more simple and refined elements in window decoration. The use of other materials such as scrim, marquisette and muslin had increased so tremendously thatthe lace curtain industry was rapidly decreasing. The introduction of plainer materials demanded more simple designs. An improvement in electric light fixtures came before one in curtains because attention had been called to them by enterprising power producers.

Lace curtain inset.

Leaded glass was used in Europe as the approved window decoration until the French Renaissance and the only curtain used was a tapestry that afforded protection against the cold. As the windows become improved so thatthey were more suited to dwellings, the leaden outline was more delicate in design and the colors became brighter, so that colored drapes to add light or brightness to the room were unnecessary.

Later panels of clear glass were used and then was the first transparent textile used. At that time all windows were fitted with wooden shutters which were always closed at night. When these were no longer in style curious frames covered with highly ornamental materials were used to block the windows. These frames were similar to our metal screen frames except that they were covered with printed cottons or silks. From this time on, the problem of window terestand thought. So after all, the variterest and thought. So after all the various questions of window decoration are recent and novel and there is no end to the variety of problems to be worked out. Fortunately for us manufacturers have given us materials that are quite inexpensive and are easily made appropriate to modern living conditions.

VASE OR LAMP?

If jars or vases of porcelain or pottery are to be used as lamps, it isn't necessary to buy those with holes in the base for the electric cord. The new electric fixtures have a metal top which fits into the top of a jar of any size. On account of this invention a bowl or vase may be used either as a receptacle to hold flowers, or as the base of a lamp. Very beautiful luster vases may be bought for $10 or $15, while other kinds are priced as low as $4 or $5. Either a silk or parchment shade is suitable with these bowls. Very wonderful effects are produced by stretching one thickness of chiffon over the parchment after it has been designed and painted.

IT MAKES TOUGH MEAT TENDER

It doesn't always do to tell that you use one, but an automatic meat or steak pounder helps to smooth out the family's finances without ruffling anyone's temper. It is another labor saving device where it is much easier to turn a handle for a minute or two than it is to pound a steak for five minutes.

THE FIREPROOF HOUSE

There is a certain prejudice against the fireproof house because the very word fireproof seems to conjure up a steel filing cabinet or a concrete warehouse, but "The Country Life Book of Building and Decorating" (Doubleday, Page & Company) shows how attractive such houses may be. The three determining factors, the floors, walls, and ceilings can be managed so that there is no possible risk from fire and that without any loss of decorative interest. Nor is wood debarred. A thoroughly fireproof structure means that where a ceiling shows a plaster surface, there must be no wooden surface, there must be metal, tile, concrete, wooden studs and lathing underneath; where there is wood paneling, there must be in the wall back of it no wood, but only unburnable substances. Whether a floor shows wood or tile on the surface, there must be no wood concealed from view beneath it. It is in the concealed wood that the danger lies. The unseen supports must be of stone, brick, concrete, hollow tile, or steel.

GROUPS THAT INVEIGLE

While "cosy corners" are no longer the ambition of every bride, the creating of little groups of furniture that makes centers of interest in the various rooms is something that the ambitious homemaker can well consider. Such a group may consist of a table, a lamp and a chair; of a desk and chair with a picture over the desk; of a console table with a mirror over it and a pair of vases or candlesticks on it; or of merely a chair and a lamp drawn up invitingly in front of a window, where every breeze that blows may be felt while one reads the newspaper or book of one's choice.

WALL PAPER SELECTION

Wall paper is best used as a background for pictures and furniture and not itself as a picture or series of pictures. Where plain paper is not liked, a two-toned one may be selected. Mottled papers with the colors well blended are sometimes satisfactory. Striped paper makes the ceiling seem higher; light paper causes the walls to seem to recede, thus producing the effect of space; dark papers bring the walls together and so tend to make the room seem smaller and darker. Above all, paper having striking designs should be avoided, as they make a poor background and are annoying to most persons.

THE ACHING BACK.

The placing of the sink, table and shelves at convenient working height is an important factor in reducing the strain of kitchen work. Most of these are too low for convenience.

SATSUMA LAMP AND STAND

An old blue satsuma pottery vase with a bowl of excellent curves was recently converted into an electric lamp and then mounted on a quite plain teakwood stand. Such lamps are as attractive as they are individual.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER

Warren's Activities as a Chef Result in a Culinary Catastrophe.

"IT'S already cut up. All you have to do is wash it and put it on in cold water. Use that big aluminum stew pan."

"How much water?" demanded Warren.

"Enough to cover it well. You add more as it boils down. Dear, maybe you'd better have a recipe. Bring me that cook book—on the pantry shelf."

"Now, I can make chicken broth without any recipe. I've cooked a lot at camp. You lay back there and take a nap—leave this job to me."

Helen dropped back on the pillow, her hand at her throat. Though convalescing from tonsilitis, it still hurt her to talk.

Fortunately, it was Sunday and Warren was at home, for Nora had just been called away by a telegram announcing her sister's death.

Mrs. O'Grady was coming to wash tomorrow. She could get breakfast and dinner and Nora would be at home Tuesday after the funeral.

"How much salt?" demanded Warren, from the door, the salt box in his hand.

"Oh, just enough to season it—not too much."

"Huh, that's definite! A teaspoon or a fistful?"

"Dear, you'll have to bring me that cook book—that'll tell exactly."

When Warren slammed down on the bed the oilcloth covered book, Helen turned hastily to "Soups," and read aloud the recipe for chicken broth.

> "One three-pound chicken, two quarts water, one tablespoon salt. Separate chicken at joints, salt, cover with water, and bring slowly to a boil. Let simmer until tender. Season and strain. A little rice may be added if desired."

"All right, that's dead easy."

"Put on an apron," Helen called after him. "There's one on the pantry door. Did you rinse out the stew pan? Dear, rinse off everything you use."

In a few moments Warren was back, his coat off, sleeves rolled up and one of Nora's white serving aprons tied grotesquely around his broad chest.

"Where d'you keep the rice?"

"The shelf over the sink. Wash it and let it soak until about twenty minutes before you take off the broth. Wash it well—five or six times."

"Now, don't be so damned particular. It'll be a whole lot cleaner than anything you get in a restaurant. Keep this cat in here! She's right under my feet."

"She wants the chicken liver. Put it in her saucer under the table."

"Huh, I've got enough to do to feed you," as he strode out with Pussy Purr-Mew trotting hopefully after him.

Adjusting her pillows, Helen selected the feature section from the bulky Sunday paper Warren had tossed on the bed. She was deep in an article on "Spirit Paintings," when he came in, rolling down his sleeves.

"You didn't leave the gas too high?"

"Nope, everything's all right. That's going to be the finest chicken broth you ever tasted."

Helen restrained a smile. The few times Warren had attempted to cook, his conceit had been insufferable.

"Dear, before you sit down, you'd better straighten around in the front room. Some one might come in."

"Oh, it looks all right in there," settling down by the window with the financial section. "If I do the cooking, that's enough."

Still weak and headachey from lack of sleep, Helen soon dozed off.

She awoke with the troubled consciousness of something wrong.

Warren was not in his chair. The air was pungent with the odor of scorching food.

"It's all right now," he came in as she was groping for her slippers. "You lay back there! Just a little of the rice burnt at the bottom."

"But you haven't put the rice in yet?"

"Sure, it's 12 o'clock. You've been snoozing there two hours. It's almost done—going to be great, too."

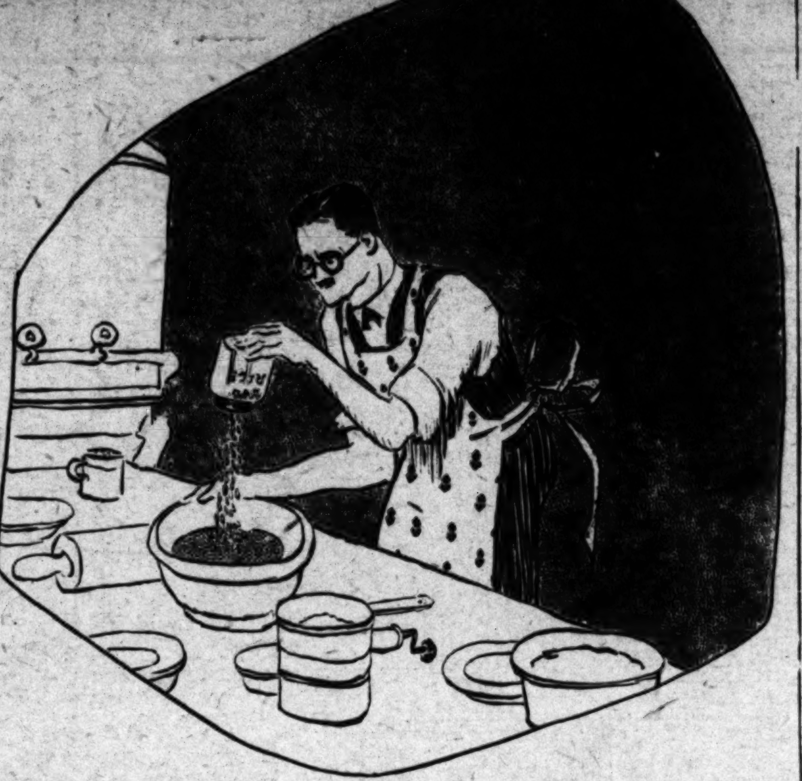
"Doctor said I could sit up a little today. Can't I go in to the table?"

"Guess that won't hurt you," Warren retreated kitchenward.

It was just half-past one when he shouted that "chow" was ready.

Wrapped in his big blanket robe, Helen shuffled weakly out to the arm chair he had ready. With a gasp of dismay she viewed the uninviting table.

A newspaper served for a tablecloth. In the center, on a bulky magazine, reposed the large aluminum stew pan.



Speechless, Helen stared at its contents. Surely that could not be the chicken broth—that brownish, gluey mass!

"Little too much rice. Didn't know the blooming stuff would swell."

"Why, how much did you put in?" faltered Helen.

"Not more than half that glass jar. Didn't look much—but the damned stuff bloated on me."

"Half that jar? Why, that's over a pound! Why didn't you ask—"

"I did, but you're so blamed indefinite. You said you like rice in it, so I though I'd put in enough. How the Sam Hill was I to know it'd swell? But it's all right. I'll dig down and get you some of the soup."

There was no soup. Vainly Warren dug deep into the pasty mass—it was solid rice with chicken embedded in it.

"This is soft, won't hurt your throat," as he heaped her plate. "Rice is good for you. That's what they live on in China."

The rice was cooked to a gluey sogginess, and the burnt taste and hue proved it had not been stirred from the bottom.

"Don't leave all that on the table—takes my appetite just to see it."

"You're too durned squeamish," as he set the stew pan on the sideboard.

"We can't eat like this. Let's put on a tablecloth. There's one right there in the sideboard."

"Now, no sense making a lot of work. We'll cut out the frills for one meal."

The table was scantily set. The bread in its paper wrapper, and the butter in the brown bowl used only for the ice box, looked most unappetizing.

"That chicken's great! See how tender it is?" boasted Warren.

Helen tried to extricate a shred of white meat from the mound of rice on her plate.

"Dear, I can't eat when I see so much. Put half of this back, won't you?" handing him her plate. "I just want a very little."

Her stomach always weak when she was sick, Helen shrank with shuddering revulsion from the smeared plate he handed back to her.

"Eh? Now, what's the matter?" bristled Warren.

"Nothing, dear, but I'm not very hungry. There's some milk out there—I think I'll just take a glass of that."

"You're too blamed finicky," he snorted, stalking out to the pantry.

He returned with a milk bottle and a thick kitchen glass.

If he had not brought the bottle! The outside was not overly clean. To Helen it suggested the dirty crates often seen in dairy wagons.

She gulped down the milk, trying not to see the bottle, her smeary plate, nor the heaping stew pan on the sideboard.

"Here's a piece of the breast," Warren dug out a fragment of white meat from the unpalatable mass on his plate. "Try this!"

"No, no, I couldn't. Really. I'm not hungry."

"You can't get well without eating. Got to have some nourishment."

In spite of his assertions that he liked "that burnt flavor," the aggressive appetite with which Warren attacked his own portion soon waned.

"Shouldn't eat much in the middle of the day, anyway," pushing back his plate. "That'll be fine for supper—just have to warm it up."

"Just warm a little of it—we couldn't eat all that in a week. And it can't stand in that stewpan. Empty it in one of those brown bowls."

"Nothing out here big enough," Warren called back from the kitchen.

"Then put it in that salad bowl. What's left over put in a fruit jar. I'll give it to Mrs. O'Grady."

"Need a wash boiler to hold it all," was his disgusted comment when he had filled the bowl and the pint fruit jar. "No end to the damned stuff!"

Then realizing that it was his own culinary efforts he was denouncing, he added hastily, that it would be "fine for supper."

"Through? That all you're goining to eat? Guess I'd better clear up. Well, here's where newspapers beat tablecloths," as he deliberately scraped off their plates on the paper that served for a cloth.

"Oh, don't! It nauseates me—let me get away!" pushing back her chair.

"Now, what're you throwing a fit about? It's clean, isn't it? We've just been eating it—won't hurt you to see it scraped out."

But Helen, stumbling over his long robe, made her way back to the bed. Waves of nausea swept over her as she buried her face in the pillow.

"Now, what's eating you?" Warren had followed her into the bedroom.

"You needn't have scraped that out—not right on the table! I'm not finicky—but I can't help it when I'm sick. You're not clean—you never were!"

"Glad I'm not! You're so infernally clean you make everybody miserable. All this squeamishness is nothing but a pose." The door banged after him.

Trying to stifle the sobs that tore at her sore throat, for almost an hour, Helen lay there in the depths of her wretchedness.

Then she heard him at the library phone. She could not hear the words—only a deep mumble.

A moment later the door opened and he was standing by the bed.

"Just called up the club—got Louie, the head waiter. He's going to send over a tray about six-thirty. Told him about your throat. Louie's bettern'n all your dietitians—he'll fix us something you can eat."

Helen, trying not to think of the extravagance of a special tray from the club, found his hand and drew it under her wet cheek.

"And that mess out there—give it all to Mrs. O'Grady tomorrow. I'm about fed up with that, too. If she doesn't want it, tell her to chuck it out!"

Then patting her hand, his nearest approach to a caress.

"Guess I wouldn't get many medals as a chef. But never mind, Kitten, we're going to have a corking little supper. I told Louie you didn't have much appetite—and to dress up that tray with all the frills."

Dawn

Soft-bright and blurred, gray-blue of dawn
Comes creeping, creeping;
O'er mountain tops pale purple mists
Go weeping, weeping.

The blurred bright tints melt swift away,
Low winds are calling;
From steel-blue skies of earliest day
White dews are falling.

Gold of the east—rose of the west,
And long rays streaming;
The sunbeams kiss a waiting world—
A world half dreaming.

Long was the night—the aching night
When shadows threatened,
And sight grew dull, long gazing where
The dawn-star beckoned.

Perhaps 'tis thus, when Life's dark night
Fades into morning,
God's golden peace shall bring at last
A joyful dawning.

JUNE MELODY.

Evening

Twilight has come, and glimmer of pale stars
Through faintly stirring leaves that seem to sigh
And whisper to each other drowsily
As cool winds wander by.

From leafy nook and crevice hidden low
The never tiring cricket chirps and calls,
While "Katydid" repeats her sharp complaint
From ivy-covered walls.

Out where the silvered lake in moonlight dreams
And mossy pools in oaken shadow lie,
The frogs fling far upon the listening air
Their chorus wild and high.

The night owl cries from out a shadowed copse;
With side-wise swoop the noiseless bat swings low,
And, mad with joy, a wakeful mockingbird
Sings in the moon's dim glow.

The twilight deepens into mauve of dusk—
The witchery of dusk blends into night,
And white stars watch in silence o'er a world
Wrapped soft in sleep's delight.

JUNE MELODY.

A Memory

Sad Autumn winds that round me blow.
Ye sing the Summer's requiem,
And tell of coming chill of snow,
And Winter's frosty diadem .

But never can ye take from me
The mem'ry of a perfect June;
Then Nature threw away the Key,
For all her harp-strings were in tune!

LOVE AND LEARN

the service station, there was Fat Franklin filling his tanks. Lela did not see him, but Joe did, and it was worth a million dollars to observe Fat's start, his stare, the drop of his jaw.

They passed out of town, and the car swung on and on over long miles of polished boulevarded surface between a verdant panorama of field and garden and orchard, Lela manifesting her enjoyment in many ways.

"Going to the track meet tomorrow?" inquired Joe.

"I think so," Lela answered, but a bit doubtfully.

Joe's mind seized instantly upon this doubtful note. She thought so! It had not been settled definitely then, but she was depending upon Fat.

Now, it could knock an awful hole in a man's pocketbook, taking a girl to that shindig tomorrow and seeing her through on it all the way round, and Fat—well, Joe had reason to know that just now Fat was quite denuded of funds; in terser English, he was broke.

"I'm just crazy to go!" the girl confessed with shining eyes.

From under his lids Joe peered down sidewise and assayed the woman critically, then asked himself a man's question about this soft little thing. Would she, engaged to Milton Franklin, coolly abandon the possibility with her accepted lover for a sure thing trip with one who was a rank outsider so far as her real affections were concerned? The eager, wistful face gave immediate answer. Joe could not be left in doubt for a minute. "The little vamp!" he murmured under his breath. "The little salamander!"

The girl went down in his estimation. He had been reverently afraid to toch her before. Now he threw an arm around her and drew her to him. He believed that he could have kissed her, a thing he had once wanted painfully to do, but that all at once he did not care about particularly. If he had kissed her it would have been to crush his lips against hers and then fling her down like a plucked flower.

"The little vamp! Working us all for T-bones, for auto rides, for whatever she can get out of us!"

Joe saw that his love for the girl was dying—a quick and merciful death. It seemed as if she must have read his thoughts. Turning and looking up at him strangely, half frightened, she took his hand from behind her back and moved away from him along the seat. Yet after a moment her mind had fixed itself once more upon the subject of her desire.

"I want to go something painful," she reiterated, quite as if little time and no incident had intervened since her former utterance upon the subject.

"All right, we'll go, Lela—you and I," announced young Mr. Hancock with sudden resolution.

"Joe!" The girl started incredulously. "Not really?"

"Surest thing you know," declared Joe, managing a benovelent smile.

"But—but it's an awful jam getting there [illegible]

"[illegible] changed for tomorrow?" Joe called over the seat to the chauffeur.

"Nope!" answered the driver.

"Then she is!" announced Joe quickly.

Lela was breathless. "Joe!" she gasped. "It'll cost you a for-r-tune."

"Fortune's nothing," said Joe grandly, "if it's something you want to do," and he glanced into her eyes with the boldest look he had ever dared.

The girl flushed and shifted her glance. She also shifted her thought quite practically to the next problem.

"But can you get tickets? I hear they're at a premium.

"Five dollars apiece is all," said Joe loftily. "We can go that, I guess—for one day's pleasure."

Lela gazed once more at Joe in startled admiration. He was so strong and masterful. These were qualities in young Mr. Hancock she had never noticed before. Hitherto he had impressed her as a faithful, plodding sort of fellow, but there was—there was a dash to him, really.

He proved this by the way the miles were reeling off and the time ticking into hours, each a charge against his pocketbook, yet with never a hint of turning back from him. The long afternoon lengthened into dusk, and then turned in at the Mission Inn in San Marco for a long, leisurely and, to Lela, thoroughly delightful dinner. By a lingering here and detouring there Joe managed to so delay the hour of their return to Mrs. McIlheney's till it was half-past 10 o'clock, when they rolled to her door. Half-past 10, so far as Mrs. McIlheney's charges were concerned, was curfew. From that moment forward no visitors and no communication might be received. Thus was Joe's strategy revealed. By this policy of delay, although at enormous cost to himself, he had spiked Fat Franklin's guns for the day.

That gloomy individual, waiting in his car beneath the shadows of a low hanging pepper tree just across the street from Mrs. McIlheney's, eavesdropped their parting words with bitterness in his heart, yet with a sly grin upon his face because of something that he knew.

"It has been a dream, a perfect dream," declared Lela with enthusiasm.

"Nine o'clock tomorrow morning—early start," Joe warned, and at the same time thought to stimulate the eagerness of anticipation by remarking. "Plenty of fun! Plenty of time for a little drive around besides, with a sandwich and a cup of tea somewhere on the way."

"You darling!" bubbled Lela. "I'll be up with the morning glories."

There was, however, on Joe's part no feeling of vast elation over this promise for tomorrow. It was that he had won another move in a game of checkmate that was foolish because the final triumph of his rival was already certain. Joe was even not quite determined just what he would do with Lela tomorrow, just how much of the track meet, how much of all tomorrow's opportunities she would taste. He might administer some kind of lesson to her, for he thought of her now quite without love, almost without sympathy.

She did not have any affections, he had decided—only appetites—for food and for pleasures generally. She was not bad, of course, but she was just naively selfish, Joe reflected as he sauntered down to Kindred's poolroom and cigar store combined. There in the last hours there were always a few tickets to be had for any college affair, although at profiteer's prices.

But Doc Kindred shook his head tight. "Just got two in the safe, and they're sold to a fellow who is coming after them at 11 o'clock."

This announcement was a distinct shock to Joseph Hancock, the temperamental spendthrift. It put a crimp in his program at the most important point.

"And if he doesn't come?" Joe managed to inquire hopefully.

"Oh, he'll come all right. He's one of those guys that never likes to get left."

"Guess I'll stick around and see if he does," remarked Joe, as not entirely convinced and noting by the clock that it was now 10:48. "By the way, what you holding 'em at?"

"Five dollars apiece," said Kindred.

This was what Joe had expected.

"I'll take a cigar," he decided, for extravagance was fast becoming the habit with him.

He was just lighting a luxurious weed, his back to the door, when Fat came panting in.

"'Lo, Doc! I'll grab off those two tickets now."

Kindred turned to the safe, while Fat, who took no note that the back bent over the cigar lighter belonged to Joseph Hancock, [illegible] I.O.U. for $10 thereupon.

"What's this?" demanded Doc, frowning at the scrap of paper on the glass of the showcase and withdrawing the hand in which he had been extending a pair of large and gaily striped pasteboards. "I can't take no I.O.U.'s for these tickets. I got to account with cash tomorrow morning."

"Well, I guess you can put up the cash. You know I'm good. You've taken my chits times enough before," blustered Fat.

But the merchant screwed up his wizened countenance into a most stubborn expression.

"Money talks!" he remarked testily, for Doc Kindrad was another who did not like Fat.

Besides, right there stood a young man who had been inquiring for tickets who had just flung down a $10 bill in payment for a 20-cent cigar and had peeled that bill from a collection of its fellows that he extracted from his trousers pocket. As between cash and credit, Doc Kindred was all for this picture backed kind of paper. And Joseph Hancock was just now nothing slow. He grasped the situation instantly.

"Here!" he said, and skinned two tens from off his roll and tossed them on the show case. "I guess that's premium enough. I'll give you $20 for the pair, not some time, but now!" There was a most exultant emphasis on the "now." Sad though his heart might be, Joe was discovering that there was something positively exhilarating in testing the power of money.

"You're on, boy!" said Kindred, thrusting the tickets into Joe's hand with a suddenness that left the transaction instantly complete.

Fat Franklin, before he saw his face, recognized the voice of the man who had once deluged him with soup and who today, probably through a stupid accident—for he could not credit Joe with so much intelligence as to have done the thing by design—had upset some very cherished plans of his. Insulted by Kindred, whom he dared not assault, he turned to vent his rage on Joe Hancock, letting fly without a moment's hesitancy that fist he had had in pickle for him for more than six weeks now.

It was an unexpected blow, so far as Joe was concerned, but the lad blocked with his left and crossed with his right, the right which was as hard now as if he held a brick within it.

Fat Franklin experienced at first sensations of rude shock, then leaned against the counter and slid absently and limply into a sitting posture on the floor, where presently he discovered himself, with legs strangely weak and three or four fellows with cues in their unemployed hands trying to lift him by the arms.

"Wha—what happened?" he inquired dizzily.

"You stopped a fast one with your chin, I should say," volunteered one of the first-aiders; but you started the row, didn't you?"

"Row?" inquired Fat vaguely. "Why, there wasn't any row. I just knocked the tar out of a buttinski soph," remembered Fat, haltingly and painfully.

"Got your facts on wrong, Fat," cheered another of the relief party. "The soph knocked the tar out of you. He has just departed—on our advice to beat it before some conscientious cop wanders in and makes trouble out of a little difference between gentrick. You held me while he kicked me. I'll take it out on the whole class for this, the whole blithering, yawping, pick-pocket class. You see!" Turning wrathfully, he rocked and teetered into the darkness, to the accompaniment of much sophomore laughter, and with Doc Kindred still blowing smoke rings behind him.

"Odds bodikins!" murmured Joe, homeward bound, "I can feel that fat chin of his rising up on the end of my fist right now. I must have lifted him clear off the floor. Golly! I'll never forget the sensation, not if I live a hundred years, and I'm paid for the cost of those tickets already even if Fat does get around to Lela early tomorrow and lure his lady love away from me on some pretext or another."

This fear that Fat might block him somehow at the last moment tormented Joe throughout the night. Next morning he leaned back in his hired car with an air of luxurious ease, but the row of tips of some of Doc Kindred's most expensive cigars which decorated the young man's vest pocket were in reality a sort of stockade before a very anxious heart.

Yet the automobile horn had only been honked inquiringly a second time before Mrs. McIlheney's door when a bright face was framed in the attic window and a hand was daved, a hand with considerable bare arm attached, while a cheery voice called downward: "Just a minute!"

[illegible]

It was a long minute, but at length it was past, and Lela emerged from the boardinghouse door in a costume that, to her [illegible] for the day, was entirely new and evoked his admiration. It began with a cunning white beaver sport hat and one of those delightful woolly scarfs; it carried on with a green sweater and a snappy plaid skirt, and it finished up with silk stockings of a pattern so attractive that one should have paid a luxury tax just to gaze.

Now the sight of this new finery, while it admittedly enhanced the beauty of the woman's outward appearance, did not, in Joe Hancock's eyes, enhance the beauty of her soul, for he assumed, ignorantly, that Jack English and Fat Franklin must have been making her presents of clothes. He did not know that, instead, Aunt Eleanor had sold a cow. Nor did he see any more depravity in the girl's acceptance of scarfs and silk stockings than of T-bones. He only noted that this was another particular in which the wealthy could outbid the poorer wooer.

"Smashing!" he pronounced, when the girl poised for a moment on the top step, playfully spread her arms, and rotated like a fashion model.

"Did you get the tickets?" she inquired, showing all her teeth.

"Rawther-r-r-r," trilled Joe, proudly, and helped her into the automobile.

"Were they—very expensive?"

"Only ten apiece," discounted Joe with the bored air of a man to whom $10 is worth about 10 cents.

"Why-e-e-e-e!" And Lela looked at him in amazement, but mingled again with admiration.

"Any trouble getting them?"

"Not to speak of," Joe dissembled, with a play upon his words.

"Well, wasn't that just too lovely? It seems as if everything is turning out wonderfully for us, doesn't it?"

"For us!" Joseph Hancock, grim in his scared heart, continuing to study this little type here beside him as if he were a scientist and she were some very gaudy little new species of butterfly, noticed that she said, "for us," and speculated sardonically upon just what she might mean by those two last words.

"Seen much of Franklin lately?" he in

DISCOVERY AND INVENTION

BY [illegible]

POWER DIRECT FROM THE EARTH

NEW sources of power, and new ways of applying known forms of energy, are engaging the attention of many investigators. Power in abundance and at a low cost is their objective. Some are endeavoring to derive this power from the atmosphere, in which case it would be electrical energy.

It is well known that there is electricity in the atmosphere and that it varies in its potential, or force, under different conditions and at different altitudes. Inventors have made use of kites, balloons and towers for the purposes of drawing upon this store of electricity. One device tested was a captive balloon trailing a great net aerial for the collection of electricity, to be conveyed to a ground station by conductors. A variation of this that has been suggested is a similar aerial held aloft on towers a thousand feet high. Such devices are said to fail because there is danger, at times, of too powerful a current of static electricity being brought down by the conductors. One inventor believes that he can overcome this difficulty.

Other experimenters are intent upon devising instruments to derive power from off the earth to be operated at its surface.

Many who have followed the trend of modern scientific research are strongly of the belief that energy for the work of the world will be derived by the use of methods as yet unknown. All forms of energy are derived from the sun, transmitted by waves in the ether, as are light waves, but of different wave length. The electricity in the atmosphere is so derived, being atmospheric only in the sense that it is accumulated in the atmosphere in some similitude to the manner in which a charge is accumulated by a battery.

It is almost safe to predict that the great problem of cheaper and more abundant power will be solved. Much has been accomplished that was formerly thought to be beyond the capacity of man to achieve. When the problem is solved, if it ever is, it will not have been the work of one experimenter. No great discovery or invention ever is. The inventor derives help, consciously and unconsciously, from his predecessors and contemporaries.

CAN MAN BECOME A RAINMAKER?

Theories have long been held that the detonation of cannon in battle have been accompanied or followed by rain. The defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo has been attributed to the effects of the rainstorm which followed the antecedent battle of Ligny. Claims have been made also that rain was frequently produced at the front during the World War at times when barometric changes were not indicated. As yet no scientific determinations have been made in proof of the theory. All instances cited may have been non sequitors.

Prof. T. O'Connor Sloan has a lengthy dissertation in a recent issue of Science and Invention, on the subject of the production of rain and the dissipation of fog artificially. A method tested in Australia, under government auspices, was that of releasing from a large number of captive balloons, at an elevation of several thousand feet, heavy charges of electricity conveyed to the balloons by conductors. Electric discharges are said to be conducive to the condensation of moisture in the atmosphere; but if no water vapor is present, naturally no effect is produced. To make such a plan effective, even if the method is correct in principle, it would be necessary to discover a method of determining beforehand that moisture was present in the atmosphere.

Several other methods have been advocated. One inventor suggests sending up a powerful X-Ray machine attached to a balloon and to be made operative by the metal surface of the balloon charged to a potential of 3000 volts of electricity.

According to physicists there is always dust in the atmosphere, and the dust particles form nuclei for the formation of cloud and fog vesicles. If these vesicles with their water content come into contact with a body of saturated air, rain will ensue. To supply a possible deficiency of dust as nuclei, the suggestion has been made to disperse dust particles in the atmosphere. Based on the fact that a lowering of temperature causes condensation of moisture, the cooling of upper strata of the atmosphere with liqudi air discharged from balloons has been seriously advocated. The Hatfield rain-maker consists of an elevated tank in which chemicals are burned.

All these devices are open to the same objection. Unless there is moisture present, efforts to produce rain will prove futile.

The dissipation of fog is a more tangible problem. A London fog is so tangible that it can be felt as well as seen. Any fog that is a source of danger or inconvenience is close to the surface of the sea or ground. Sir Oliver Lodge and others are said to advocate a discharge of electricity from antennae held aloft by high towers. Such a device is impractical because of its lack of mobility. A machine for discharging hot air from a number of tubes direct into a heavy fog is reported to have been tested with some results. Its appearance suggests a new type of rapid fire gun. Should an inventor devise a successful method of dissipating the fogs of London, he would achieve fame, be knighted, or made a lord, and held in grateful memory by posterity.

CAN THE BLIND BE MADE TO SEE?

Within recent years astounding advances have bean made in surgery, and other important operations are being undertaken with great promise of ultimate success.

One of these undertakings is the transplanting of human eyes. Investigators have succeeded in transplanting eyes in fish, frogs and rats, which have given evidence that the transplanted organ functions properly. Early experiments were not successful. Failure was due to the fact that nerve fibers were destroyed by being stitched together with silk. This jointure of the nerve ends of the transplanted eye and the stem of the optic nerve of the subject being operated upon is now accomplished by simply bringing them into close union and keeping the eyes of the subjects bandaged for a short period. Experiments are to be continued with larger animals.

Removal of the lens of the eye for the purpose of restoring sight is another operation which has been attempted recently. Vision is said to be possible with the lens removed on the principle that very good pictures can be produced by the use of what is termed a pin-hole camera. The vision so procured is indistinct but positive, and brings the subject to an appreciable degree into the world of light.

There is also hope for the man with one sightless eye. Instead of trying to improve his appearance by having an immovable glass eye, which serves imperfectly as a counterfeit presentment of an organ with vision, he can be equipped with a mobile artificial eye which moves in unison with its normal companion. This is accomplished by introducing into the socket of the defective eye after its removal, a piece of cartilage taken from a rib of the patient. To this cartilage is attached the front of the glass eye and the tendons rigidly sewed to the cartilaginous mass. The muscles of control are tightened up or loosened, as may be required until proper adjustment is obtained. As a result the glass eye is in the socket to stay as the cartilage is fed by the blood stream and becomes a permanent part of the anatomy of the subject. With an artificial eye of the correct shape and color, moving in synchronism wih the other eye, the deception is said to be complete.

CLOSE APPROACH OF MARS

To use a theatrical phrase, the planet Mars will soon come into the limelight by a closer approach to the earth than it has made for a long time. Next year the space between the two planets will measure only 35,000,000 miles—not a great distance relatively speaking. This will be near enough for the Martians to give earth-dwellers a salute as they pass by, according to Marconi, who was convinced that once before they sent wireless signals through the intervening space. As Mars is the older planet, the Martians, if such a people exist, are doubtless as far advanced as humans in the sciences, and know the art of sending messages through the ether.

The habitability of the little red planet has long been a subject of philosophical speculation. Astro-physicists claim that enough has been learned to place Jupiter, Saturn and Venus in the improbable class, and that Uranus and Neptune are at distances too remote from the earth to be available for study. All the more interest attaches to Mars because of its availability as a subject for investigation.

Astronomical data show that the earth and Mars resemble each other to a remarkable degree. The terrestrial day consists of 23 hours and 56 minutes, that of Mars of 24 hours, 37 minutes and 22.1 seconds. Owing to the slight differenco in the inclinations of the axes of the two planets a marked similarity exists also in the length of summer and winter days in respect to their daylight hours. Due to the fact that Mars, because of its greater [illegible] its revolution around the sun than [illegible] earth, the Martian year is of longer duration, consisting of 687 days. As upon the earth, winter and summer appear alternately in the northern and southern hemisphere, and the extent of the torrid, temperate and frigid zones are comparatively the same on both planets. According to the late Prof. Percival Lowell, who made a far more extensive observation of Mars than any other astronomer, the Martian spring consists of 199 days, summer of 183 days, autumn of 147 days and winter of 158 days, from which it will be seen that the proportions are very nearly the same as those of the terrestrial seasons.

OTHER STRIKING ANALOGIES

Some noteworthy resemblances are also presented as regards physical conditions. That Mars has an atmosphere is proven by the fact that it has a twilight arc produced by the refraction of light at the edges of the planet; and that there is moisture present is proven by the fact that there are great snow-caps at the poles in winter, which thaw in summer.

Is there life there? That is the great question. Air and water are the prime requisites of vegetable and animal life according to human knowledge, and they being present were thought by Lowell to warrant the assumption that life exists. There are no seas, but there is seemingly evidence that the water produced by the melting of the snowcaps at the poles is conveyed through the arid surface of the planet by canals. The snow areas are of great extent in winter, and are observed to contract with the approach of spring, and to become surrounded by what various tests are said to have been conclusively proven to be water. There are no permanent seas, as has been sand, and no rivers. Adherents of the Lowell theory believe that the water resulting from the melting of the snowcaps is conducted from both poles by a network of artificial channels known as the Schiaparelli canals.

Characteristics of these canals are cited in proof that they are not natural water courses but were constructed for purposes of water supply. They are described as mathematically uniform and definitely related to each other.

Altogether the system of canals is so comprehensive and of such design as to suggest that they were built for the irrigation of the entire planet from the only sources of water supply available. Support to this theory is given by the fact that the network of lines shows seasonal changes. During the winter months they become extremely faint, many of them invisible, whereas after the melting of the snowcaps, they become plainly marked, of greater width, and are successively of blue-green and green color as the summer advances, and of a reddish-ochre or russet color with the approach of autumn. Some of the lines in summer are as much as eighty miles wide by actual measurement. A deduction from all this is that what is plainly seen through the telescope is a plexus of bands of growing vegetation. Apart from the consideration of the canal system furnishing evidences of intelligent beings existing on the planet the seasonal growth of vegetation is regarded as of itself affording a condition for the existence of organic life. What of the nature of the Martians? That is only a subject for conjecture. They are conceived of having big lungs on account of of the rarity of the atmosphere, and of being spindle-legged for the reason that the attraction of gravitation being less on Mars than on the earth, their bodies would require less support than the bodies of humans, and of possessing great agility for the same reason. As the Martians must of necessity have their own standards of beauty, the females of the species are doubtless as alluring to the other sex as here, doll themselvs up and follow the fashions even to such absurdities as rolling "them" down.

THE MAN KILLER

didn't catch his name," said Mrs. Jimmie to fill the pause.

"He is a celebrated criminologist," said the flash of an eye between those two. Parr, yawning. He was certain he caught these two.

Just then the door opened, and Oliver came in. In one hand he carried a huge wooden maul, and in the other a horseshoe—the horseshoe—with four bent nails protruding. Without a word to anyone, without even a glance about, he set the maul down in the middle of the room. Gingerly [illegible] Armiston [illegible] explored a vest pocket and produced a piece of tissue paper from which he extracted the sliver he had so kindly withdrawn from poor Cecil's suffering thumb; this he deposited beside the horseshoe. Then he selected a seat on one of the crated boxes, and languidly prepared a cigarette. [Balzac somewhere spoke of a painter who could introduce an ordinary broomstick into a scene in such a manner as to freeze the beholder with horror.] The wooden maul, teetering gently on its rounded edge out there in the middle of this disordered room, was the focus of glazed stares.

Struthers, who had sprung to his feet, halted in midsentence, mouth open. The woman now finally applied a match to her cigarette, and threw back her head to blow the first puff into the air. As she did so, her gleaming eyes under half closed lashes sought the gaunt Cecil at the French window. Parr, taking his cue from Oliver, held himself in easy attitude, ready for instant action.

The tension was broken by a stifled cry from the window. With one movement the giant Cecil, his horselike face livid, thrust open the glass leaves and plunged out in headlong flight. Armiston raised a quick hand to check Parr. All turned. There was a moment's silence, followed by a slow, heavy tread on the portico without. It was Cecil returning. He was half crouching, his hands above his head; he backed through the window into the room, his wide eyes staring with birdlike fascination down the shiny muzzle of a revolver held level by Zabriskie, who advanced deliberately step by step. With one hand Zabriskie, still holding the ashen Cecil with his hawk eye, produced clinking handcuffs from a pocket; still threatening with his weapon, he snapped first one, then the other into place. The manacled man, covering his face with his hands and sobbing convulsively, fell in a heap on the floor. Zabriskie nodded to Oliver.

"There you be, gol durn you! I didn't believe you. I swear I took you for another nut." The sheriff, with a contemptuous sneer, prodded the groveling figure on the floor. "You ain't much of a horseshoer, be you?"

The woman studied the slender thread of smoke rising from her cigarette; her eyes traveled moodily from one to another, till, with shrinking disgust, they finally reached the blubbering giant by the window. Struthers was demanding incoherently—"What—Who—Why—This is—" when Parr angrily waved him to be silent, then turned on Oliver. Oliver reached over to the billiard table and held up his sliver.

"That sliver," he explained. "The one I extracted from the Honorable Cecil's thumb," he added unpleasantly.

"Well! What about it?" snapped Parr.

"It was painted red, man! The gate pole was white."

"Well! Well!" snarled Parr.

"I looked for something red," said Oliver. "I found it. There it is! That maul! Damn him! he nailed the horseshoe to it—and deliberately brained the poor devil with it, in cold blood. Then he tacked the horseshoe back into place! High Gun wasn't the man killer! There's your man killer—that snivelling wretch in the corner." Oliver made an effort to control himself. "If you don't believe me," he cried, "look at that maul. You can see the nail holes—even if he did try to batter them out."

A shriek came from the corner.

"It was that woman—she made me do it—she hypnotized me!"

A ghastly silence followed this outburst. Mrs. Jimmie rose quietly. With fingers that did not tremble, she extinguished the live coal of her cigarette in the ashes of the tray beside her. This done to her satisfaction, she daintily brushed her hands and looked expectantly at Parr. Parr gave her credit for nerve. She could gaze without a tremor at the hideous weapon that had reduced the stalwart man to a blubbering confession.

"Well, Mr. Commissioner," she said in level tones, "what are we waiting for? Why prolong it?"

Zabriskie drew the abominable Cecil to his feet, and led him down the room. As he passed the woman the man turned on her one beseeching look. She, drawing back as if afraid her garments would touch him, gave him back a glance of unutterable disgust. It was not the foul murder of her husband, for which she must now stand accused before a court of justice, that daunted her; it was the shaming realization that one of her blood had been brought to the mire with such a yellow cur as the Honorable Cecil.

CHAPTER I

[illegible]

I WON'T go, dad," said Aimee desperately, "and I won't!"

"My answer, my dear Aimee," said Lord Scroope firmly yet benignantly, "is that you must go, and you shall!"

"A month of Aunt Erythea," said Aimee in stifled tones, "would kill me. Why are these things always piled on me? I'm fed up!"

The Very Rev. Viscount Scroope, archdeacon, and incumbent of the living of Scroope Magna, gazed dreamily over his daughter's head without appearing to hear her. A sunbeam filtered through the diamond panes, illuming his silver hair and finely-cut features. It was as though the sunbeam said: "Behold a saint; here is one who hears and speaks no evil." A saint Lord Scroope undoubtedly was; calm, benign, and immovable as granite.

"My dear child," he said gently, "let us admit the cold light of reason. You can have no genuine objection to your Aunt Erythea, for you have never set eyes on her since you were 3 years old. She has only recently returned from Florence, to take up residence at Jervaulx.

"Under her admirable rule," continued Lord Scroope with inexpressible satisfaction, "Jervaulx Abbey is a well-appointed and strictly-ordered house. Laxity and indiscipline have no place there. Her Flannel Fund and her management of the reading-room are all I could desire. It is an atmosphere which will correct, I hope, the influence of that deplorable school from which we have removed you. You must go. Aunt Erythea desires that you shall go. And that, as you will realise when you make her acquaintance, is final."

The Hon. Aimee Scroope's vividly lovely face became still more mutinous and desperate.

"And do not suppose that you will lack youthful society," added Lord Scroope, smiling. "Your cousin, Alexander Lambe, is at Jervaulx. A little older than yourself, doubtless, but an excellent companion for you. He has relinquished at last his missionary work at Manchuria, which somewhat shattered his health, and has taken up this curacy under his aunt's wing. A young man wholly devoted to good work, and with unexceptionable connections, he will doubtless attain that eminence which his aunt would wish for him."

Aimee looked at her father with intense suspicion. Then she turned to the photograph of a young man in a clerical collar; the face was pleasant but somewhat serious, with large, frank, round eyes. The face that Aimee made at it was hideous.

"Go and tell your maid to pack, dear child," said Lord Scroope gently, patting her head. Aimee was 20 years of age, and stood five feet six, but her father contrived to have the air of patting somebody about three feet high. "The car will be ready for you at 3 o'clock precisely."

Aimee said something inarticulate, and made a beeline for a rose-pink boudoir where Lady Scroope, blonde, petite and wholly charming, was buttoning her gloves. Amid pink surroundings, Lady Scroope looked little older than her daughter.

"Mummy," said Aimee forcibly, "you'll have to throw me a rope. I have simply got to be rescued from this awful visit!" She expounded with extreme rapidity and terror her views on Jervaulx, Lady Erythea Lambe, and Alexander.

Lady Scroope twinkled, and was so exasperating as to laugh. She put her hands affectionately on her daughter's shoulders.

"Sorry Aimee," she said; "there is, as you would say, nothing doing. You will have to go. I can't have your dear father worried any more. You are the sacrifice. There is only room for one rebel in this family, and that, of course, is myself.

"I don't think," she added pensively, "there's any cause for real alarm about Alexander Lambe. Of course, we know what Aunt Erythea is in these matters. But I doubt if your father really approves of priests marrying at all. In his heart he considers himself rather immoral for having married me. But it's so good for the darling, and he doesn't really regret it on week-days."

"It's all very well for you," mourned Aimee, "but—"

"I'm really sorry, dear. I am going to the Milne-Temples and elsewhere for a few weeks, but when I come back I will make it up to you. These are the little crosses you have to bear."

She kissed her daughter, and hurried down to the car, which was piled with a colossal load of luggage. Lord Scroope was at the door, and his wife's parting embrace ignored the footman and the chauffeur.

"Good-by, Antony, dearest," she said fondly. "I've told Parkes to remember your hot-water bottle, and if she doesn't she'll hear from me! Write to me every day."

The car whirled her away, and Lord Scroope followed it with dreamily adoring eyes. Aimee, who had watched the pair with a sort of exasperated affection, turned into the morning-room.

"What on earth," she murmured, "is one to do with people like that?"

She encountered her guest and cousin. Georgina Berners, 23, plump and placid, dressed in a style that suggested enforced economy. Miss Berners was looking wistful.

"Why, Georgie," said Aimee, encircling her ample waist, "have you the hump, too? Let's be miserable together."

"It has been lovely here at Scroope," sighed Georgina, "and you are such a dear. I've nothing to go back to but Uncle Joseph, who doesn't think about anything but biology, and scarcely remembers I exist—though he is quite kind, of course. It will be awful after this."

"I've never met your Uncle Joseph," said Aimee, "but I'm certain he's nothing to my Aunt Erythea and Jervaulx."

She broke into a frenzied and vivid word-picture of all that awaited her.

"A place something between a cathedral and a barrack, and a fearful sort of Roman matron with a nose like the Duke of Wellington's—I've never seen aunt's nose, but it's certainly like that—and to be drilled into flirting decorously with an owl-faced curate who, some day, they say, will probably be a bishop—"

Georgina was intensely shocked.

"Aimee, you really are extraordinary! Many people would be too glad to be in your shoes. A long visit to a charming old place—Jervaulx, they say, is even more old-world than Scroope—everything orderly, romantic, peaceful—"

"Moldy!" interrupted Aimee.

"And luxurious. Lady Erythea, everyone says, is a splendid manager. And your cousin—a nice, sensible young man. I've seen his photograph. His face—"

"It's the face," said Aimee fiercely, "of a cold-boiled codfish! I've seen it—I've seen it! It made me feel as if my boots were full of water!"

"Aimee!" said Georgina plaintively. "You appal me!"

"Good thing! Then you know how I feel!" retorted Aimee pertly. "The whole thing appals me. These curates! I seem to live in a sort of cloud of them. Yes, I know. We have to have them—they're excellent men, no doubt—do lots of good. But I'm fed up with them! Alexander is the limit!"

Aimee paused for breath.

"He's a frump!" she said, with extraordinary vehemence.

"He is good!" insisted Georgina. "That is a good man's face, if ever I saw one. You're making a big mistake. You will be sorry when you see him."

"I know that. I shall shed tears."

"I mean, that you will regret all this nonsense. And," added Georgina, with a rapt expression on her plump features, "he will fall in love with you, Aimee. I'm sure of it! And when that happens—

Aimee withdrew her arm from Georgina's waist as if she had been stung.

"You, too!" she said bitterly.

"Well, don't you want someone to fall in love with you? Aimee—"

"Oh, you make me sick!" said the frenzied Aimee. "It's a disease with you! Sentiment revolts me. Men—"

"What do you know about men?"

"I'd give the world to meet men who didn't talk rot. I'd almost respect him. As for this maundering about love—"

"Aimee," said Georgina almost tearfully, "your very name means 'Beloved'!"

"Oh, rats!" said Aimee furiously, and fled from the room.

CHAPTER II

ESCAPE

In the deepest depression, Aimee wandered down the park avenue towards the highroad. The ivied towers of Scroope loomed above blossoming trees, the antlers of the deer shone a rich chestnut, there was an infinite merriment in the spring sunshine that found an echo in Aimee's heart. She passed through the lodge gates and turned the corner of the road.

There Aimee halted, and considered the perversity of Fate. And close beside her barked a sharp explosion, with a flash of yellow flame and a whiff of pungent smoke. And a clear voice exclaimed:

"Hell!"

"Just what I was thinking!" said Aimee.

A young man, who was tinkering a motorcycle, whence came the explosion, looked up and startled, and removed his cap.

"Oh! I'm sorry!" he said. "I didn't know there was anyone around."

They looked at each other, and both laughed. It was impossible to look at the stranger and fail to laugh. Not in derision, but joyously, spontaneously, as one laughs when the breeze heels the boat, or when a puppy dog falls head over tail.

When the motorcyclist grinned his teeth were so white thatthey gave the effect of a flash. His fair and rather tousled hair caught the sun. His head looked as if it might be rammed through a door, without damaging anything except the door-panel. He was big built, and about 25, but his bright blue eyes might have belonged to a boy of 16. He wore dusty blue overalls.

"That's better!" he said approvingly, as Aimee laughed again. "You were looking as if you felt pretty low."

"I was. Everybody has been appalling!"

"Folks picking on you—eh?" asked the stranger sympathetically.

"Talking sentiment till I feel sticky all over."

The stranger's face fell.

"Gee! That's too bad! Sentiment, eh?" He made a gesture as if warding off invisible assailants. "Sentiment is poison ivy! It gives me that tired feeling. Madam, accept my sympathy."

In the space of a moment they felt as though they had known each other for years.

"Do you live anywhere about here?" said Aimee. "I seem to have seen—"

"Here? About 7000 miles west-by-south of here!" said the stranger, laughing. "Cobalt, Arrapahoe county. Citizen of the world—answer to the name of 'Billy.' And I'm here in England," he added, laying a loving hand on the tank of the motorcycle—"to sell this."

"Weird-looking thing!" said Aimee, with interest, for the cycle's engine was of a remarkable shape, and it had a tangle of tubes in place of a carburetor. "Yours?"

"Mine!" said the stranger joyously "Alone I did it. I hold the patent. Every other machine on the road is dead as Stephenson's 'Rocket.' It's a Sanakatowzer—the Flying Sphinx!"

"Ripping name. Can it fly?"

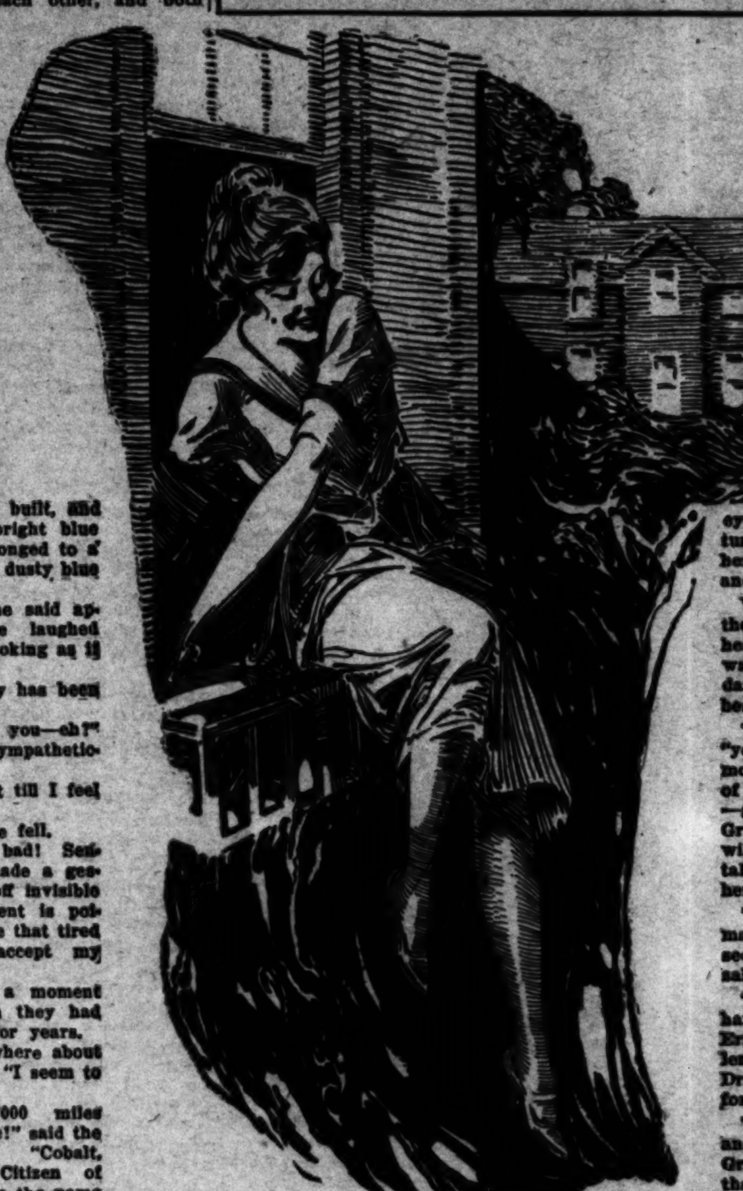
"Can it fly! It devours space like the sunbeams lick up the mists of the mornin'! And no more noise than a baby's whisper.

"Around the world in thirty winks
When once astride the Flying Sphinx!

"It's got Sinbad's Carpet an' the Seven-league Boots guessing. There's a little gadget or two I've to straighten out yet." He threw a leg over the saddle. "Like a spin up the road? Jump up behind!"

Aimee immediately perched herself on the carrier. There was a whirlwind charm about the stranger that carried her away. The next moment the Flying Sphinx did the same. It glided forward and shot along the road with a faint sound like the buzz of a honey-bee. The wind whistled past Aimee's ears. To keep her seat she was obliged to grab Billy suddenly around the waist.

"Don't mind if I hold you?" she gasped.



She swung herself out on the sill, and as noiselessly as any member of the feline tribe, she dropped upon the soft soil of the garden plot.

"Shucks!" said Billy, impatiently. "I don't care how you hold me, s'long's you don't hit the grit!"

They breasted the crest of the rise.

"Hang tight now!" he cried. "We'll let her out!"

The Sphinx went forward with the whirr of a shell. She peeled the roadway behind her like a running tape. Aimee felt the roar of the wind rise to a scream. Billy leaned lightly forward toward the handle-bars, cool, effortless, efficient. His cap was stuffed into his overalls, his yellow hair flickered like a living sun ray.

Aimee was only conscious of being whirled gloriously through space, when the Sphinx, after a two-mile loop, slid back to the spot whence she had started. Aimee sprang from the carrier.

"Oh, thank you!" she gasped. "That was too good to be true!"

The cyclist, without dismounting, looked at her glowing face and frank eyes.

"I wish there were more like you," he said, laughing. "Tell 'em—whoever they are—to can the sentiment. S'long, an' good luck to you!"

He raised his cap, and next moment the Sphinx whirred him away in a cloud of golden dust. Aimee followed him with her eyes till he was around the bend, then she turned back into the park. It seemed to her that the sunlight had become less vivid and the sky paler.

Very slowly, Aimee made her way back to the portals of Scroope Towers, where the heavy family car, laden with luggage, stood waiting. Georgina was on the steps, abundantly wrapped up, and Lord Scroope stood beside her.

"My dearest Aimee," he said chidingly, "you will keep your appointments much more strictly, believe me, under the wing of Aunt Erythea. Here is your cloak, dear—get in. Your luggage is at the back. Grundle," he said, to the chauffeur, "you will drop Miss Berners at the station and take Miss Aimee on to Jervaulx, returning here direct."

The chauffeur, who was a middle-aged man with a singularly wooden expression, seemed to be making a mental effort. He saluted, staring straight before him.

"Good-by Georgina! Aimee, I expect to have the best accounts of you from Aunt Erythea," said Lord Scroope, more benevolently. "Bless you, my child; bless you! Drive on, Grundle. What are you waiting for?"

The car meandered out of Scroope Park and turned northward along the main road. Grundle was never allowed to drive faster than fifteen miles per hour, nor had he the slightest ambition to do so. The eight-mile run to the little station of Burnt Ash was covered in silence, save for the wheezing of the ancient car. Georgina was in low spirits. Aimee throughout had been seething with an enormously increased sense of mutiny, and, as they neared the station, she exploded.

"I can't stand it, Georgie!"

"I wish I were Aimee Scroope, and on mournfully.

"Eh?"

"I wish I were Aimee Scroopje, and on my way to Jervaulx Abbey. That's all."

Aimee started slightly. An extraordinary impish expression came into her eyes. Georgina, who knew the sign of old, looked at her nervously.

"You are!" said Aimee, in a voice of unlooked for decision.

"What on earth do you mean?"

Aimee gripped her by the arm, and replied, in a low voice that bubbled with excitement.

"My dear, fat cousin, your full name, as I remember, is Georgina Amy Scroope Berners! Lop off the superfluous head and tail, and there you are—Amy Scroope. Near enough for anyone. You are going to Jervaulx instead of me! Aunt Erythea has never seen me, nor has Alexander Lambe. And neither of them knows you from Adam—I mean Eve! You'll suit them down to the ground!"

Georgina looked at her with dawning terror.

"It is a gorgeous arangement!" exclaimed Aimee, tightening her grip on her cousin's arm. "And nothing easier. You'll have the mouldy house, and aunt, and the mushroom-faced curate all to yourself. You'll stew in sentiment and good work. There is no difficulty. Uncle Joseph will never miss you—leave me to fix that up. Grundle will deliver you at Jervaulx; he's a perfect super-idiot and has probably forgotten which of us is to go there, if we didn't tell him. He never talks, either. As for me, I shall go to Seabridge, or on a walking tour—or anything I choose!"

"Aimee, are you mad?"

"It is one of the sanest moments of my life!" retorted Aimee; and, leaning over the back, she tore the tag-labels off her luggage and Georgina's and scattered them on the road. "You can take my things with you!"

"If you think for a moment I'd have anything to do with such a business—"

A fiendish expression came over Aimee's features. She gripped her cousin's arms again.

"If you don't," she hissed, "I'll tell everybody about you and Aloysius Blennerhassett getting lost at the ruri-decanal picnic!"

At this monstrous accusation, Georgina blushed scarlet. The mildest peccadillo in a blameless life, the memory of the incident in question always filled her with alarm; Aimee had held it over her head before.

"I won't listen to another word!" she gasped.

"You needn't. It is the time for deeds!" Aimee seized a small square box from among the luggage and thumped the chauffeur on the back. "Grundle, stop here! I have only a bag, I'll walk up to the station approach. Take Miss Berners on to Jervaulx. And hurry—she is behind time already!"

Grundle stopped the car mechanically, and Aimee was on the road in a twinkling. A faintly bewildered expression passed over the chauffeur's face, as though he were trying to arrange his ideas. He rubbed his ear for a moment, then saluted and let in the clutch.

Georgina, who had risen with the intention of escaping from the car, lost her balance and collapsed in a slightly undignified manner on the seat.

She struggled up and turned a flushed face towards her cousin.

"Stop! Stop!" she cried, in an agonized voice. "Aimee—"

"Good-by, dear!" said Aimee, waving her handkerchief. "Don't get lost with Alexander!"

The car bore the speechless and gesticulating Georgina out of sight around the bend. Aimee sat down on her box, buried her face in her hands, and dissolved into such unfeeling laughter that a pair of thrushes and a chaffinch fled from the hedge in indignation and alarm.

. . . .

Onward through the green lanes and over the county border the car carried a limp and nerveless Georgnia. Consternation had given away to numb despair.

Three times in twelve miles she had vainly besought the chauffeur to return to Scroope Towers. There was no getting any such idea through even the outer layers of Grundle's skull. He had his orders from headquarters. As well attempt to turn the gulf stream from its course. One of the young ladies, he knew, had to be delivered at Jervaulx. And that one, obviously, was Georgina.

Moreover, it was impossible to explain anything to Grundle—even supposing he could understand—without betraying Aimee. Not that Grundle was a gossiper, even in the servants' hall; but still, the leading motive in Georgina's life was an intense affection and loyalty for Aimee. To get anyone into trouble, most of all her cousin, was an action foreign to the placid girl's nature.

"What shall I do?" she thought. "What am I to say to Lady Erythea? There'll be a fearful row!"

Georgina racked her brains for a way out of the difficulty. There seemed to be none. She lay back exhausted. And so perverse is even the purest of human minds that a faint suggestion crept into Georgina's—a little whisper, as it were, in that blameless ear—that it would be peculiarly delightful if she could fill the role that Aimee had mapped out for her.

Georgina started, and thrust the idea from her with horrified self-reproach. Again she sought for an explanation—a true one—which would save Aimee's face. By the time she had considered and rejected half a dozen, finally deciding on one that she thought might do, the car had covered the thirty miles and was threading through the park road of Jervaulx.

Jervaulx Abbey, a fine old early Tudor house, loomed above shaven lawns and immemorial yew trees. Before the Reformation, Jervaulx had been a foundation of the Cistercians; since then the haughty noble, plumed and booted, and spurred, held sway in its paneled galleries, the cavalier had roystered there; during the Regency it was a noted haunt of Alvanley's party. Under the care of the present-day Lambes a cloistral air seemed to have descended upon it; Jervaulx had recovered its early monastic calm.

Any sense of peace that Georgina might have derived from it was driven out by sheer panic as she stumbled out of the car at the main entrance and faced a gaunt and majestic lady in gray silk who came down the steps.

"And so, my dear Aimee," said Lady Erythea, in a large and informative voice, "you arrive at last. Welcome!"

Georgina faltered. Everything she had intended to say was driven out of her head. Aimee had been prophetic—Aunt Erythea was very like the Duke of Wellington.

"Lady Erythea," she said faintly, "I—I—"

The chatelaine of Jervaulx suddenly placed a hand on each of Georgina's shoulders, and kissed her frostily.

"Both in manner and in appearance," she said, regarding Georgina with grim approval, "you are widely different from what I was led to expect. You remind me, indeed, of your admirable father."

"Lady Erythea!" gasped Georgina, as two menservants came to unload the luggage. "There is—there is a mistake! May I—"

"The modern tendency of the young to enunciate indistinctly," said Lady Erythea, producing an ear trumpet, "always annoys me. Say what you have to say clearly."

Georgina had not realized that Lady Erythea was extremely deaf.

"There is something I have to explain," she bawled hoarsely into the ear trumpet. "P-please can I see you alone?"

"Ah!" said Lady Erythea vaguely. "I am pleased that you look forward so much to your visit. No, you need not fear being alone. Here is your cousin," she added, as a young man in a clerical collar came out upon the steps. "Alexander, your Cousin Aimee."

Georgina hoped she might sink into the ground. She turned a pale and timid face to the stranger. The Rev. and Hon. Alexander Lambe bowed.

Alexander was large and well, though somewhat loosely, built. Aimee's epithet, "owl-faced," was hardly fair. Certainly his clean-shaven face was a little serious, and his eyes large and round, but very kindly.

"Welcome to Jervaulx, Cousin Aimee," he said.

A sudden interest and sympathy quickened in the large eyes as they rested on Georgina's face. And the panic-stricken girl's fear died within her. Mr. Alexander Lambe looked so cool and protective and dependable.

"Escort your cousin to the morning-room, Alexander," said Lady Erythea authoritatively, "and offer her refreshment after her drive."

Mr. Alexander Lambe, with a smile and an old-fashioned gesture, offered his arm. Customs at Jervaulx appeared to date from the year 1830. Georgina had never had an arm offered her before. It was impossible to do anything but accept it."

She took the arm dazedly, and they [illegible] mutual sympathy, had [illegible] between them. Books can be very [illegible] times.

Lady Erythea regarded them with a look of commanding approval. She followed them majestically up the steps.

"This," proclaimed Lady Erythea's erect and overwhelming back, "is as I ordained it from the beginning."

CHAPTER III

RE-ENTER BILLY

Aimee tramped along the broad highway, whistling. At Scroope, much more at Jervaulx, one was not allowed to whistle. Ever and anon she stopped whistling to laugh.

Aimee had dropped the square box into a quarry pit an hour before and continued on her way unburdened. She had had thoughts of leaving it at the station cloakroom, but decided to avoid the station altogether. This little branch line, in any case, was of no use to her; there was a main line four miles distant that led to the coast, and thither she was wending. The idea of finding lodgings at Seabridge appealed to her. She had funds enough. A month's pocket money was in her purse, and Lady Scroope had been liberal on her departure.

"What a row there'll be!" chuckled Aimee, "if Georgie doesn't play up! I don't care. I gave them my ultimatum. They can't hang me. I've been very patient with them all. One must make a stand sometime or other. Who does my life belong to," demanded Aimee, never a purist in grammar, "if not to me?"

She flung her arms wide, as if demanding an answer from the sky and the rustling trees. Aimee laughed again and quickened her step.

"They've brought it on themselves—all of them! That's what I'll tell 'em when the time comes. It's an age of revolution. Dad said so the other day. And I'm modern, too. Nothing fusty about me!"

The jingle of harness was heard, and a carrier's covered van, traveling at the slow jog-trot that carriers affect, overtook her. The driver was sitting half-asleep on the box. As the van passed Aimee, she saw that the tailboard was vacant.

Always an opportunist, Aimee did another of those things which are not done by nieces of the Lambe family. She ran three steps, caught the chain, and swung herself nimbly on to the tailboard. The tarpaulin curtains were drawn, the driver was blissfully unconscious that the had picked up a passenger. Aimee leaned back and swung her legs. The free ride seemed to round off the whole situation. It was an omen. Jervaulx was as far away as the planet Mars.

Consequences, penalties, the buffeting of Fate, either for herself or Georgina, Aimee resolutely and gleefully thrust from her mind. They were too complicated to dwell upon. The joy of living filled her—the sense of freedom was in her blood.

The world was fair, the jolly sun was shining with a friendliness she had never known before. And yet Aimee felt vaguely that there was something lacking. She closed her eyes and fell into a reverie. A memory had intervened, and a little doubt crept in. Was it all going to be as joyous as she expected? What was the basic motive that had led her to abandon Georgina?

A faint sound was borne upon the breeze, a noise that attuned itself curiously to Aimee's thoughts. It was like the buzz of a homing bee. She looked up, and saw a motorcycle speeding along the road with a smear of following dust behind it like the tail of a comet. The road had narrowed, the van blocked the way, the cyclist sounded his horn, but had to slow down right behind the tailboard. Instantly Aimee recognized the Flying Sphinx, and became aware of a laughing face looking up at hers, and a set of very white teeth.

"Why, it's Billy!" she cried spontaneously.

"Hello, old chap!" cried the cyclist. "Do you call that rapid transit?"

The van gave a jerk, nearly flinging Aimee off. She let go the chain, and landed on her feet on the road with a little stagger. Billy shut off his machine and braked—they found themselves facing each other and smiling. Billy was bareheaded, his fair hair sticking up at the crown in a little tuft that blew about in the wind.

"Where were you making for?" he said.

"The Unemployment Bureau!" retorted Aimee flippantly.

Billy's face expressed concern.

"I suppose you're guying me. You don't mean you've lost your job?"

"Job?" Aimee bubbled with amusement. "Well, I had a job all ready for me this
